Auto Fee Drops From $2.50 To $1

The registration for student cars has been changed this year from $2.50 to $1, according to Ray Jeffries, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs.

However, the rule that freshmen cannot have cars still remains. In addition to this rule, it has been decided that sophomores who do not have a "C" average cannot have cars on the campus first semester. These sophomores, 432 in number, have already been notified by the Student Affairs office.

All other students who do have cars on campus are required to register them. Registration will be on September 17 and 18 in the gym except for profesional students who will register in their schools.

Those who arrive at school late or are unable to register at this time can register later at the Student Affairs office, 206 South Building.

Students who register are expected to stick the registration sticker on their front windshield immediately so that their cars can properly identified.

There are also regulations about parking on the campus which read as follows: "There shall be no parking on the campus proper between the hours of 7-3, Monday through Saturday, except by authorized students, and visitors. Parking permits are issued by the Dean of Student Affairs. The Campus proper is defined as that area bounded on the North by Franklin Street, on the South by Raleigh Road (Highway 54), on the East by Raleigh Street, and on the West by South Columbia Street and the Pittsboro Road. the area adjacent to the Morehead Planetarium is restricted 24 hours each day to the same group and visitors to the Planetarium and Morehead Art Galleries.

The Chapel Hill police cooperate with the UNC student government in the enforcing of car registration and parking rules.

It Happens Every Semester In Woollen Gym

The scene above will be a familiar one to freshman by the time classes start next week. Registration for freshmen begins at 8 a.m. Monday, and will continue Tuesday. New students will sign up for classes Wednesday. All thoughts of basketball are forgotten in the rush that every semester turns the home floor of the National Champions into a smoke-filled room.

AS NEW SCHOOL YEAR OPENS

2,000 New Students To Start Orientation Here This Morning

Approximately 2,000 new students will enter their program of orientation into UNC tonight at a general assembly in Memorial Hall at 7.

Orientation chairman Jerry Oppenheimer in a statement to freshmen said this week that the purpose and planning of orientation are to help new students adjust to their environment at UNC.

"Orientation at Carolina has been designed with you, the new student, in mind, and its sole purpose is to acquaint you with the many aspects of University life. At times your schedule may become rushed and hectic, but each test and meeting has been planned to help you adjust to your new environment with the minimum amount of effort. Because this week will set the pattern of your college days, we hope that you will be an active participant and not a passive bystander.

"Before classes begin next Thursday, you will be tested both physically and mentally, have the Honor System and Student Government explained to you, and meet many wonderful new people. Remember that all of these people are here to help you, especially your orientation counselor. He has been chosen for his knowledge of and love for Carolina and trained to help you this week and throughout the coming semester. Don't hesitate to question him or ask for his assistance; for he is here to help you.

"Here's wishing you the best of luck in your first endeavor at the University of North Carolina."

Freshmen men will meet in Memorial Hall for the assembly over which Dean Cecil Johnson will preside tonight. Meetings have been set for freshmen women in 106 Carroll Hall, with Miss Sue Mayhue presiding and for transfer men in Gerrard Hall with Director of Student Activities Sam Magill presiding.

Miss Sue Mayhue will conduct the women's convocation in 106 Carroll Hall at 7:30.

Meetings will be the order of the day as the orientation program gets into full swing today and continues through next Wednesday.

The general welcome assembly for all new students is scheduled for tomorow night in Memorial Hall. Chancellor W. B. Aycock and orientation chairman Jerry Oppenheimer will speak, and a film, "In the Name of Freedom," will be shown.

Included on the program for orientation week are tours, tests, dances, physicals, lectures, and a Planetarium show. Chapel Hill merchants will stage a special Merchants' Day to welcome the new students to the community.

The Chancellor's reception is scheduled for 2:30-5:30 on Sunday at Graham Memorial. A graduate picnic on McIver lawn will be held Monday.

According to Ray Jeffries, assistant dean of student affairs, included in the 2,000 new students are approximately 1,100 freshmen and 500-600 graduate students.

Overcrowded Housing Remains This Semester

An over-crowded situation in men's and women's dorms is still the housing story in Chapel Hill. And there is a chapter on inadequate housing for married students.

Housing director James Wadsworth said yesterday that there will be three-man rooms in all men's dorms, and three girls in almost all rooms in the girls dormitories.

He said that the office is trying to avoid the use of the basement of Cobb dormitory, but that beds have been placed there in case they are needed.

FOUR HUNDRED

Four hundred names are on a waiting list for married students' housing in Victory Village. The situation there has been complicated by a ruling that no children may be allowed to live in the second story barracks. Two-room apartments are maintained on the second floor.

Wadsworth stated that plans are underway to provide more and better housing for married students, but that not too many steps have been taken yet.

Three new dorms are currently under construction which will relieve the situation next fall. Three dorms located near Kenan Stadium will house 650-700 students when they are completed in the fall of 1958.

Construction work on an addition to Spencer women's dormitory is well under way, according to Wadsworth.

He said that some housing is available in Chapel Hill. Wadsworth stated that "People in the town have been very cooperative in helping the housing office."

Wadsworth stated that the rush in housing began yesterday and he anticipates that it will continue until well in to the semester.

The Housing Office will be open until 10 p.m. from now until registration is over or until students are settled.

Wadsworth stated that he has met the parents of many new students and that they have "all seemed to be happy about the situation" and understand the crowded conditions.

Free Picnic, Other Activities Planned For Today At Emerson

By MARY MOORE MASON

The carnival is coming to Carolina on September 17. But this is an unusual carnival. There are no lions or tightrope walkers, but there is a boardwalk lined with gaily decorated booths.

This carnival will be in the form of a free picnic and special activities session which will be held in Emerson Field at 4:30 p.m. The carnival, sponsored by the Activities Committee of the Orientation Committee, and the picnic, sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board, have been planned to get new students acquainted with the activities on campus.

According to Al Goldsmith, Libby McCord and Bob Carter, co-chairmen of the activities session, each major organization will have a gaily decorated booth on the Emerson Field boardwalk. There will be a representative of the organization behind each booth who will explain to interested new students about the organization, its purpose, and what the requirements for membership are.

Already entered in the Carnival are booths or displays from the following campus groups: Philanthropic Society, Men's Glee Club, Cardboard, YMCA, YWCA, Carolina Quarterly, Men's Inter-Dormitory Council, Young Democrat's Club, Student Party, University Party, Alpha Epsilon Delta (a pre-med group), Dialectic Senate, Alpha Phi Omega (a service fraternity), Humor Magazine, Debate Council, Yackety Yack, Daily Tar Heel, Sound and Fury, Band, and Graham Memorial.

There will be a general information booth for those organizations unable to be there.

The giving away of door prizes will be one of the big attractions of the Carnival. As each student visits each booth he will receive a ticket. The more booths he visits the more chances he has. The door prize will probably be a gift certificate.

Each male orientation group will attend the carnival with a female orientation group.

All organizations which wish to have booths and displays and who haven't yet contacted the committee are urged to do so immediately. Those organizations which already have are to have their booths on the field by 2:30 the afternoon of the carnival. In case of rain the Carnival will be held in the Tin Can.

AT FRESHMAN CAMP

170 Freshmen Remain Four Days At New Hope

Approximately 170 freshman will return to the UNC campus today after four days at annual freshman camp held at Camp New Hope. The camp began Monday and ends today at noon.

Freshman campers will gather for the last time as a group tonight when they will meet for dinner in the upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall.

This year's camp is directed by junior Mike Givens, under the supervision of Claude Shotts and Jim Carse of the YMCA.

Freshman camp is sponsored before the beginning of every fall semester to help students meet problems of adjustment to college life and learn of opportunities on campus. The cap, held annually at New Hope, seven miles from Chapel Hill, precedes the regular orientation program for all new students.

Thirty-five upper-classmen acted this year as counselors to the freshmen. Freshmen were grouped in cabins corresponding to their dormitory assignments to give them a chance to get acquainted before the official opening of the semester.

Discussion led by campus officials and staff members included such subjects as religion in college life, adjustment problems, and extra curricular activities. A faculty-freshman softball game and a panel on dating, courtship and marriage were also on the agenda.

Faculty and staff members participating in the camp included Consolidated University President William C. Friday, Chancellor William Aycock, retired Chancellor Robert House, Dean Cecil Johnson of the General College and Roy Armstrong, director of admissions. Others participating in the program were Sam Magill, director of student activities, Stewart Colson, YMCA president, and ministers of Chapel Hill churches.

Warm & Humid Is Prediction For Weekend

The prediction is for continued warm and humid weather, with the promise of late afternoon and evening thundershowers.

The average high and low temperatures are predictied as higher than the average for this season of the year. Normal temperatures for late summer average at a high of 85 and a low of 63-64.

Merchants Assn. Plans Program

One of the most extensive welcomes ever given new Tar Heels by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants' Assn. has been planned by the association for this fall.

Next Monday has been set for the big day when local merchants will hold open houses for the new students.

Various souvenirs and gifts, such as key chains, ball point pens and ashtrays, will be given away. An information booth will be maintained all day at Battle Dorm, with maps and newspapers to be given away, as well as additional copies of the classified membership directory. Radio broadcasts from the booth are also planned.

Twenty-five gift certificates for $10 each will be given away in a campus quiz contest. Students can find entry blanks for the contest in any stores or they may obtain them from orientation counsellors.

The first 25 to correctly solve the quiz will win a $10 gift certificate for use in any store.

The names of the winners will be published in The Daily Tar Heel and other local newspapers.

Four different sets of quiz blanks will be distributed to provide variety.

New students also will be invited to establish credit in the local stores by having their parents to authorize charge accounts with any association member. The Credit Bureau here will handle all the arrangements, according to Mrs. Jane Whitefield, executive secretary of the association.

IT'S WHERE YOU FIND IT

The Carolina Way Of Life — In Kenan, In Lab, In Dorms

"The Carolina Way of Life" is a phase used to describe the way things are done in Chapel Hill, or the way people think here or just the beauty of the setting.

It is the phrase that covers all of the many facets of life on the Hill. Occasionally someone attempts to define it. Few meet with the success that was achieved this year by the staff of the Carolina Handbook.

They say that the Carolina Way of Life is "in that cup of coffee in Y-court before the mad dash to your first class in the morning, on the steps of South Building where you sit with your friends surrounded by the friendly pack of campus dogs. It is in Kenan Stadium and Woollen Gym as you cheer with your friends at victory—and it's in the silence that follows defeat.

"It is in the inevitable lines at registration, in the air when McCorkle Place is alive with spring, in the crowd when they, Yankees and Rebels both, stand and sing "Hark the Sound."

"It's in the Arboretum at two minutes before the women's dorms close as you and your date run down its sandy paths. It's in the smile of a new friend when you meet him on campus, in the handshake of the smiling campus politicians, in the class buildings, so quiet and lonely at twilight as you return from lab, in the studying or the poker game late at night.

"It's in the tempo room where you may drink beer with a friend, in the chimes of the bell tower every evening. It is everywhere and all you have to do is find it.

"But you can't find it alone. You will need friends. You will meet people from Bear Swamp, Ga., and New York City — San Francisco and Raleigh. All will be as different as the places from which they come. They, no matter where they are from, why they are here or how they are here, are all as much of Carolina as you are. Among these people you will find your friends . . . . wherever you turn you will meet someone new and, after a friendly handshake and a short game of "Do you know . . . . " there is a new friend.

Polio Vaccine Will Be Given At Infirmary

Polio shots will be offered to Carolina students this year at the University Infirmary. Asiatic flu shots may be available later, acording to a source at the infirmary.

Students will be charged $1 apiece for the series of three polio shots. The second shot, according to the infirmary source, should be taken 6-8 weeks after the first, and the third should be 7 months after the second.

Polio shots wer offered to students last year. Due to the present inadequate supplies of Asiatic flu vaccine, however, definite plans as to its distribution will not be announced until later this month.

Insurance Is Offered Students

The Chamblee Insurance Agency of Raleigh is offering accident and health insurance coverage to UNC students again this year. The service provides for married and single students.

The plan, set up by American Casualty Co. of Pennsylvania, covers medical services not provided for by student health fees.

The service may be obtained during registration by filling out an application card and paying a $14 fee.

Both policies cover all activities of the holder, 24 hours a day. Married students policies cover the husband or wife of the holder and all dependants. It provides for two days traveling time immediately before and after a semester for married students.

To New University-ites: Rawhide And Coonskin Are Acceptable And O. K.

A welcome and a warning.

The Daily Tar Heel issues a heart-felt welcome to the incoming wave of new University-ites.

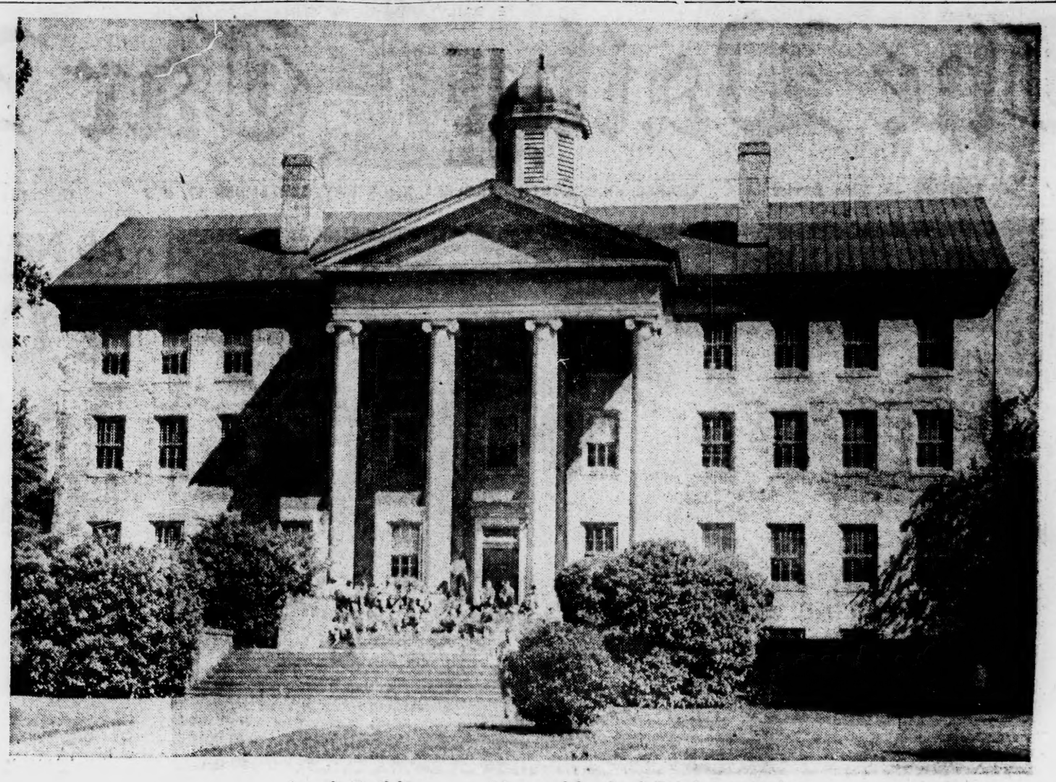
At the same time, we issue a warning to said University neophytes: There is no necessity for a complete revamping of your personality, your habits and your idiosyncrasies.

The University has enough pseudos.

In plain words, keep an open and liberal mind . . . for the University's liberalism will assuredly permeate your every tissue . . . and the innovations which will naturally occur will be the making or the breaking of your future . . . Yet at the same time, maintain your vessel on a even keel . . . Just be yourself.

The University was never intended to be a great mechanism which is set to devour diversified individuals and convert them into a uniform echelon of conformed non-eneties.

The University's main purpose, as we see it, is to provide wide boundaries to impose some amount of formulation upon the individual. Yet its boundaries are wide enough so that individuals may develop themselves without a complete renovation of their own individuality.



If you want to say "movie" or "cinema" or even "moon pictures" in lieu of the dictated ""flick," do so without hesitation.

If you want to wear a coonskin cap and raw-hide pants to class, don't hesitate to do so.

If you want to ride a unicycle to class, don't hesitate to do so.

In final words, all admire a man who is just plain himself without assuming a whole new set of false airs.

Columbus was different and so was God.

Intellectual Timidity; Another Example Of Apathy In Academics At U. N. C.

"The true teacher defends his pupils against his own personal influence. He inspires self-distrust. He guides their eyes from himself to the spirit that quickens him. He will have no disciple." — Amos Bronson Alcott.

Many have commented upon student apathy as it pertains to participation—or the lack of it—in extra-curricular work.

But few have troubled to comment upon apathy as it pertains to interest in scholastic achievement—or the distinct lack of same.

Concerning such disinterest, it is frighteningly appalling to consistently witness classes in which a professor didactically spins a little web of knowledge upon which students climb, with litle effort or toil, to an accepted or passing level of academic prowess.

Such professors prescribe small doses of learning which enable lethargic minds to "just get by." But there is a conspicuous failure to provoke and stimulate these same minds from sometimes somnambulistic states.

We would prescribe, on the other hand, a stimulating dose of academic purgative which would prvoke students to think, think, think.

Such a purgative is not to be found in patent doses. It must be an adaptable purgative which would put minds to work with poignant comments such as:

"Our textbook offers these definitions and patterns. Do you, as students, feel that the author is presenting a valid argument and a completely clear field of facts. If you agree, state your expository reasons. If you disagree, state your expository reasons."

Intellectual timidity means much more than failing to participate in general class work. It connotes a general tone of complacency which extends to affairs of government and everyday living.

Intellectual timidity is the failure of student legislators to speak out on a prejudicial state law merely because it is a state law.

Intellectual timidity is a blatant failure to accept the responsibilities which are thrust upon us by an every-changing and dynamic civilization.

Intellectual timidity is unquestioning acceptance of the written word. The attitude that because some matter is down in black and white, it is a cold fact which should be assimilated by our minds without reasoning out and testing its validity.

On the extreme pole from the complacent, intellectually, timid student, there is the student gadfly who only lights laboriously and aggravatingly upon a topic only when he feels a sting would heighten his prestige with the professor and chalk up a few brownie points on the grade book.

Such a gadfly for the sake of being a gadfly is a pest who bogs down a class with irrelevant questions to which the answer is obvious and despicably unimaginative.

Such self - appointed frondeurs are a pain to all concerned.

But the genuine intellectual gadfly is an invaluable addition to any class. He provokes the professor who should himself be provoking thoughts among his students. He stimulates, by consistent poignant stings, the intellectually timid from their mental cocons of complacency and blind acceptance.

Socrates, Joan of Arc, and so on through the ages, were persecuted for thinking differently—for questioning the powers that be. Yet creativity, upon which our civilization must base its progress depends upon radical assertions which provoke innovations.

Anything but blind adherrance to the written word and eager mastication of the intellectual morsels handed from professors on directed spoons may be labeled pseudo-iconoclatic and radical. But Christ wasn't exactly patted on the back by Pontius Pilate when the Roman governor of Judea's power was threatened by a humble yet all-powerful innovation — religious faith.

Intellectual timidity is more than blind acceptance.

It is a threat to the progress of man.

The Onslaught Back To Heaven's South Side: Impressions Of The Old School And The New

By NANCY HILL

The best way to come back to Chapel Hill is on the bus. Via Trailways the little town slips up on you before you know it. You open your eyes and the colonial brick of the buildings against the green of the oaks and elms along Franklin St. is there just as you remembered it.

The walk into the campus from the station is a short four blocks into another world, where taxi drivers don't expect you to say yes when they ask, "Taxi, lady?"

And when you get here a few days early before the rush starts, the peace is completed by the few distractions from the serenity of the place. There will be changes, you can tell already. Spiro's is getting redecorated, and so is The Daily Tar Heel office, after a fashion.

And the old people are back—a few in Student Government, a lot in orientation—and it seems like you'd never been away.

Tuesday the Hill will come into its other self, but the calm before the storm is as much a part of the place as the storm itself.

You learn things during the summer even if you don't come to summer school. You learn about geography, in particular—the geography of your own state.

North Carolina is many things, particularly to Texans. For example, I learned from a waitress in Fort Worth that North Carolina is the West Virginia of the Smokies—a little state nestled in the hills, where people go for vacation. I learned from an aunt farther west in Plainview that North Carolina is too backward to have supermarkets. She took me on a night-seeing tour of a "superette" about half the size of Fowler's.

And North Carolina is some sort of a police state, "You've got all those marine's, haven't you?"

One thing Texans do have straight about the Tar Heel state: "You all won the National Basketball Championship, didn't you?"

Orientation people began their work long ago. What begins on campus today is the culmination of plans that were painstakingly laid last spring. And the efficiency of the operation of the program is insured by the fact that many counselors, particularly, men's counselors, are guiding freshmen over the paths of Carolina for the fourth and fifth time.

Jerry Oppenheimer is the consciencious chairman of men's orientation. He came back to Chapel Hill the middle of August to tie up the remaining loose ends. He's made welcome statements, and expects to make still more, until he's blue in the face.

DAVIS YOUNG

Young is a freshman at the University. . . . Here he writes his first impressions of the campus, his classmates and the town of Chapel Hill. . . . Young's impressions were selected from several such pieces submitted to The Daily Tar Heel by freshmen attending the YMCA-sponsored camp held annually at Camp New Hope. . . . His reflections capture the insecurity and search for companionship which oft' follows the switch to complete new surroundings—The Editor.

It has often been said that first impressions are the most important. Certainly if this is true, the first impressions I have received of UNC will prove to be the most important of my life.

I came to Carolina from Princeton, N.J., having had no previous contact with the school or my classmates.

The Carolina campus that I first saw might aptly be described as a symbol of tradition . . . an atmosphere of friendship . . . and an institution that invokes pride even from the newest arrival.

This tradition may be best illustrated by the symbolism of the Old Well, the Morehead Bell Tower and Kenan Stadium.

The friendship was evident in the sincere efforts of both students and townspeople to help in the difficult adjustment to new surroundings.

The pride was invoked because of the previously mentioned impressions and for other reasons such as the careful manicuring of the grounds and the beauty of the buildings.

At the YMCA-sponsored freshman camp, I have found the greatest bunch of men I have ever seen. Through our common problems and misapprehensions we have come to be a closely-knit group.

We have learned, eaten, played, and worshiped together. Through these associations, we have seen that although we may have come from different backgrounds and geographical areas, our collective ambitions are similar in many respects.

At freshman camp we have been privileged to hear and to meet outstanding personalities from all phases of UNC life. These people have treated us as adults but, nevertheless, have shown a genuine appreciation for our problems.

Through the new associations we have formed, we have been given that all-important initial push. All of us are exceedingly grateful to those whom we have met here and in Chapel Hill . . . for, above all, making us feel wanted and at home. . . .

Parades And Color . . .

. . . Another important part of the University's traditions . . . Frolic and play . . . Scholastics and the academic grind . . . A combination afforded by the institution's renowned liberalism . . . freedom of thought and of action . . .

What Is This Amazing Female Called A Coed

Between the innocence of girlhood and the dignity of womanhood, we find the amazing creature called the coed. Coeds come in assorted sizes and weights, but all have the same creed: To make it known with loud fanfare that they are on a diet and promptly forget it at mealtime.

Coeds are found everywhere on the campus—blocking door ways, going up and down stairways, running for classes, stepping off curbs in front of trucks, whispering in the library and losing their pews in church.

Mothers worry about them, fathers dote on them, little brothers hate them, teachers tolerate them and college boys can't make up their minds. A coed is primness with a run in its stocking, beauty with curlers in its hair and sophistication with its lipstick smeared.

When you are trying to be serious, a coed is a laughing, bouncing bundle of glee. But say something witty and expect her to laugh, her brain turns to cement and she looks at you wide eyed, without the least notion that anything funny has been said.

A coed is a composite—she has the nerve of a fall morning, the persuasiveness of a Philadelphia lawyer, the demureness of a Mona Lisa, the mind of a Machiavelli, the tenacity of a shark, the warmheartedness of a saint, the optimism of a gambler and a secret weapon that turns men to jelly—tears.

She likes new clothes, dates, boys, Christmas vacation, eating out, talking, convertibles athletes furry stuffed animals, young handsome teachers, spring, being sophisticated and expensive drinks.

A coed is a magical creature—you can lock your heart against her, but she'll steal the key; you can keep her out of your life, but you can't keep her out of your mind. Might as well give up—she is your captor, your boss and your master. But when you bring her home at night from a date with only the shattered pieces of your bank roll left, she can make you feel like a million when she breathes those five magic words: "I had a wonderful time."

Do's And Don'ts For Freshmen

By FRANK CROWTHER

". . . so then I went to Carolina."

Years from now many of you will be repeating these very words, some regretfully, some wistfully, some with a great sense of pride. I, for one, plan to be in the third category with the other thousands of UNC graduates.

But this is your first year, not mine, and you are concerned at present with your own immediate future. The goldfish bowl which you are now in has very few, if any, areas of concealment; there are many ways out, but if you decide to swim for it, there are a few things that you should know from the beginning.

You may wonder at first why we are so proud of the university. Our library is overstuffed with many books which expound upon the traditions which are an integral part of Chapel Hill. Your Freshman Handbook will explain much of it. Your counselor will probably make a few additions. You may even discover some of it yourself in your first few weeks here. But, actually, it is something which will infect you gradually as your years pass in the university.

Historically, we were provided for in the state constitution of 1776, chartered in 1789, and had our cornerstone laid at New Hope Chapel (now Chapel Hill) in 1793. The doors were opened to students in 1795, and we became the first state university of the United States, having been granted 20,000 acres and with the impressive sum of $12,706.14 in the till. The idea behind the university, as stated in section 41 of the North Carolina Constitution of 1776, was that "all useful learning shall be duly encouraged and promoted in one or more universities."

As all universities, we have a "father." He was William Richardsor Davie, an Englishman, who was educated at Princeton where he was graduated in 1776 with honors. He later became governor of our state (1798-99). Davie was chiefly responsible for the establishment, location, building and endowment of UNC. He was also instrumental in selecting the first instructors and planning an elastic curricula for the school.

For those of you who are further interested in the history of not only the university but of the state, I would suggest that you take History 161-2-3-4 under Professors Lefler and Green. This, however, is not the place for a detailed history course.

What is really expected of you is sincere effort. To put it very bluntly, you are here for some further quarrying, polishing and refinishing. Joseph Addison phrased it quite nicely: "I consider an human soul without an education like marble in the quarry, which shows none of its inherent beauties till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours, makes the surface shine, and discovers ever ornamental cloud, spot and vein that runs through the body of it." This may be a bit idealistic or flowery, but it conveys the message. Analogously, we all bear fruit in our lives, but the best trees are these that have been fertilized, pruned and well cared for. Your university education can do a great deal for you, but, in the last analysis, only you can bear the fruit.

You need not expect any form of 'shazing" during your freshman year. There are still many colleges and universities in our country (and in this state) which still adhere to the so-called practice of "putting the freshmen in their places." As far as we are concerned, you are already in your place.

We treat our first year men with respect, consideration and confidence. It is not our objective to discriminate, but to instill in you the confidence and respect we think all Carolina gentlemen should command. Being in your first year, moving into a strange, new environment, faring for yourself and making your own decisions, and budgeting your own time and money will be enough to keep you fully occupied for some time—all this and classes too. We upperclassmen don't feel that we or the university should add any more hazards; contrarily, we think that it is our duty to help you orient and adjust yourself to your new world of belaborous books, examining professors, contemptuous squirrels, and that strange and ominous creature known as Silent Sam.

Finally, we will add some words of advice to the many you will receive in the next weeks.

Don't panic and feel that you can never fathom this seemingly awesome place. In a month or so you will be right at home. Get out and familiarize yourself with the campus, not relying solely on the map which has been provided you, but by visiting some of the places yourselves. If you don't see what you are looking for, ask somebody. You may be surprised at the warmth of our students and their willingness to help. I was.

Do go to the library to study until you have accustomed yourself to dormitory life and have situated yourself well enough to budget your time. There is an awful temptation to join in on the "bull session" which can go into the wee hours of the morning. You feel quite silly when you go to your class in the morning half prepared, knowing that the professor is looking right down your throat. It's amazing how they invariably call on you on just the day that you were a little behind schedule.

Don't ramble on incoherently without an outline and with complete disregard for coordination (as I have in this column) for your first English theme. There is something terribly shocking about your first "F" on a paper.

You may be embarrassed now and then, but that rubs off quite easily.

Don't go overboard in joining extra-curricular activities all at once. Try to select a few in which you know that you have an interest, and concentrate on them. There will always be an opportunity to join others at a later date as you see fit and as your working schedule will allow.

We are all seeking something here at the University: security, education in or for itself, companionship — there are many motivations which insert a man into a college community. Some of them come from rich families while other ones are from needy ones. Many have had prep school educations but most come from public school. Two of the surest equalizers in life, however, are nakedness and inevitable death. In our journey, there are many things which we will be told to remember and there will be many things which we will discover for ourselves which we will want to remember. I will add one more to that list, and you may do with it what you will:

To Pledge Or Not To Pledge

That is the question facing every new student who is embarking on an extended voyage through uncharted social waters here at Carolina.

You've all heard about the famous fraternity parties and big weekends. You've all heard about the "date-rate" system that predominates in the fraternity-sorority world here. And the one shining hope nearly all of you cherish is to be admitted into the exalted circle of the party-going, sitting-at-the-social-pinnacle Greeks.

The majority of all newcomers at Carolina think the only way to achieve social success here is by joining a fraternity or sorority. But just ask any of the old timers around campus, and they'll tell you it "ain't necessarily so."

Your college life won't be ruined if you don't pledge. Your social standing will be just as good as anyone's if you go independent, and don't lose sight of that fact in the hurly-burly of that fall rat-race known as rush.

Fraternity-sorority members are in the minority at Carolina. Only about one-third of the student body are Greeks, while two-third as independent. Thus if you dont' go Greek, you'll be right along with the crowd.

There is much to be said for the fraternity-sorority life, but one important fact should be borne in mind. There is no stigma attached to the independent, and the Greek society member is not looked up to with worshipping eyes by the rest of the campus.

Rush week will soon be upon you. Don't lose your equilibrium and sense of values in the madcap whirl. Make your choice firmly and cast no backward glances of regret after it has been made.

Whichever way you go, UNC will still be a wonderful place.

What Old Timers Say . . .

Realizing that new students arrive at the Hill full of questions, we asked several returning Tar Heels to pass on to you some helpful advice, which might make your stay at UNC happier. Here is what they had to say:

John Brooks—"Choose at least one extra-curricular activity in which you are interested and participate whole-heartily with this group."

Pat Dillon—"There is more than just the fanfare of the UNC campus, although this might be enough to consume all your time. Try to get beyond all that UNC offers on the surface. It is one thing to parasite off what a school offers, and quite another to add to what is already there."

Benny Thomas—"Take advantage of orientation counselors' advice as it will be beneficial throughout your stay at Carolina."

Dot Pressly—"I think Carolina can be to anyone what they want to make of it. Students should look at everything UNC has to offer, decide what they are most interested in and devote their time to that activity."

Marion Griffin—"Plan good study habits from the beginning so you won't be like many students in the past who have gone down so many quality points that it took them five years to ever get a C average. Good studying habits now will mean plenty of time for extra curricular activities and no quality point worry."

Edith MacKinnon—"Keep your own individuality without following every new idea and every action thrust at you these first days of school."

Nancy Hill—"Probably the greatest misconception of new students is that a prerequisite for a full life at Carolina is to be a member of a fraternity or sorority. Any returning student will be quick to admit that membership in a Greek letter organization is not necessary to be happy at UNC. Many find that some particular activity takes the place, or the time, that membership in a Greek organization would have, and provides the contacts as well."

Neil Bass—"Don't take advice blindly . . . be inquisitive . . . . don't feel compelled to become just another Rah-Rah Joe College or pseudo-intellectual . . . . be your own self . . . . Don't be forced into feeling that you are an oddball unless you affiliate with every group or organization which thrusts itself upon you . . . . You're the captain of your own fate; in this, yours is the decision."

A Comfortable Room Makes Life Much More Enjoyable

By PATSY MILLER

So you have a problem which is just awful—what to do with that room you have to live in for a year and what to do with two roommates!

Look at the walls, look at those beds (beter still, sit on a mattress!), look at that empty window. The best you can say for the room on first inspection is that it looks like first class army organization.

And just listen to those freshmen whistling at every move you make, and you are at least two years their senior. Where are all those romantic college men, those famous Carolina gentlemen?

Well, we can't help with the roommates and the college men, but here is some advice about fixing up a room.

In the first place, you have to unpack in order to find out how much space you really have. That horrible room will begin to have its advantages—some things you couldn't see before, like your own lavatory, mirrors, a nice leather chair and neutral colors easy to work with.

Some soft colors, such as rose, lime, baby blue or yellow, or bright prints will off set a window and will do worlds for the beds. Curtains and bedspreads, then, are the second step after unpacking.

Then, if you can afford it, a rug—not too big — will finish making the room look at least 100 per cent better.

If you want it to look another 100 per center better, try experimenting with rearranging the furniture. Have you ever tried putting chests or desks back to back to provide more room?

Well, now we are ready for some more suggestions. Of course, you brought your own wastebaskets, which are sturdy and a little colorful.

If you find that you do not have enough clothes room after you've filled your closets and the wardrobe, try adding a little chest in some corner of the room. If you don't have one already, you can find one downtown. And put shoe bags on the inside of the closet door along with a door hangar which will provide all the room for clothes you need!

Now that everything is complete, light up a cigarette, turn on the radio, and rest back on your bed, or in that leather chair—take a look around you, and look out the window at the fall trees with all their colors—

Yes, this should be a very comfortable room!

AND RUSH SEASON BEGINS

UNC Has 24 Social Fraternities And 6 Sororities On The Campus

One of the foremost questions in the minds of new Carolina students is whether or not to pledge a sorority or fraternity.

The greek letter organizations constitute an important segment of student life at UNC. There are 24 social fraternities and 6 social sororities with chapters on campus, with an average of 50 members in each group.

It used to be that a student wanted to be in a fraternity or sorority more than anything else while at college. At one time it was almost necessary to be in one to enjoy college life to the fullest extent.

However, that situation no longer exists. Social fraternities and sororities here play an important part, but they are not necessary to a well-rounded college life.

UNC CHAPTERS

The 6 national sororities which have chapters at UNC are Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Gamma Delta, Chi Omega, Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Delta and Pi Beta Phi.

Students interested in joining a fraternity will be given a fraternity interest card during registration on which he will list those fraternities in which he is interested.

New coeds have already received in the mail cards on which they indicate whether or not they wished to go through rush.

DECISION

The decision to join a fraternity or sorority is an important one. There is much to gain from fraternity life in the way of lasting friendships. A fraternity or sorority is more than a party group. The sisters and brothers will be living companions during your stay at Carolina.

Rush, which will begin soon after your arrival at UNC, is regulated by the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils. IFC is made up of the president of each fraternity and a representative from each house.

PANHEL AND IFC

Each of the six sororities belongs to the Panhellenic Council which is composed of the sorority presidents, rush chairmen, one representative-at-large from each sorority, and one representative from the Stray Greek organization.

These two councils are the governing bodies for Greek letter houses. Not only do they make rules but also enforce them.

Some of the rules include social activities, coed visiting, fraternity drinking and other conduct.

If a student pledges a fraternity or sorority, he or she is eligible to be initiated at the end of the first semester if a "C" averaged has been maintained by the pledge.

Students who are unable to decide and need more time to make up their minds can wait and go through informal rush, which is held throughout the school year, beginning shortly after formal rush is over.

Breakfasts With Independents Set During Orientation Week

The Independent Women's Association, which represents all students who are not members of a sorority, are arranging plans for a get-acquainted week with all new coeds.

Breakfasts will be held in all the women's dorms during Orientation Week by the IWA for new coeds, to give the incoming students a chance to meet people and to find out about IWA.

The governing body of the group is the Independent Women's Council, which is the coordinating council for campus-wide as well as dormitory projects, social events and programs which will bring the student into closer contact with other Carolina activities.

The IWC acts collectively on plans and suggestions coming from the Independent women themselves. Two representatives to the council are elected by the Independent women in each dormitory and by the Town Girls' Club. One representative is elected in the fall and one in the spring of each year. To coordinate the IWA program with the dormitory program, one representative also serves on the executive board of each dormitory.

Plans for the year include such civic, political and social projects as open houses for candidates, Christmas project and party, a joint picnic with the Independent Men, supper meetings and many other social events.

The IWC also works jointly with the Men's Inter-Dormitory Council and Women's Residence Council in providing ample opportunities for dances, parties, coffee breaks and other forms of social entertainment.

Panhel, IFC Announce Rules For Fall Rush Season

The Interfraternity Council is the governing body of the 24 social fraternities on the Carolina campus while the Panhellenic Council fulfills the same role in conjunction with the 6 social sororities at UNC.

The Panhellenic Tea Friday night, Sept. 20, will formally launch the rush season for coeds, while fraternity rushees will meet Thursday night, Sept. 26 at Memorial Hall to begin the fraternity rush season.

FRATERNITY RUSH RULES

1. Rushing shall be defined as entertaining, engaging in social conversation, in written correspondence, direct or indirect (except informal salutations) on the part of any fraternity man, fraternity alumnus or agent thereof except in written correspondence on the part of alumnus not enrolled at the University.

2. A rushee must visit each fraternity from which he has received invitations on the first and second night of rushing.

3. A rushee must observe the regulated hours of rushing. Outside of these hours, no rushing, as defined above, is allowed.

4. Modified silence shall apply during Orientation Week between orientation counsellors and freshmen and at the faculty tea and reception. Modified silence is a period in which fraternity men may engage in social conversation not concerning fraternities and rushees. Strict silence applies at all other times. (Strict silence is a period during which no rushing is allowed.)

5. A rushee must not shake-up until shake-up night. (Shake up is the act of a fraternity man or agent thereof attempting to cause a rushee to commit himself to that fraternity as a future pledge.)

6. No agreement between a fraternity and a rushee made before Friday night shall be considered binding in any way, shape or form.

7. Any violations of the above rules may result in the fraternity involved not being allowed to pledge or initiate anyone for a period of 12 months, being fined $50 and the rushee involved not being able to pledge a fraternity for six months.

8. The Interfraternity Council Court interprets the rules and imposes penalties.

SORORITY RUSH RULES

1. A coed who eats a meal or spends a night in a sorority house during the summer will not be eligible for rush until second semester.

A coed who breaks her pledge with one sorority shall not be asked to join any other national sorority for one calendar year. A pledge holds no matter on which campus a coed may be—whether she pledged here or at another school.

3. Men may not assist in rushing.

4. From the time a rushee arrives at school until informal rush begins, no sorority alumna or patroness living in town may entertain a rushee in her house.

5. No sorority girl, or any other girl helping with rush, can arrange a date indirectly through any other party (e. g. male student, independent, Stray Greek), nor many she double or triple date with a rushee.

6. From the time a rushee arrives at school until informal rush begins, she may not visit a sorority house except for a scheduled rush party.

7. A bid is never oral during formal rush and is obtained only through the Dean of Women's office.

8. "Silence" will be observed from the time a rushee arrives at school until bids are handed out. This silence does not apply to student advisers during the orientation period. However, counselors are on their honor not to discuss anything concerning sororities with new coeds. This silence period must be observed by sorority transfers as well as local members except when they are participating in the orientation program.

9. Sorority girls may not visit a rushee's room, nor may a rushee visit a sorority girl's room.

10. There shall be no "hot-boxing" (any practice used to force rushees to promise to pledge or to influence her in her decision in any way.)

11. Any violation of these rules—either real or rumored—should be reported to the Panhellenic president, Sarah Hudson.

12. Each rushee must receive her own invitations to rush parties.

13. Each rushee must visit all six houses on Sept. 23 and 24 or she will be disqualified for further parties.

14. Rushees should realize that any sorority girl that tries to use unfair rushing is being disloyal to her sorority and to Panhellenic. Rushees should also realize that participating in unfair rushing will result in disqualification to continue in rush.

Germans Bring Top Bands In Fall, Winter And Spring

By LARRY CHEEK

The biggest dances of the college year are those sponsored by the Germans Club, composed of 13 UNC social fraternities.

Les Elgart is slated to play for fall Germans, November 8, according to German Club president Mark Cherry. Both the dance and concert will be held on Friday. It is believed that date tickets will be half price that weekend.

Top flight bands and singing stars make appearances on campus for those dances. In fact, the honor roll of stars who have visited the Carolina campus reads as if it were lifted straight from the pep music hall of fame.

Last year Bill May, Fats Domino, the Four Freshmen and Louis Armstrong all put in appearances. In previous years, such big time musical men as Les Brown, Ralph Marterie, Johnny Long, Tex Beneke and Stan Kenton have been featured.

The dances are held on Saturday nights in Woollen Gym and are formal. Bids are limited to members only, but anyone wishing to attend may usually obtain a bid from some member who is not going.

Germans week ends are filled with parties which have been known to go on and on, maybe all night. Students either date coeds or import girls from their home towns, WC, St. Marys, Meredith or one of the many other girls' schools in the surrounding area.

New plans are in the making for the dances this year, according to Cherry, who added, "We are, looking forward to the biggest year yet."

Stray Greek Organization Preserves Bonds Of Sorority Life

In a sorority which doesn't have a chapter here?

Then perhaps you would like to affiliate with the Stray Greeks, an organization composed of sorority girls whose chapters are not represented at UNC.

Its aim is to provide a social outlet for its members and to preserve the bonds of unity and sisterhood in sorority life.

Headed by President Peggy Jo Cress of Salisbury, the group was founded in 1944 under the leadership of Twigg Branch. It has gained more and more recogniton on campus since then, and its membership now totals almost 30.

During the year they handle Panhellenic Post office during sorority rush week and each each member serves as a Panhel adviser in her own dorm.

DATING AT CAROLINA
Tops In Every Popularity Contest

Dating Is Tops In Popularity With Carolina Eds And Coeds

By PATSY MILLER

Dating is probably the most popular pastime at UNC. It certainly takes enough time—and the man's money!

Many coeds are quite frank about their reason for coming here . . . . to catch a husband, to get a pin. It all adds up to the same thing. Who could blame a young woman for wanting to get married, and who could blame her for coming here to look around?

After all, the man-woman ratio here is seven to one, in the man's favor numerically, but decidedly in the woman's favor datewise.

All the coed has to worry about is meeting the nice men and getting them to date her so that when the right time comes she can trap the man she wants! Of course, the new coed figures on blind dates most of the first semester.

Then, by second semester, she will have all the necessary "contacts" and will get her own dates. Just like the upper classwomen.

Well, women, you may as well toss that little idea out of your heads. Blind dates never cease until you are attached to someone. And being unattached can certainly have its advantages.

Getting a blind date poses no problem. If you are neat, well-groomed and not too boistrous, and if you have some good friends with connections, you have the date problem licked.

Blind dates abound during football season, for it is then that new boys are looking for dates and old ones want to meet the new coeds. The new coed is in the best position of all to date and should take advantage of her opportunities.

Now to meet some Carolina gentlemen yourself, all on your own!

The library, of all places, is notorious as a date bureau. There you will find at least six huge rooms filled with men. Cigarette breaks on the library steps provide a marvelous opportunity to bump into old friends who will introduce you to their handsome friends. The next step is a coffee break at the Pine Room of Lenoir Hall.

Outside activities bring you into contact often with those who share your interests and where you can get to know men better before dating them.

Even classes often pay of datewise, for there you may arrange the frequent study date which may lead into something else.

Carolina Gentlemen are famous for hospitality and good manners; if you return the friendly and sometimes amused smiles and hellos and don't chase them too hard, perhaps you will marry a Carolina Gentleman one day.

Well-Dressed Coeds Will Vie For "Miss Fashionplate" Title

Well-dresed coeds are awarded notoriety during the year by selection as "Miss Fashionplate" through the efforts of a local clothing establishment, Robbins, Inc.

Held each month during the school year, three coeds are nominated for the title of "Miss Fashionplate" of the month, after which the candidates are presented to the students by ads in the Daily Tar Heel.

The entire student body—Carolina gentlemen included — are then invited to stop by Robbins and cast a vote for the candidate of their choice.

Winners are announced in the Daily Tar Heel, after which "Miss Fashionplate" receives a special prize and the other two nominees are presented gifts.

As school draws to an end in the spring, Robbins stages its biggest contest to pick Miss Fashionplate of the Year." The candidates are the monthly winners, and again the student body picks their choice.

The winner is the recipient of a complete ensemble.

Coed Makes Fashion List

Proof of the fact that Carolina coeds are well-dressed is Miss Sarah van Weyk, who was named one of the "Ten Best Dressed College Girls in America" this past spring.

As one of the ten winners, Sarah flew to New York the first week in June as the guest of the magazine where she was interviewed, appeared on television, attnded parties and participated in the Glamour August College Fashion Show on June 5.

WHAT TO WEAR WHEN

Carolina Coeds Pick Their Clothes For Infomality And Casual Comfort

By MARY ALYS VOORHEES

Obvious at Carolina is the Ivy League look which has taken the campus by storm in recent years and will continue in popularity this year. Back-belted skirts and tailored shirts in prints and pastels are seen everywhere.

But a foremost question in the minds of new students is what to wear when. To solve the problem, the staff presents this capsule view of campus fashions:

AS CLASSES begin Milady will don shirtwaist dresses, Ivy League skirts and blouses, and transitional cottons until cold weather comes, after which she wear sweaters—soft cashmeres or the crew neck—to mix and match with good tweeds and plaids. On cold, crisp mornings she can top her ensemble with a car coat or Eton jacket. As for shoes, either suede or leather loafers are the favorite among Carolina coeds.

FOR DRESSY occasions such as football games, simple wool sheaths and suits are preferred. Jewelry is simple with gold and pearl creations worn most of the time. One dazzling pin and tiny button earrings are always in good taste.

According to predictions from top fashion magazines, Milady will present a more softened appearance this year. Polished elegance, with the stress on femininity and ease, will prevail.

As for shoes, they are due to have skinnier-than-ever heels with very pointed toes.

CASUAL wear for cabin parties and picnics will include flannel and polished cotton Bermudas in dark plaids and solids, worn with cotton blouses, polo shirts and sweaters.

Coffee dates, week night dates, and study dates are quite informal and campus attire or the more casual clothes may be worn.

FORMAL DANCES and banquets are popular at UNC and a floor or ankle-length dress is appropriate. Undoubtedly the short formal is more practical for Germans and fraternity dances to avoid tattered hemlines on crowded dance floors. Fabrics for formals range from nylon chiffon to heavy taffeta and satin in all colors.

When Milady has a special weekend dancing date or party, cocktail dresses of chiffon, taffeta, crepe or velveteen fashioned into a smart sheath or with a full skirt will be worn.

Color, Style And Fabrics Are "Big 3"

This year promises to be one of the most colorful seasons campus wear has seen in many years. Little does it matter just where a coed will be—at a party, an athletic event or in the classroom—her wardrobe future is bursting with color.

* * *

Latest to make its debut is the shirtwaist dress in plaids and bright solid colors styled with either full skirts or as a sheath, take your pick.

* * *

FABRIC pace setters for this year for dacron and tweed with Racoon coats, a relic of the Roaring '20's, back, more modified of course.

Although tweeds will be seen in most every garment, flannel will be back holding its own.

Brilliant Colors Blaze On Campus This Year

BRIGHT COLORS are catching fire on campus this year. Reds, blues, greens and browns will major in college wardrobes.

They'll run riot in formals for big dances, dresses for cocktail parties, campus coats and bright shirts, skirts and sweaters for date-bait. Jewel tones and stained glass window colors have been chosen the most likely to succeed by this year's collegians.

JERSEYS, corduroys and knits rate an A-plus for campus and classroom wear. And wonder fabrics help smart looking clothes to hold their eye-Q longer.

The emphasis is on interestingly textured materials, color and casual cut in college fashions. The relaxed look of this fall's soft suits and dresses and the carefree cut of coats and jackets are part of the beak-to-school look for coeds and eds.

Carolina Playmakers Boast 40-Year History On Campus

The Carolina Playmakers are one campus organization which has brought nation-wide fame to UNC.

It began as a pioneer folk theatre almost 40 years ago, and since then has toured from Boston to Texas, including several performances in New York City. Although it claims to be nothing more than a university - community theatre, it often proves to be a stepping-stone for many eventually successful professionals in the theatre.

The Playmakers Theatre is one of the University's oldest buildings, located on Cameron Ave. across from Old East Dorm, and has been everything from the University Library to the "University Stable" during its history.

It houses four of the six productions each year, while the annual musical comedy is presented in Memorial Hall

Y-Court Is A Haven To All & Center Of Social Activity

Where's the center of social activity at Carolina? Ask any upperclassman, and he'll tell you that the most popular spot on campus for casual conversation, friendly get-togethers, and chats with coeds is a square of asphalt beside South Building known as Y-Court.

The bench-lined square is located in front of the YMCA, where late sleeping students who miss breakfast may grab a cup of coffee and a doughnut during the 10-minute break between classes.

It has been estimated by expert observers that a high percentage of romances here got their start on a bench in Y-Court or perhaps on the steps of South Building.

Y-Court has other uses, in addition to serving the cause of l'amour. Almost any weekday morning, a dedicated scholar may be seen pouring over a formidable looking textbook, oblivious to the light hearted trivialties of the world around him, an expression of intent concentration on his face. Ah! A straight "A" student, you say to yourself. Not so. The poor lad probably gave his all for the fraternity cause the night before, and now must do something about that mid-term exam next period.

The administrative moguls in South Building also have a good use for Y-Court. The brass has made Y-Court its favorite retreat from the cares and worries involved in running a University.

For them, Y-Court is a haven. Here they can relax in unsophisticated comfort, rubbing elbows with the man from the lower quad and the lowly freshman from Hicksville, USA.

Y-Court is a common denominator. It serves as a common meeting ground for all those who call Carolina their home. Football heroes, student leaders, deans, campus personalities and just plain old Joe College guys gather; all are one in Y-Court.

They've told you about the Carolina tradition. This is it.

BREATH SLOWLY

By the time you draw your next three breaths, somebody else's breathing will be placed in jeopardy by a traffic accident the Allstate Safety Crusade has pointed out.

UNC Cardboard Prepares Stunts For Football Games

The Cardboard is a student organization that designs and prepares the card stunts performed as halftime entertainment at all home football games and sometimes, at games away.

Much work and cooperation is involved in preparation of a stunt from the time an idea is submitted until it is finally performed. But work is not all there is to it.

At the Cardboard offices, in Emerson Stadium, the members have a chance to meet others, discuss different things and have a lot of fun working. Work goes on in a voluntary manner during the football season through the last game, for essentially the organization is only a fall semester activity, but last season there was much activity that ran over into late spring.

Last season began what is hoped to be an expanding of activity into other areas besides that of just students. All members were given transportation and admission to the Duke-Carolina game where stunts were performed before national television cameras.

An awards banquet was held and awards were given to members who did outstanding work during the season. A scrapbook of the year's activities was also presented, and new officers were also installed.

Late in the spring, a pre-exam party was given by the executive council. All these activities were well received by the members.

New and better activities are planned for this year. Among these will be more group get-togethers and parties, entries in parades and coordinated stunts with the band.

School Supplies Are At Book Ex.

The Book Exchange, located in the Basement of Steele Dorm on the South side of the campus, sells used and new books and other school supplies, including paper, notebooks, and pencils.

New books are sold at the market price, but prices of used books vary, depending on the condition of the books. The Book-X also buys books back from students for from half price on down to nothing.

Hours of the store are 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on class days.

YDC And YRC Operate Here

Both national political parties are well represented on campus by the Young Democrats Club and the Young Republicans Club.

Both clubs meet regularly, sponsor rallies, bring noted men here to speak and have their fun by sponsoring parties at various times in the year.

Students are usually solicited to join either of the two by club members during registration. Both clubs have small dues.

Jim Tatum Says Carolina Gridders Will Be Greatly Improved

KING'S KORNER

Carolina—Producer In Good Standing

Welcome aboard new students!

Your matriculation at Carolina has brought you into a hotbed of collegiate athletics.

The connotation of the term "big time athletics" has been associated lately with under-the-table dealings regarding excessive aid to athletes. This writer's interpretation of the term is that the school to which the term is applied is recognized as a consistent producer of ranking athletic teams.

Carloina is among the outstanding producers of nationally recognized athletic talent. That's a reality, not a myth. We have had our share of great teams and great players and we will continue to have.

Our standing with the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) is good. During the past few years we have had little trouble with the NCAA, and it has been during this period that the NCAA has struck fiercely in an attempt to purge a mess which it felt was clogging our collegiate athletic system.

We are not completely void of run-ins with the NCAA but our differences have been minor and we are, as stated before, in good standing with the powerful forces which capably govern college athletics.

Football Undergoing Recovery Program

Although there is a great deal of interest in all sports here, the major two are football and basketball. These two may be classified as "recovering" and "excellent" respectively.

Last season Coach Jim Tatum traveled the rockiest road of his football career when he watched his footballers win two, lose seven and tie one. To the surprise of school officials and coaches it was later learned that an ineligible player was on the Carolina roster and all Tar Heel wins were forfeited. That was the one big run-in that the school has had with the NCAA and that player had come here before Tatum.

Tatum has been unusually silent this season in prognosticating his club's chances. This has led many Tar Heel followers to believe that Sunny Jim has something up his sleeve and that would not be a fantastic conjecture for football followers recognize him as a solid producer.

That football at Carolina is on the rise after several "lean" years is a firm conviction of most Tar Heel followers. This observer has found not one single person who figures the Tar Heels to be as weak as last season. Is this not indicative that the spirit is there? That Carolina fans have put their confidence in Jim Tatum and his capable aides?

Last season, student support was nothing to brag about. The students went to the games and cheered, sometimes half-heartedly. Pep rallies, however, were a colossal flop. There was a general lack of real enthusiasm on the campus.

But this is 1957. The "recovery" plan is in effect. It is the belief of this corner that '57 will be a more productve year for Tar Heel football from all standpoints.

Basketball, McGuire—National Champs

Those tall and talented Tar Heel cagers just wouldn't be beat.

That about sums up Carolina basketball in 1956-57. There is probably no one on this campus or any other that does not know of the Tar Heel's great undefeated season which led to a National Basketball Championship.

The Tar Heels had everything. But most of all, they had desire. Nobody can deny the tenacity of Coach Frank McGuire's charges—perhaps the finest basketball team ever assembled.

It was a grand culmanation for McGuire, the personable mentor from New York. He had built for four years previously and came up with the kind of team which sports fans knew he would eventually produce.

But the year's of production for Carolina are not over; they have just begun. McGuire is back (despite all the contract rumor) and he admits that his team could be twenty-five percent better this season.

Naturally the loss of the great Lennie Rosenbluth will hurt. But the four men who, along with Rosenbluth carried the Tar Heels through to that fabulous season, are back—Pete Brennan, Joe Quigg, Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns. That it not to underrate the tremendous contributions of several reserves who did a splendid job at crucial moments. Most of them will also return.

You might wonder how and why McGuire feels that his '57 squad could be even stronger. There is a simple answer. A terrific freshman team and a couple of fellows named Harvey Salz and Ray Stanley.

The '56-57 freshman team was the class of the conference, and from that team McGuire has a wealth of talent which will make things tough for last year's returning four.

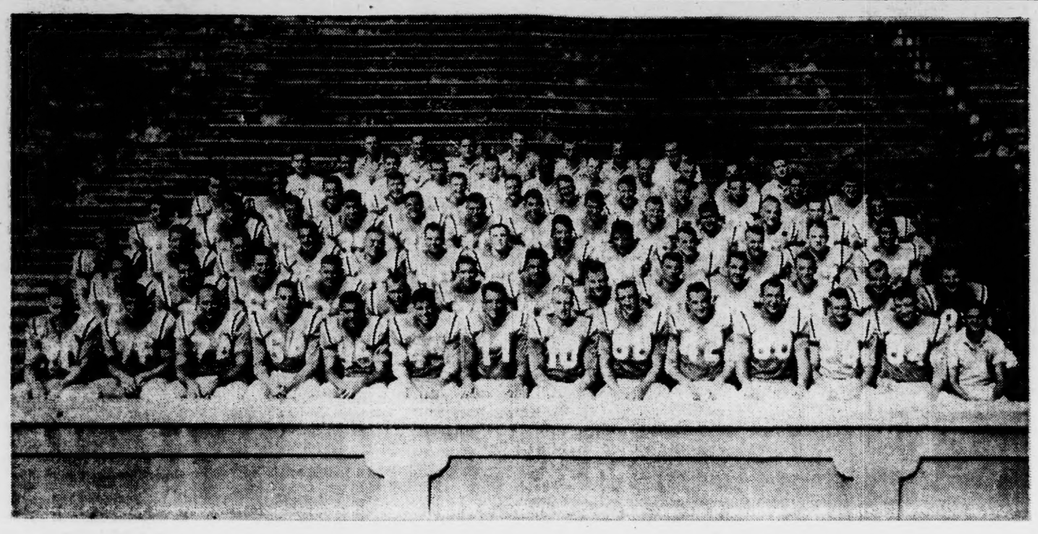
Salz is a little guard from New York who led the freshmen during the 1955-56 season but had academic troubles last season and missed the entire year. Stanley is another ex-frosh star who returns to a forward position.

Sophomore Lee Shaffer is the man labeled "most likely to take Rosenbluth's place." He and Stanley will probably battle it out.

It would be ridiculous this early to predict another undefeated season for the Carolina cagers but the thought is a plausable one. Less risky is a prediction that Carolina will retain its national title. The Tar Heels will again encounter some formidable opponents, and everyone will be out to break their undefeated skein. But with such a collection of basketball talent, Frank McGuire's boys could do it again.

Elsewhere On The Sports Scene

Elsewhere on the Carolina sports front, six of Carolina's eight other sports showed records of .500 or better last season.



Carolina's' great swimming team had a perfect 9-0 record under Ralph Casey. This year the mermen will be guided by Pat Earey.

Coach Walt Rabb's baseball team fought through the season with hardly any pitching staff other than Jim Raugh and still battled Duke right down to the wire to finish in second place in the ACC. Rabb has lost a great deal and probably will not be as strong this season. Soccer, under Marvin Allen, was 4-3 last year.

The cross-country and track teams under Dale Ranson turned in records of 12-1 and 3-3, respectively. The runners had some of the best talent in the conference and should be even better this season despite the loss of All-American Jim Beatty.

Coach Chuck Erickson's golfers turned in a winning 10-2-1 season mark but had a rough time in individual play in the conference tournament.

The only two losing teams were wrestling (4-5-1) and tennis at 8-9. The netters lost heavily through graduation in 1956 but have some real "comers" this season and should be better.

TAR HEEL FOOTBALLERS OF '57

PRE-SEASON FOOTBALL DOPE

Schedule Shows Carolina Will Play Some Top Teams

Schedule and pre-season rundown on Tar Heel foes for 1957. '56 won-lost record in parentheses.

Sept. 21 — North Carolina State (home) — (3-7-0) — Coach Earle Edwards is looking forward to better things for his Wolfpack this season . . . State was not hit hard by graduation and will be a more experienced ball club . . . . The Wolfpack will be deeper in reserve power and should have a capable first string backfield. Last year the Consolidated brothers handed Jim Tatum's club a 26-6 defeat in the season opener at Kenan Stadium . . . . Carolina's all-time record against State is 34-6-6.

Sept. 28 — Clemson College (home)—(7-1-2)—Biggest dent in the Tiger's roster left by the loss of sensational halfback Joel Wells . . . . The ACC's 1956 Orange Bowl representative should be strong again this season but has an array of untried sophomores who'll have to come through . . . . Coach Frank Howard figures the '57 team will pass more than the squad that suffered 27-21 loss to Colorado in the Orange Bowl . . . . Carolina did not play Clemson last season . . . . All time mark against the Tigers is 3-2-0.

Oct. 5—Navy (home)—(6-1-2)—Rated in many pre-season polls as a "Top Ten" finisher . . . . Coach Eddie Erdelatz has stars in his eyes as he gazes across many familar faces since the Middies lost little via graduation . . . . The sailors will be big, rugged and well balanced . . . . The Navy line will average around 213 lbs. and thats' a lot of beef . . . . Experience will be a great asset to the Midshipmen . . . . The two clubs did not meet last year but the Middies hold a lifetime mark of 4-0 against the Tar Heels.

Oct. 11—Miami, Fla. (away)—(8-1-1)—Another one of those "Top Ten" clubs . . . . Rated as one of the top independent teams in the country . . . . The Hurricane has lots of sophomores and lots of depth . . . . Will be tough and deep in the line and fast in the backfield . . . . Look for Coach Andy Gustafson's boys to throw some passes. There are some capable receivers around to snag them . . . . This is the Tar Heel's only game under the lights, Friday night in Coral Gables . . . . The two clubs have never met but twice and the Tar Heels won both of them.

Oct. 19—Maryland (away)—(2-7-1)—Jim Tatum's successor at College Park, Tommy Mont was plagued by hard luck in '56 . . . . First Uncle Sam claimed the great quarterback Frank Tamburello. Then the Terps struggled through the season injury riddled . . . . Maryland will probably never return to the powerhouse Tatum days, but should be a little stronger this season . . . . The Terps' roster, however, is still spotted by question marks . . . . The Tar Heels blasted Maryland, 34-6 here last season but the game was forfeited as were all Tar Heel wins because of an ineligible player . . . . All time slate against the Terps reads, 14-8-1.

Oct. 26—Wake Forest (away)—(2-5-3) — Deacon mentor Paul Amen was 'Coach of the Year in the ACC' in '56 . . . . Lost of All-American fullback Bill Barnes and quarterback Charlie Carpenter have left big gaps for Amen to fill . . . . The Deacon line should be big, strong and deep . . . Backfield will present a big problem to Amen . . . . There are entirely too many question marks for an adequate appraisal of the Deacs . . . . Carolina and Wake Forest played to a 6-6 deadlock last year . . . . Carolina leads in all-time mark, 35-16-2.

Nov. 2 — Tennessee (home) — (10-0-0)—Here is the most highly regarded club the Tar Heels will face this season . . . . The Vols are without the great Drum Majors who guided them to a 10-0 regular season finish in '56. Baylor stopped the Vols, 13-7 in the Sugar Bowl . . . . Coach Bowden Wyatt lost heavily through graduation, yet the Vols are still the unanimous pick for first place in the Southeastern Conference . . . . At first glance, the Vols seem greatly weakened but a strong bench and some outstanding newcomers should provide the Knoxville club with another good season . . . . Pre-season polls see Tennessee as one of the country's top five teams . . . . Tennessee 20, Carolina 0 in 1956 . . . . The Vols hold an overall lead of 17-8-1.

Nov. 9—South Carolina (home)—(7-3-0)—The Gamecocks stack up as the team with endless potential . . . . Their fine coach Warren Giese has what could be the best team in the ACC despite pessimism of Giese . . . . Duke is the top pick, but the Gamecocks will be tough . . . . They beat Duke in the season's opener last year and knocked the Blue Devils out of the Orange Bowl . . . . In halfbacks Alex Hawkins and King Dixon, the Gamecocks have one of the finest running duos in the country . . . . Loss of QB Mackie Prickett will hurt considerably but Giese has a good line and a spirited ball club . . . . Should give Duke a fight for ACC honors . . . . SC topped NC, 14-0 last season but Tar Heels hold big all-time edge, 22-6-4.

Nov. 23—Duke (away)—(5-4-1)—A coach with almost everything is Bill Murray of the Blue Devils . . . . The Tar Heel's perinial rivals are tabbed to finish among the "Top Ten." . . . . Only a couple of weak spots (quarterback and tackle) but tremendous potential to fill both . . . . Should have one of the South's finest backfields though it will be shallow . . . . Line will probably be better than adequate . . . . Fullback Harold McElhaney is tabbed "All-American" . . . . Bob Brodhead and Pryor Millner are called top notch quarterback prospects . . . . Duke beat the Tar Heels in '56, 21-6 and hold all-time margin of 23-17-3.

Nov. 30—Virginia (home)—(3-7-0)—Coach Ben Martin has been hit hard by graduation and the 1956 squad was nothing glorious . . . . Despite Martin's belief that his club will be better, it's hard to predict anything exciting for the Cavaliers . . . . One big asset is that there were no backfield losses . . . . The Cavalier's have an outstanding passer in quarterback Nelson Yarborough and fullback Jim Bakhtiar could be great . . . . End Fred Polzer was leading passcatcher in conference last season . . . . Other than those three, the Cavaliers don't seem to have anything outstanding . . . . Carolina defeated Virginia, 21-7, in Charlottesville last season and have a life-time mark of 32-26-3 against the Virginians.

BEST DON'T ALWAYS WIN

UNC Coach Jim Tatum gave a shining example the other day of how a team can lose despite the odds. One year his Maryland team out-gained North Carolina State offensively 499 yards to 86, but still lost the ball game, 16-14. State hadn't won a game all year at the time.

TULLAI IMPRESSED

UNC assistant football coach Fred Tullai was very impressed with the Minnesota spring football practice. The Gophers, who are pre-season favorites to cop the Big Ten honors, had Tullai as a guest for a week last Spring.

Booters Look For Better Things In '57

By LARRY CHEEK

An expectedly much improved Carolina soccer squad will begin practice here Monday with their sights set on snapping out of a disastrous slump that sent them down to three straight shutout defeats at the conclusion of the 1956 season.

Last year's Tar Heel booters breezed through their first four games without a loss, then staged an about face and finished with an 4-3 record. It was not good enough to match conference champion or runners-up Duke and Virginia.

These three league powerhouses were the shutout conquerors of Carolina in the homestretch. The Tar Heels, loaded with sophomore talent last year, simply fell apart under the pressure of intense competition.

The '57 Tar Heel booters are one year older and ready for a concerted effort for the conference championship and an end to the Maryland monopoly that has existed since the formation of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Terps have won the loop title every year, and have not been beaten in conference competition. Duke and Virginia are reportedly better this year, and should be strong challengers along with the Tar Heels.

Coach Marvin Allen will welcome eleven lettermen and, according to Allen, a choice group of sophomores, at 10 a.m. Monday for the first practice session. Leading the returning veterans will be senior captain Bill Blair. Also on hand for the new campaign will be Dave Corkey, Ted Smith, Coleman Barks, Pete Killinger, Bob Borden, Ted Jones, Frank Butler, Tom Rand, Jim Purks, Ricky Grauman, and Ted Youhanna.

John Ghnanin, Bill Thompson and Bill Stem, outstanding members of last year's powerful freshman team, should add punch to the Tar Heel's attack.

"We should be better than last year," say Coach Allen. "We've got some experienced boys now, and they shouldn't crumble like last season." The Tar Heel coach termed Maryland "the team to beat," but also acknowledged Duke and Virginia as strong contenders.

The future looks bright for soccer here at Chapel Hill. Only three seniors, Blair, Jones and Butler, are listed on the squad. This year's team will be built around the classy group of juniors on hand.

Freshmen will begin practicing after classes start on the 19th. Handling the coaching duties will be Chuck Hartman, a grad student who was varsity goalie last season. "Anyone, whether experienced or not, is invited to try out," said Coach Allen. "Many of our boys on last year's starting team had never played soccer before coming to Carolina."

The Tar Heels open their season here Sept. 30 against Roanoke College on Fetzer Field. The schedule calls for four home contests and a like number on the road.

Air Of Optimism Felt In Tar Heels' Camp

By BILL KING

The proverbial air of optimism pervades the Carolina football camp this season as the Tar Heels, some 65 strong, prepare for their first campaign against N. C. State here Sept. 21.

Under the guiding hand of Jim Tatum, in his second current season as head man of the gridiron clan, the Tar Heels have been pushing the dummies around Navy Field since Sept. 2.

Nobody is more optimistic than the articulate Tatum whose all-time coaching mark stacks up with the very finest in the land. The man who won football coaching fame at Maryland and Oklahoma is back at his alma mater filled with confidence that his Tar Heels will be "greatly improved."

Like everybody concerned with Carolina football, Tatum would like to forget the 1956 season, the most disastrous in his football career. The Tar Heels were able to win only two and tie one in '56, then had to forfeit those because of an ineligible player.

Tatum readily avers that 1957 will be better all around. For one thing there will be more depth. And there should be quality as well as quantity. A total of 23 lettermen and some fine prospective sophomore talent largely compensate for an approximate 20-man loss in '56.

Ask Tatum what his biggest asset is and he'll tell you that it's competition. "We're deep most everywhere," says the Tar Heel mentor. "Everybody's hustling because they know that nobody has a job nailed down." Thus, there should be no loafing on the practice fields.

By comparison, Tatum is as silent as Silent Sam when it comes to getting him to actually make any concrete predictions regarding his club's final won-lost record. Last season the Tar Heels were tabbed by Tatum and practically everybody else as much stronger than they actually were. This season Tatum seems to have adopted the "actions for words" philosophy.

Position-wise, the Tar Heels should have good balance everywhere. At present, fullback seems to be the biggest problem but Tatum feels that he has talent at that slot which will develop.

Tackle will be a strong spot. Letiermen Stuart Pell, Phil Blazer, and Leo Russavage will carry the burden but will have able assistance from a crop of young talent plus one or two old hands.

Guard is potentially the team's strongest position. The return of veteran Jack Lineberger along with newcomers Don Stallings, Ed Furjanic, and Russ Perry should give Carolina a formidable foundation. Perry is a transfer student from Mississippi State and Mars Hill.

Center Ronnie Koes has gotten over his injury suffered against South Carolina last season and will lead a strong group of pivot contingents that consists of sophomores Dick Need and Jim Davis along with veteran Fred Swearingen. According to Tatum, Need and Davis are coming along "just fine" in pre-season drills.

At the flank positions, Co-Captain Buddy Payne and lettermen Jim Jones and Don Kemper are the stalwarts. In this trio, the Tar Heels boast potentially three of the ACC's strongest contenders for individual honors.

At quarterback, the one big question is senior Dave Reed's physical condition. Reed has a trick knee which Tatum is afraid will limit his services. The Tar Heel coach is so concerned about Reed that he has abandoned his idea of switching alternate signal-caller Curt Hathaway to halfback. Hathaway is a fine quarterback but is no equal to Reed as a passer. Hathaway will probably be the number two QB, but Tatum hailed sophomores Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe as a couple of "excellent" prospects.

The Tar Heels have a wealth of talent at halfback. Transfer Jim Schuler is a fine prospect and, along with Wade Smith, is giving '56 starter Emil DeCantis a lot of competition. Tatum has also switched quarterback Ron Marquette to half. Dany Droze is another top threat for a halfback slot and Don Coker, the sensational high school star who just became eligible, is getting the feel of halfback after a year of inactivity. Daly Goff is the darkhorse halfback threat.

Tatum has the horses at fullback. Giles Gaca is probably the top candidate but, like Reed, has a questionalbe physical status. Bob Shupin, a transfer, is another top fullback candidate as are John Haywood and Ed Lipski. Tatum previously had Coker running at fullback but switched him to half when he didn't "take to the position" as fast as expected.

Kenan Stadium--Unique In Setting And Beauty

In a natural valley about two thousand feet from the center of the campus of the University and just above the spot long known as the Meeting of the Waters, there is a natural amphitheatre, easily approached by paths that follow the lay of the land.

The brook that flows through this valley has cut a ravine so that the floor of the stream is level and smooth and the banks rise with equal steepness on either side.

Here is the site of Kenan Memorial Stadium. In the completeness and harmony of its appointments, the convenience of its seating and the beauty of its design and location, Kenan Memorial Stadium is unique among the stadia of America.

The stadium, truly one of Chapel Hill's beauty spots, was a gift of William Rand Kenan Jr., a distinguished and loyal son of the University of the Class of 1894, and constructed as a memorial to his mother, Mary (Hargrave)), and his father, William Rand Kenan.

The original cost was $275,000, but the property is valued at many times that figure now, of course. After the stadium proper was built, a field house was added at one end of the field, where both the visiting and home teams dress for games.

Construction of the stadium was begun in November, 1926, and completed in August, 1927. The first football game played there was between Carolina and Davidson on Nov. 12. However, the formal opening and dedication did not take place until the game with Virginia on Thanksgiving Day. The Tar Heels won 14-13.

The stadium, as originally built, seated 24,000. For many years however, an ingenious arrangement of portable grandstands, used for all the games, has increased the capacity to 43,917 seats. On occasions even this capacity has been increased, and games with Virginia, Duke, Notre Dame and Texas have accommodated as many as 46,000.

On one side of the stadium is a guest box, used by Trustees of the University and other special guests. The press box, of similar outward design, is located on the other side, directly opposite. Gifts from Mr. Kenan enabled a complete rebuilding of these structures in 1950. The new press box is of unique design, different from the sprawling press boxes and highly functional for reporters, radio men and photographers and has been highly praised for its beauty and utility.

The stadium is used primarily for football games but on occasions other functions are held there, including the annual Commencement exercises of the University, conducted in the twilight.

Bud Carson Optimistic About Frosh Gridders

The second crop of Tatum-recruited freshmen has been practicing on Navy Field since September 6, this year under the direction of one of the newest members of the Tatum staff, Leon (Bud)) Carson.

Carson, a tailback for the Tar Heels back in 1948-51, feels that this year's freshman squad is the best that has ever been assembled at Carolina. Forty-one of the sixty-seven men are native Tar Heels. Ten of the frosh are from Pennsylvania.

Carson wasted no time in getting to the head - knocking. The second day of practice, shoulder pads and helmets were put to use. On Monday the yearlings began scrimmaging the varsity. They will continue to battle the "upperclassmen" until their first game on October 4 against the Maryland freshmen.

Carson

This will be Coach Carson's third year as a football mentor. For two years he guided the Scottsdale, Pa. High School very successfully with only one loss and a tie.

After graduating in 1952 Carson joined the Marines. In 1954 the top Marine and Air Force teams met in the Rice Bowl. Carson, a halfback for Quantico, was voted the most valuable player.

"We have not been practicing long enough to pick any outstanding men," the freshman coach stated, "but the whole squad arrived in very good shape. I have noticed that we should have a strong backfield."

Former Star Sutton Now With Redskins

Sutton, a Morehead Scholar here, will begin Med School at Tennessee in December and will attend school during the off season.

Redskin Coach Joe Kuharich is high on Sutton and is giving the ex-Tar Heel star every chance of making the team. Recently Ed has been running with the number two Washington backfield unit that consist of rookies Jim Podoley, a halfback from Central Michigan, Don Bosseler, and veteran quarterback Al Dorow, an All-American fullback at Miami.

Frosh Have 67 Men; Five Games

Sixty-seven candidates reported for opening day workouts with the Carolina Frosh football team. The Tar Babies have five games slated for the season.

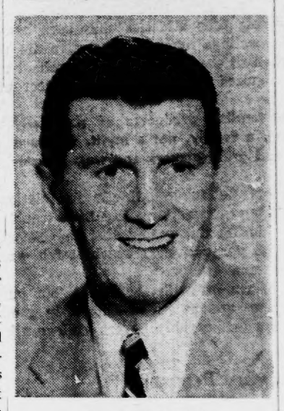
Them Tar Heels Was Good; Went To Kansas--And Won

By BILL KING

There was this basketball team, see. Tar Heels I believe they called 'em. I took a likin' to 'em first time I ever seen 'em and that was right at the first of the season last year. Decided I was gonna follow that team right through the season.

Fellow named McGuire was coach and a nicer fellow I ain't never seen. I didn't know him too good but you'd a thought he was an old buddy the way he'd smile and shake my hand down in the dressin' room after a game. I always went down after a game to pat the boys on the back and they was real nice to me tho didn't none of 'em know me from Abe Lincoln's housecat.

I remember them all. This fellow Rosenbluth, why he was the smoothest playin' fellow I ever seen. You mighta heard of him; made All-American and set all kinds of scorin' records. Had the the softest touch with a basketball—man you just oughta seen him.



He was the big man I reckon but I swear the rest of them boys was the durndest I have ever set my two eyes on. Rosenbluth, he'd mess up sometimes and not make but 12 or 15 points and here would come this boy Brennan or this little guard Kearns and one of 'em would get about 22. Had this fellow Cunningham and you ain't never seen the likes in your life. That fellow could just naturally drive you crazy on defense and he could score too, tho he didn't shoot much. There was the big guy playin' center. Name was Quigg and he was a goodun. Down in Kansas City . . Well I'll tell you 'bout that a little later.

Talk about your benches. There won't much there, but what there was was real quality. Lemme see, there was Young and Lotz and Rosemond and, lemme think. Oh yeh, Holland and Searcy and Radovich. That was the lot but there was a heapa ball player in that group.

They had this fellow Freeman. He wern't no player but was the assistant coach. I reckon he I'm right proud of that, and I reckon Mr. McGuire appreciated it cause the next time I seen him he took holda my hand and shook it and was a beamin' all over.

Well, I wanna tell you a little about the season. They was goin' along winnin' ball games to beat the band and I figured they was gonna do all right. Course I figured they would lose a few but I predicted a winning season way back before Christmas.

I'm a danged fool if them boys didn't' come into this here tourney at Christmas time, Dixie Classics I believe they called it and they hadn't lost not one game. They had this tournament in this great big collism, collusem, well anyway it was a great big building that helt a lotta people in Raleigh. I liked it specially cause it wern't so hard to find a place to sit like in Chapel Hill where they got a little bitty building.

My boys didn't have no trouble in this tournament cept in the final game against Wake Forest. I was really sweatin' that one but that won't the last time I could be head coach most anywhere he pleased cause he shore knew his basketball. He was always jumpin' around and making these here signals. He was a sharp one.

It was tellin' you how nice this guy McGuire was. Well, it just so happens that I helped buy him a Cadillac. Yes sir, I give this fellow a dollar one day and he said that was all that was needed to give Mr. McGuire a little token of appreciation. I reckon got scared when we was playin' Wake Forest. They was always givin' everybody the dickens.

Now I ain't got time to go into all the details about the season. I'll just tell you that my ball club went right on beatin' everybody in sight and without a whole lotta trouble.

They went back to that big place in Raleigh again and this time they won the conference championship. They didn't have no trouble in the finals this time cause they played Wake Forest in the semi-finals. Rosenbluth, he won the game for them with this beautiful hook shot right at the end of the game. They beat South Carolina in the finals the next night and that made them winnin' 27 straight games. By this time, the newspaper boys was all excited about them goin' undefeated and settin' some kind of record.

They went up North for this Regional stuff which they had to win to go to the National Tournament out in Kansas City. They won first in New York, then two games in Philly. That last game in Philly give them a new college record of 30 wins in one season and it was on to Kansas City.

I dont' like to boast but I reckon I'm a mite proud that I got to go with 'em to Kansas City. Course, I seen the time while I was out there that I wished I'd never heard of the Tar Heels. Took 10 years off'a my life, that's what it did to me.

You ever had to sit through six overtimes in two nights? Don't suppose you have. I tell you it ain't no fun. That's what they did, tho, three overtimes against Michigan State and three more the next night against Kansas. But after that last game they had won the National Basketball Championship.

That fella Quigg I was tellin' you about. He made two free throws in the last six seconds against Kansas that won the ball-game.

I didn't get to shake Mr. McGuire's hand after the last game 'cause there was too many people in the dressin' room and I was too weak to have any grip anyway. I ain't seen Mr. McGuire since then but I hear he's still at Chapel Hill and one of these days I'm gonna walk right into his office and say to him, "Mr. McGuire, you owes me a handshake."

Duke will be the top team in the ACC this fall, will wind up among the ten top teams in the nation, and will win a post-season invitation to the Orange Bowl, Francis Wallace predicts in his 18th Annual Football Preview.

"Signals from Tobaccoland," says Wallace, "indicate that Duke, which usually barely filters into the top twenty, will blaze its way good, like a deep squad should, to a much higher spot en route to the Orange Bowl. Could be — with backs Harold McElhaney and Wray Carlton and guard Roy Hord. But Smilin' Bill Murray can't just puff through a full Conference schedule plus visitors like Navy, Rice and Georgia Tech."

Carolina will wind up the 1957 football season with a record of six wins and four losses, Wallace predicts.

"Super-salesman James Moore Tatum will be back at North Carolina for his second season with the store stocked with some of the sophs he must have sold," says Wallace, "especially Don Coker, backfield item."

Wallace predicts that North Carolina State will be dangerous with ten regulars, including back Dick Christy while Wake Forest reports better depth for Paul Amen's prayertul second season.

Wallace says that this year, with coaches copying and trading formations and play-patterns, the technical picture will be kaleidoscopic.

For his pre-season All?America team, Wallace chooses the following players: Ends, Jimmy Phillips, Auburn, and Richard Lasse, Syracuse; Tackles, Lou Michaels, Kentucky, and Alex Karras, Iowa; Guards, William Krisher, Oklahoma, and Daniel Currie, Michigan State; Center Charles Brueckman of Pitt; Backs, Clendon Thomas of Oklahoma, John Crow of Texas A&M, Robert Cox of Minnesota and Phil King of Vanderbilt.

Tar Heels Can Refuel

George Barclay, former North Carolina head coach and first Tar Heel All-American, has the gasoline to give in case the 1957 Tatum grid machine runs down. Barclay, who accepted an invitation to join Tatum's staff on a seasonable basis this year, owns and operates a service station in Chapel Hill during the off-season.

Intramural Activity

Intramural Program At Carolina Should Be Best Ever This Year

By DAVE WIBLE

"Rah! Rah! Rah!! Delta!!" is heard at one end of the field. From the opposite end comes the cry, "Rah! Rah! Rah! Sigma!!" So ends another intramural contest as the opposing teams move off the field of battle.

The yells above and those of almost every other organization on campus whether it be Pegram Dormitory or the Psi sorority will be heard over and over this coming year as each and every dorm, fraternity house, and group tries to show its worth on the athletic fields and courts.

The Carolina intramurals department offers numerous sports from wrestling (men's) to fencing for team and individual competition.

In team competition there are four divisions: Fraternity blue division—for the more experienced fraternity men—fraternity white division—for those who do not make the blue team; dormitory and independent divisions — for dorm men and independents who wish to form a team, and the graduate division—for graduate men such as Med and Dental students.

In each dorm and fraternity there will be elected—or appointed—an intramural manager who is responsible for team organization. The managers in each of the divisions meet to discuss the program and acts as correspondent between the Intramural Department and their respective teams.

There are individual tournaments offered by the department as well as mixed activities such as the Co-Rec Carnival which will be held this fall.

Also this fall there will be a rod and gun field meet. The annual event held at the Durham Wildlife Club Area offers competition in archery, bait casting, target shooting, trap shooting and fishing.

At the end of the year the department sponsors its annual banquet where final awards are given to the outstanding intramural teams and individual performers of the year. Awards are given to the team in each division which compiles the greatest number of points on an organization point scale during the year.

Supervising the entire intramural program is Mr. Walter Rabb, director. He with his assistants Tommy Johnson, Bill Bailey, and field supervisor Ralph Hunt, coordinate the program, plan tournaments and supervise the activities.

Harrier Prospects Good Despite Loss Of Beatty

By DAVE WIBLE

The running of Jim Beatty, Carolina's two time All-American and holder of numerous ACC cross-country and distance-run records, will be only a memory for Tar Heel cross-country fans from now on, but the majority of last year's conference champion will be returning to defend its crown.

Beatty, who changed his Carolina blue and white uniform for that of Army khaki this summer, led Carolina's 1956 harrier team to a 12-1 season and the conference title. This year's team will feature four of last year's outstanding eight-man squad plus two topnotch sophomores who burned up ACC freshman competition last season.

The most prized new name on the varsity roster however, will be Wayne Bishop. The smooth striding junior had to sit out last season because of a leg injury. The injury has healed and he will be a top contender for the harrier's number one spot. As a freshman Bishop was undefeated, a feat not achieved since Beatty's first year on campus.

Recently married senior Everett Whatley as the team's captain will be the top returnee. A 4:16 miler during track season, he placed fifth in the conference cross-country meet last November. Junior Dave Scurlock will be another returnee fighting for first with Bishop and Whatley. Primarily a middle distance man, he won the conference championship in the 440 and 880 yard runs plus carrying the anchor leg of the Tar Heels champion mile—relay team last spring. He finished seventh in the cross country championships.

Filling out the returning lettermen are Howard Kahn and John Reaves both who finished in the top eleven at the ACC meet. Sophomores Cowles Liipfert and Fick Authur dominated ACC freshmen competition last year. Liipfert went undefeated until a twisted ankle hampered his style in the final two meets.

With this material on hand, head track and cross-country coach Dale Ranson feels that Carolina will have another strong team as a contender for the conference honors. Track coach at Carolina since 1927, Ranson's teams have never finished lower than fourth in cross-country competition. In the five year history of the ACC, the Tar Heels have always finished either first or second.

One of the state's top track and cross-country promotion men, Ransom has urged incoming freshmen to join the team.' 'Freshman cross-country offers splendid opportunity to any boy with moderate ability who is willing to work and train," says Ransom. "It has been our experiences that many boys who have participated in other sports in high school find that they have a better opportunity in track and cross country." He added.

Until the regular class sessions begin, several members of the varsity squad will be working out on Fetzer Field twice daily, 8 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Ranson has invited interested freshmen to join these workouts. After school begins the team will work out once a day at 4 p.m.

Old Man Returns

The old man of the University of North Carolina football team is tackle Stan Leftwich, a senior of 26 years. Leftwich was on the 1955 squad, but missed last year. He's back now at 6-1, 215 pounds and should bolster a group of tackles which includes only two other seniors, letterman Stuart Pell and Hap Setzer.

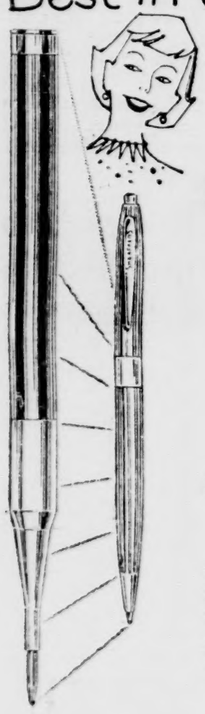
The Night This Village Was A Real Mardi-Gras

New arrivals on the Carolina campus should have been here a year earlier—or, to be more exact, six months earlier. That's when the campus experienced an eruption that would put a volcano to shame.

It was on the night of March 23. All was serene in the sleeply little village of Chapel Hill. Serene that is until about 10:30. All of a sudden there burst forth one tremendous clamour and in a matter of minutes, toilet tissue was flowing from the trees, telephone lines and everything else. Horns were blowng madly and the aforementioned sleepy little village was in a tizzy.

The occasion—Carolina had just won the National Basketball Championship. The minute the hoarse radio and TV announcers gave the word that Carolina was the champ, the proverbial roof fell in.

The celebration lasted until the week hours of the morning. People came from all around to join in the victory festivities. This was truly an historical occasion in Chapel Hill.



The next day when the Tar Heels flew in from Kansas City, thousands of people met them at the airport and another boistrous celebration ensued.

That was six months ago and things are pretty quiet again on the home front. But you can bet your sweet life that many of the old students haven't put the confetti away. There's always 1958 and when the early spring rolls around again, it's be time for another eruption in Chapel Hill.

University Student Goverment Possesses Proud Heritage

Executive Branch Wields Top Power

Four major officers control the reins of student government's executive branch:

The student body president who weilds vast appointive and representative power;

The vice president who chairs the tremendously important Student Legislature and succeeds the president in event of absence or incapacity;

The secretary who maintains student government records and arranges for preservation of permanent archives;

The treasurer who has primary responsibility for distribution and categorization of student monies from block fees—$100,000-plus.

The student body president, of course, plays the dominant role in University politics. His is the power to appoint various committees, appoint a cabinet, administer and enforce laws enacted by the Student Legislature, veto legislation, serve as ex officio member of many committees and boards.

President Evans, as must all presidents, must deliver a State of the Campus Address each year. His address usually outlines various campus problems upon which he wishes to concentrate student governmental power.

Presidents may also make periodical recommendations to the Student Legislature. Such was the case when last year's President Bob Young of Asheville called the attention of student lawmakers to the "intellectual migration" of University faculty due to disproportionate salary scales.

The primary role played by student body vice presidents is speakership of the Student Legislature. As speaker, the veep may assert a great deal of control upon the flow of legislation through the legislative hopper. He also succeeds to the presidential chair in the event of the president's incapacity or absence.

Student body secretarial tasks have been considerably lightened by the institution of a student government executive secretary who performs the arduous task of maintaining governmental archives. The position now entails, in the main, regulation of correspondance.

Student government treasurership entails the exceedingly important task of disbursing monies appropriated student government from student block fees. It also entails chairmanship of the Budget Committee which initially decides just who gets what proportion of the $100,000-plus student budget.

The four officials are elected during the spring election by the entire student body. Any student is eligible to run providing he or she maintains a "C" average.

Student Executives Pose As New Year Opens

Legislative Branch Codifies The Law

Fifty students—half elected in the spring and half in the fall—comprise the University Student Legislature.

The body will continue this fall the Twenty-Third Assembly begun after the spring election on April 2.

Legislature representatives are nominated by either the University or Student Party at nominating sessions held prior to spring and fall elections. Elected representatives — representing either town or dormitory districts—are sworn in at sessions directly following election.

The legislature passes bills and resolutions throughout the year, but its primary function is allocation and regulation of a $100,000-plus budget taken from student block fees.

Chief legislature officers are:

Speaker pro tempore—substitute speaker who chairs sessions in the speaker's absence;

Clerk—official secretary who maintains legislature rolls and preserves and distributes measures passed or defeated;

Parliamentarian—official "Roberts Ruler" who decides questions of parliamentary procedure;

Ways and Means Committee chairman — official who chairs committee through which all legislation, excluding money bill, must pass before reaching the legislative agenda.

Finance Committee chairman —official who chairs committee through which all money measures must pass before their fate is decided on the legislature floor;

Rules Committee chairman—official whose primary function is maintaining high attendance —his is the power to unseat representatives who miss more than two meetings without excuses.

Official powers of the legislature, as stated in the Student Constitution, include:

(1) To levy all student fees, except athletic fees, up to a maximum twenty dollars per calendar year.

(2) To appropriate funds for student publications and all agencies of student government.

(3) To ratify all appointments made by the student body president.

(4) To make laws concerning elections.

(5) To impeach — by two-thirds vote—any elected official convicted of mal-performance of duty.

The legislature is also regarder as a pot pourri of student opinion. Thus resolutions concerning the legislature's feelings on such controversial issues as segregation-integration are generally scrutinized by interested persons throughout the state and nation.

Two Political Parties Compete For Student Voter's Support

University students may affiliate themselves with either of two major political parties—University or Student.

Editors of the four major publications and members of the campus judiciary branch are recommended to the student body by bi-partisan selections boards. They should not, it is contended, be affiliated with a partisan political party.

The Study Party accepts members after they have attended two party meetings and have paid nominal fees.

The University Party accepts members as representatives of campus organizations such as fraternities and sororities, or after the prospective member has submitted a petition listing 25 signatures.

Thus the Student Party is composed primarily of dormitory residents, while the University Party is composed primarily of fraternity and sorority members. There are Greeks and independents in both parties, however.

Parties meet weekly. The UP ordinarily meets on Tuesday night. The Student Party usually meets on Monday night.

Whit Whitfield of Durham is the present chairman of the Student Party. Harry Braxton of Chase City, Va., is chairman of the University Party.

Other party officials include executive committee members (The SP calls this group its advisory board), party vice-chairman, party secretary and party treasurer.

A recently established party official is the whip whose responsibility it is to herd party legislators into legislative caucuses and meetings.

Dues which party members are required to pay are used for occasional socials and as assistance to finance campaigns of party members who seek campus political offices. This, of course, is an advantage for political office seekers. Party dues defray campaign expenditures.

The Student Party currently boasts three members in student government's executive branch—the president, the vice president and the treasurer.

The University Party, on the other hand, controls the legislative branch by a slight margin of legislature seats.

Student Government's Judiciary Organization Corrects Offenders; Not Intended To Punish

The University Honor System—or the obligation of students to discipline themselves—has been called the backbone of student self-government.

The Honor System has two main tenets or rules under which it operates:

The Honor Code which puts students on their honor not to lie, cheat or steal and to report anyone seen doing so.

The Campus Code which puts students upon their honor to behave like gentlemen or ladies at all times and to report anyone seen not doing so.

Violations of the Honor Code are handled by the Mens' or Women's Honor Council. Violations of the Campus Code are handled by the Student Council if said violations are committed by men students, by the Women's Council if said violations are committed by women students.

Students interested in serving on the student judiciary may submit their application to a bi-partisan selections board prior to the fall election or the spring election. Said board endorses an unlimited number of applicants.

The Student Council, which possesses original jurisdiction over violations of the Campus Code by men and cases involving the constitutionality of legislative or executive acts, is composed of representatives from the various departmental courts and six students elected by the student body at large—three rising seniors in the spring and two juniors and a sophomore in the fall.

The Men's Council is composed of four seniors, four juniors, three sophomores, one freshman, one pharmacy student and one graduate student. The representatives—three juniors, two sophomores and a freshman elected in the fall and the rest elected in the spring—serve for terms of one year.

The Women's Council is composed of three seniors, four juniors, one graduate student and one student nurse. The members serve for one year terms with juniors elected in the fall, others elected during spring elections.

Appellate jurisdiction is handled by a Student-Faculty Judicial Council. The council handles all appeals from courts of original jurisdiction. It consists of the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Councils and the Student Council chairman, plus three faculty members designated by the faculty executive committee.

Students accused of violations of either of the two major codes have several basic and inherrent rights, among these:

(1) Presumption of innocence until proved guilty.

(2) The right to due notice and a fair hearing.

(3) The right to face the accuser.

(4) The privilege of assistance by a member of the judicial body, if requested.

Chairman of the three major courts are:

Mac Patton, Student Council; Miss Kit Whitehurst, Women's Council; George Ragsdale, Men's Council.

TRADITION

Entrusted in the hands of these three students is a priceless tradition of honor and student autonomy. Every student, according to officials in the various councils, must take honor seriously and energetically pursue the tenets which the system teaches before the tradition of student self-discipline may continue successfully.

Council officials and student government officials in general insist that the various penalities —from unofficial probations to suspension from school—are not intended as punishment but as measures of correction.

Students who witness other students violating either of the two major codes are urged to ask the violator to turn himself in, rather than immediately submitting his name to an instructor or a member of the judiciary.

Men's Dorms Regulated By Council

The chief governing body of men's dormitories is the Inter-dormitory Council, composed of the president and an IDC representative from each men's dormitory.

The council meets on alternate Wednesday nights in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East Bldg.

Primary purposes of the IDC, as stated under the Student Constitution, are:

(1) To make rules affecting conduct of men in dormitories.

(2) To represent dormitory men in dealings with the University.

(3) To promote social activities for the benefit of dorm residents.

Dormitory officers are elected according to a recently established split electoral policy which insures, it is claimed, more continuity in the dormitory program.

The president and vice president of each dormitory are elected in the spring election. Thus they are prepared to begin immediate programming for the dormitory in the fall. Other dormitory officers — secretary, treasurer and IDC representative —are elected in the fall.

IDC officialdom consists of the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, court chairman and various committee heads.

Tom Walters of Tarboro was elected last spring to head the council during the 1957-58 scholastic year. Walters succeeded Sonny Hallford of Rocky Mount.

A major work of last year's council was endeavor which led to installation of telephones on the second and fourth floor of men's dormitories. Sweeping changes were also made in the council and ID Court By-Laws.

Four Major Publications Offer Students Many-Facet Reading

Four major publications are published by University students —The Daily Tar Heel, The Yackety Yack, The Carolina Quarterly and Ram-Ewe.

Finances for all four are handled through the Carolina student government Publications Board, a board which exerts no editorial control but which regulates the budgets of the various publications.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL

The Daily Tar Heel student newspaper is published every day except Monday and is delivered to subscribers each morning.

The publication is operated entirely by students, and no editorial control is exerted by the faculty or administration. It is affiliatedr in no way with the University School of Journalism. It does, however, invite journalism students to gain experience through working on the staff.

Editor Neil Bass, senior from Nashville, N. C., extends a cordial invitation to all students to enlist themselves on The Daily Tar Heel staff. The paper publishes from four to ten pages, depending upon volume of advertising.

The Daily Tar Heel, served by the wires of the Associated Press, has offices located in the south end of Graham Memorial Student Union. It is one of the oldest college dailies in the South.

THE YACKETY YACK

Last year's annual, under the direction of Editor Tommy Johnson, was one of the largest ever published. It had 456 pages.

The book was organized according to months with activities occurring in September appearing first. Its cover was silver and black.

This year's annual will be published under the direction of Gene Whitehead, editor.

Offices of the Yackety Yack are located in the basement of Graham Memorial. All students are invited to assist in its publication.

Every student receives a "Yack," as it is called, sometime near the end of May. Students pay for the book at time of registration.

CAROLINA QUARTERLY

Creative talents of University students are given full vent in the Carolina Quarterly literary magazine. The magazine is ordinarily published three times annually by students with faculty assistance.

The Quarterly is published by students on a voluntary subscription basis. The magazine is underwritten through constitutionally-delegated authority by the University Publications Board.

RAM-EWE

Ram-Ewe, under direction of Editor Bill Michael, will publish on a voluntary subscription basis.

Michael will have as his assistant Manley Springs from Charlotte. Springs, under mandate of the bi-partisan selections board, will serve as business manager.

Due to its recent creation, Ram-Ewe will be completely open to new personnel. Any students interested may contact Michael or Springs.

GM Is Hub Of UNC Extra-Curriculars

By CLARK JONES

The student union building—better known as Graham Memorial—is the center of student extracurricular life. Let's take a look at the different rooms in the building and briefly note what they are used for.

The place to start is on the main floor. The main attraction here is the spacious lounge where students come to read, talk or maybe just relax, listening to music piped through from the information office's hi-fi set.

Sometimes you will see two students engaged in a game of chess. On Sunday nights, the Petite Musicales are presented here.

At the north end of the building is a combination coffee room-kitchen. Here you can buy for a dime, a cup of coffee and pastries from a machine.

You walk through the coffee room-kitchen and go all the way down to the end of the hall. Here is the information office, where the person in charge will check out to you ping-pong equipment, maybe play you a record—GM recently acquired 100 new hi-fidelity records—or simply provide you with information.

The two stairways leading to the second floor each have mezzanine landings about midway. On the south end is the assistant director's Eleanor Riggins office and mimeograph and embossograph machines. The north end is the office of the Carolina Quarterly, student literary magazine.

SECOND FLOOR

At the top of the stairs is the Student Activities Fund office. Headed by J. H. Dedmonds, the office takes care of the accounting for all the campus activities.

Down the hall past the newspaper offices and the fund office are the Roland Parker Lounges 1, 2 and 3. Large meetings are held in these rooms, which hold 150-200 persons.

Next to the president's office is the Woodhouse Conference Room. Meetings and conferences of different sorts are held here. The room gets its name from Edward James Woodhouse, a political science professor here from 1926-54.

Adjoining this room is the Council Room, where violators of the campus and honor codes are tried by the men's women's councils. The Women's Residence Council also holds meetings here.

At the end of the hall on the left is the GMAB office. The Grail Room, also on this floor, is across from the GMAB office. The order of the Holy Grail meets in this room, considered by many the nicest room upstairs. Other small conferences are also held here.

BASEMENT

The basement is the last floor in the "tour". The APO Room is the first stop. APO, Carolina's service fraternity, holds meetings here. Other small groups meet here also.

Just off the APO Room is the ping-pong room. The room has two brand new tables inside and two old tables in the alleyway just outside the room.

About midway down the hall are several vending machines, where you can buy a snack lunch between games of pool in the pool room, right across the hall. The room, open to coeds as well as Carolina gentlemen, is the most-used room in the building.

Next to the pool room is the Rendezvous Room, used for quiet recreation purposes. It is complete with a jukebox, piano and has 20 tables which will seat up to 40 couples. The room is also often used for small Graham Memorial-sponsored parties.

The Yackety Yack, the student annual, has its office just beyond the vending machines.

Around the corner on the right is the darkroom, recently renovated, with new equipment installed. Lockers are available for rent. Graham Memorial furnishes everything but chemicals, which you must obtain yourself.

The main obligation of those who use the room is to clean up the place before leaving.

The barbershop, located at the end of the hall, serves the students with 90 cent haircuts, the cheapest in town. The barbers — there are three — can afford the lower rates due to having no overhead.

Graham Memorial gives them the space with the understanding that the price will not exceed 90 cents.

Graham Memorial Activities Board

From morning til night, every day of the school year, one building on this campus is constantly in use—the library.

Even the toughest football game down in Kenan Pines won't keep some students from the library. It will be used many times during the coming months for reference work, reading assignments and a place for quiet textbook study.

But the library also has its lighter side. It is notorious as a date bureau, the perfect place for Carolina Gentlemen and their dates to study together.

Each room of the library building is dedicated to a specific purpose. In all those rooms are approximately 800,000 volumes containing almost any information a student could wish. The library was named for Louis R. Wilson, longtime professor of library science here.

The largest room in the library is the Reference Room. It is on the second floor in the front of the building and is a place where students often seek and find quiet surroundings to pour out their meditations on their studies.

One of the most popular rooms is the General College library. Freshmen will be spending a lot of time in this room reading for first-year subjects.

Other places of interest are: the Rare Book Room, which houses many literary treasures from long times past; Current Affairs and Public Documents Reading Room, a bureau of information on current information and thoughts; the Sir Walter Raleigh Rooms furnished as in 1600; the Early Carolina Rooms equipped as in 1740; the Print and Map Rooms; the Assembly Room and the Bull's Head Bookshop, where students, faculty and townspeople browse, borrow and buy the latest books.

Individual libraries are also assigned to different departments of instruction. Exhibits are also displayed in the halls of the library.

Special collections of importance include: The Southern Historical Collection of more than two and a half manuscripts, the North Carolina Collection of items relating to the state, the Hanes Collection recording the development of the book;

The Whitaker Collections of Johnson, Dickens and Cruikshank, the Jenkins Collection of public documents, the Nolen Collection of city an dregional planning, the Archibald Henderson Collection of Materials Relating to George Bernard Shaw;

The August Thomas Collection of dramatic manuscripts, together with unusual collections of American drama, Spanish drama, Shakespeare, Raleigh, Wolfe, folklore, Latin, American studies, Southern literature, romance languages, World Wars I and II, maps, prints, graphic arts, and books by and about the Negro.

Librarians and staff members are always willing to help students in any way possible. They are there to serve you and do just that.

INELIGIBLES WORKING HARD

There are three players on the UNC football team who, though ineligible, are working just as hard as the rest of the squad. End Dick Schroeder, tackle Fred Mueller and guard Larry Donovan are all returnees from the service and won't be eligible until next year.

ALL STARS

It seems the high school all-star football players of 1956 are flocking to UNC these days under the new Jim Tatum reconstruction plan.

Honorary Groups Afford Reward For All Endeavors

The highest honorary organizations at Carolina are the Order of the Golden Fleece for men and the Valkyries for women.

Golden Fleece members are juniors, seniors, graduate students and faculty members showing the highest character, versatility and ability in University life.

The Order was founded in 1903 through the interest and encouragemen of the late Horace Williams. Its purpose is to cut across sectional boundaries of student interest and to honor the outstanding men in all fields of campus endeavor as the occasion should arise.

The tapping of members into the Fleece, which is held each year in public ceremony in Memorial Hall, is the only public function of the Fleece.

The Valkyries is limited to approximately two per cent of the undergraduate coed enrollment. Founded to promote leadership and service among women students, they tap new members in secretive pre-dawn ceremonies.

Members are chosen for membership on the basis of leadership, character, scholarship and unselfish service.

The Order of the Holy Grail is an honorary service organization composed of outstanding Carolina men selected each year.

Thirteen rising juniors and seniors are honored with membership, six dorm men, six fraternity men, and the delegata, the choice being made largely on character and achievement.

The Grail is dedicated to improving the Carolina way of life by awarding scholarships to deserving students, sponsoring informal dances, handling senior rings and invitations, aiding other organizations and sponsoring campus improvements.

The Order of the Old Well is an honorary organization open to both men and women. Members are selected for their outstanding participation in campus activities by a point system.

University And New Officialdom Upon A New Era

Friday, Aycock Head List Of New University Administration

A problem was solved for the University and a question answered for the state when William Clyde Friday was inaugurated as president of the Consolidated University on May 9.

Another important personnel problem was solved on June 1, when William B. Aycock assumed duties as University at Chapel Hill chancellor. Aycock replaced Chancellor Robert B. House who served the University for many years.

President Friday stated in his inaugural address, "I have found the consolidation, fathered by Gov. Gardner, interpreted by President Gray, was not for false economies.

"Consolidation was for the development, on a broad foundation, of a three-fold professional and graduate research center serving the most intense specialization. It was for a unified administration, one Board of Trustees, one president and one budget."

Dr. Frank Graham, UN mediator and a former CU president, was on hand for the ceremonies. Graham concluded his remarks with a challenge to the new president: "In the atomic age in which fate forks the road of human destiny . . . may the inauguration of William Clyde Friday mean the dedication of the threefold university . . . to the moral imperative of universal brotherhood as the way of human freedom, survival and progress on earth."

William Friday now permanently occupies the office of CU president in South Building. Nearby is the office of the University chancellor, occupied by William Brantly Aycock, who will be inaugurated Nov. 9.

Others among the many who maintain offices in South Building are Charles M. Shaffer, director of development, and his assistant Roy Holston. Ernest L. Mackie is dean of awards and distinctions.

Cecil Johnson, C. P. Spruill and J. Carlyle Sitterson are deans of the General College, faculty and college of arts and sciences.

Former Chancellor Robert House—His service to the University, efficient though warmly personal, made his shoes exceedingly difficult to fill.

The Old Well—Its renovation last year stands as a symbol of the new administration which has taken over the Consolidated University—And the New Era. . .

Principals In University's New Era

Shown above are the two University officials upon which falls the mantle of responsibility for administration of the University's many facets throughout the coming academic year. The principals are on the left Consolidated University President William Clyde Friday and on the right University at Chapel Hill Chancellor William Brantly Aycock.

Students May Finance Education By Working

A great majority of Carolina students earn part of their schooling by working part-time.

If you would like a job, here's what you will have to do.

You will first visit the Student-Aid Office in the basement of Hanes Hall. There you will be interviewed and will tell them the kind of job you are interested in and the kind of work you are capable of doing.

You may have the choice of working for cash or you may like to work for your meals. They will try to land you the position you want. In either case, you can earn up to about half of your expenses by working part time.

Also available are scholarships, loans, and grants-in-aid. These can all be applied for at the Student Aid Office.

If you get a job working for the University it will likely be at Lenoir Hall, Carolina Inn, Graham Memorial, Scuttlebutt, Monogram Club, various libraries or one of the many other university owned places on the campus.

A C average is usually required to keep a job or scholarship but exception sometimes can be made. The reason for this requirement is that there are a large number of applicants who would like to have jobs.

Mr. Ed Lanier is the head man and he will likely talk to you before you get approved for a loan, job, scholarship or grant-in-aid. He is the man who will reject or approve your application.

Good grades in high school or your first semester here may earn you a scholarship ranging from $150 to $500 if you have definite financial needs.

The Student Aid Office thinks it best that freshmen not work if at all possible, but they realize that not all can get by without working.

The Student Aid Office is open from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on weekdays and until noon Saturdays, and have extended a welcome to anyone interested in discussing any phase of the above mentioned program that they handle.

One thing should be pointed out. Approval of the Student Aid Office is not needed if a student wants to work at one of the downtown eating places, theaters, downtown stores, filling station, fraternity houses or other privately owned places. In this case, a student is on his own and his job has nothing to do with the Student Aid Office.

"Y" Program Run Primarily By Students

The students operate and run the entire program of the YMCA and the YWCA and have three adult leaders to guide them.

Offices are located in the Y Building near South Building. Mr. Claude Shotts is the YMCA General Secretary. John Riebel is the Associate Secretary and Anne Queen is YWCA Director.

The two student organizations —the YW for women and YM for men — have separate identities, but the programs of the two are often planned together. The full time staff works together for both groups.

Organization of the two groups is divided into committees and many of the committees have joint chairmen, a member from the YM and one from the YW.

A few changes in the building and staff are now taking place to enable the staff members of the YW-YM to work more closely together and more efficiently.

Positions newly created, which will be filled soon, are an in-training graduate assistantship and a staff office managerial post.

Most Popular UNC Activity Is Dating

By LARRY CHEEK

By PEG HUMPHREY

(Dating at Carolina as seen by a Caroline Coed)

"How to get a date?" is often question puzzling Carolina freshmen.

The men find themselves facing an age barrier when it comes to dating the junior and senior coeds which, however, is often penetrable depending on the maturity of the individual.

Open houses in the dormitories take place during the first weeks of school. This is an excellent opportunity for the freshman to begin his dating campaign, for at this time many of the coeds haven't had a chance to meet young men on "the hill."

If this fails, there is always the classroom romance. Suggesting a coffee break in Y-Court after class is often a successful approach.

The library has a notorious reputation of being a date bureau as well as a place for concentrated study. The reserve reading room is the most famous spot for arranging coffee break dates for the P Room.

If you are in the depths of despondency over the looks of your social calendar, there are always the nearby women's colleges such as WC, Meredith and St Mary's. The dormitories there usually invite whole dorms from Carolina over during the first weeks of school.

However, don't despair if your first attempts fail and decide that dating girls from other colleges is the only solution, for there is a surprisingly number of Carolina coeds who remain with a good book on Saturday night simply because their classmates assume they are dating.

Those who join fraternities will have an opportunity to meet coeds in the various sororities as parties between the Greek groups are frequently planned.

Many campus romances begin in the extracurricular groups. This is where you meet others with common interests, and age differences mean less.

Sooner or later, however, you will have to venture off the campus and the results can be rewarding. Take your pick: Greener pastures over the hill, good old home cooking, or just sitting and waiting for the one and only.

UNC Campus Is Lively On First Day Of Class

By PATSY MILLER

The UNC campus is in full swing again with all its 7,000 people to make things lively! The first day of classes brought them into Y-Court so that the doors were overflowing with summer episodes and weekend plans.

The rain only made Chapel Hill seem more like home to the old students and introduced the new ones to the legend that no matter how sunny it may be ten miles away, it will inevitably be raining at the "Hill."

So, into the rain students must trip to drop-ad if they are anything like routine and remedy the class schedules that aren't convenient. Drop-ad is now at its peak; in fact, you may find more people down there than in Y-Court.

Drop-ad takes place in central records office in the basement of Hanes Hall for new and old students. It will end at 12:30 p.m., Saturday.

But the rain has not so far tamed things down one little bit. It hasn't kept anyone ffrom attending the first day of classes which brought on cases of fatigue supposedly held over from orientation week.

Big weekend plans for the State-Carolina game take priority over class worries, however. Especially since the visiting agreement with fraternity houses has just been passed and distributed to all women's dorms and sororities.

A total of 24 social and four professional frats are on the list. The men heaved sighs of relief at the news; since many of them are getting combos for this afternoon.

And the coeds heaved other sighs of relief because they won't have to miss any of the fun this weekend. That is, if they have dates!

It is no mistake, then, to say that everything is in full swing again. The stores are full, students have colds and are broke and the police department is busy. The Daily Tar Heel's truck has been missing for two days and it seems that no one has seen the monster. You would surely remember it if you had.

Tryouts Monday For Production

Tryouts for "The Lark," a Carolina Playmaker's production, have been scheduled for 4:00 and 7:30 p.m., Monday, September 23, in the Playmaker's Theatre.

The play, which portrays the life of Saint Joan, is directed by Kai Jurgensen, of the Playmaker's staff. It will appear at the Playmaker Theatre October 16-20.

"The Lark" offers many roles for interested Tar Heels and experience is not necessarily a prerequisite for casting it was announced. All interested persons are encouraged to attend the tryouts.

Military Slashed

He said, too, that 35,000-40,000 civilians will have to be dropped from defense payrolls.

"We couldn't wait any longer," Wilson told a news conference. "We are so close to the debt limit that the treasury can't even borrow the money."

Library Post Filled At UNC

Dr. Harry Bergholz, a scholar of national and international reputation, has accepted the position of Chief Bibliographer at the University of North Carolina Library, it was disclosed recently.

Dr. Bergholz comes to Carolina with a Master of Science degree in Library Science from the University of Michigan where he was a professor of comparative literature.

World In Brief

Hurt By Lye

NEW YORK—(AP)—A quantity of lye or other caustic was hurled by a pupil involved in a morals case into a history class at Thomas Jefferson High School in Brooklyn today, injuring 12 students.

Two of the injured were taken to Kings County Hospital, suffering from burns of the face, neck and back. The other 10 were treated at the school and eight of them were sent home.

Authorities accused Maurice Kessler, 17, Negro, of hurling the substance, and sad the attack apparently stemmed from the arrest last August of Kesler on a morals charge. One of the boys in the hospital, David Ozersky, 16, white, was the complaintant in the case, in which Kessler was freed on $1,000 bail for grand jury action.

Faubus On Offense

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus demanded Thursday that U.S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies be disqualified for today's critical hearing on the use of National Guardsmen to keep Negroes out of Central High School.

Earlier, Faubus defied a federal court subpoena to appear in another civil rights hearing, brought before a 3-judge panel.

He also told reporters he does not know whether he will come into court Friday.

Faubus attorneys, in an affidavit filed in federal court, asserted: "Judge Davies is unable to conduct a fair and impartial trial and render a decision, either in law or fact, that would be free of prejudice."

Hoffa Confident

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — (AP) — James R. Hoffa said today he expects to be elected president of the teamsters' union despite an attack on him by the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee.

The committee charged the union is corruptly dominated. In effect, it gave the teamsters a choice between ousting Hoffa and some other leaders or being expelled from the AFL-CIO.

Hoffa said in an interview he believes the teamsters can get along without the AFL-CIO but he thinks every effort should be made to stay in the federation.

Free Flicks Begin Today

The first of the free films presented by the Free Flick committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board will be presented tonight.

Starring in Saturday night's film, "Another Part of the Forest," will be Fredric March, Ann Blyth, Dan Duryea and Edmund O'Brien. This film tells the story of the life of a vicious, scheming family on a southern plantation, and will be shown to students at 7:30 and 10 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Rally, Parade Planned

'Beat State' Events Start At 6:45 P.M.

A "Beat State" parade and pep rally are scheduled today at 6:45 p.m. to arouse enthusiasm for the State-Carolina football game Saturday afternoon.

Since the first Consolidated University Day of this scholastic year is being held in conjunction with the football game, other events and attractions have been planned for Saturday.

The parade tonight will form at Woollen Gymnasium and follow a route to Memorial Hall for a pep rally. Both the UNC band and cheerleaders will participate in the parade and rally.

The UNC cheerleaders, prepared and headed by Frankie Black, will escort the football team to the stage in Memorial Hall for a "Meet the Team" interview.

Another highlight of the pep rally will be a speech by head football coach Jim Tatum, who will introduce other coaches and co-captains of the 1957 football squad.

Half-time ceremonies during the game Saturday will feature the presentation of nine girls from Carolina, State and WC vieing for the title of Consolidated University Queen.

During the half-time program, student government presidents from the three units of the Consolidated University and the chairman of the three CU delegations will be introduced.

Immediately after the game, a reception will be held in front of Graham Memorial (the Tin Can, in case of rain). Jim Crisp's combo will be featured for the reception.

While the reception is being held, the nine candidates for CU Queen (three from each unit of the Consolidated University) will meet in Morehead Planitarium with judges who will choose the queen.

The new CU Queen will be announced during the CU dance Saturday night in Woollen Gym. Kelly Maness, chairman of the UNC delegation to the Consolidated University Council, will crown the queen and will present her with a dozen roses from a local florist. The CU Queen last year was Ann Fitzhugh from Woman's College.

The CU dance, to be held from 8 to 11 o'clock Saturday night, is being sponsored by the Order of the Grail, the highest undergraduate honorary at UNC. The Duke Ambasadors will supply music for the dance. Dance tickets will be sold for $1.00 for couples and stags.

An expected turn-out of 1000 to 1200 students from WC and State College during the CU Day program was predicted by Kelly Maness.

Memorial Hall Redecoration Now Pending

By BILL KING

The Budget Bureau in Raleigh is now holding the key that will open the triangular lock which has held the three major Student Government Projects pidgeonholed for the past several years.

A new parking lot, repair for dormitory TV sets and the redecoration of Memorial Hall are the projects that, until recently, had been refused by official sources. The parking lot and the repair program have been started, and the petition for funds for redecorating Memorial Hall is now before the Budget Bureau in Raleigh.

The new parking lot, to be finished by late October, is being built with funds provided by the University. The cost of clearing, draining, grading and curbing, about $35,000, was provided from University funds, and "not one cent" came from the funds taken from student car registration fees.

The funds from student car registration fees are in the Student Activities fund, and, if a suggestion from the business office is followed, the fees will be used to furnish lighting and a guard for the "Bell Tower Parking Lot."

The new lot will hold 577 cars. The Division of Health Affairs is to receive 77 of the spaces and students to receive the remainder, according to Mr. Branch, Business Manager of the University.

The Student Traffic Committee will be in charge of the allocation of the student parking spaces, according to Sonny Evans, President of the student body. Evans also stated that the Traffic Committee will decide how the lot is to be administrated as soon as final figures on car registration are available.

Another item, that has as yet not been acted upon, is the request made for funds to supply new seats for Memorial Hall. Mr. Branch stated that the request is before the Budget Bureau in Raleigh.

The campaign for new seats for the Auditorium has been going on for the past seven years, but has always been refused by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. Branch said that the request would surely be well received by the Budget Bureau and "we are hopeful it will pass."

The request, if granted, will replace the present seats in the old auditorium with 1700 new theatre-type seats. Two telephones will also be placed in Memorial Hall. The flys, guide ropes and machinery will be overhauled or replaced as the situation demands also.

Another "crying need" that Aycock and Branch advocated is the Fund recently established for the repair of dormitory TV sets.

This has been a project of the student government for the past five years, but at the suggestion of Aycock and Branch, the project has become a reality.

The $50 per set allotment is given to the Student Government with the suggestion that an arrangement be made through the Purchasing Dept. to have all the sets serviced by the same repair company. The suggestion does not have to be followed to receive the money.

The amount of the allotment is not necessarily permanent. According to Mr. Branch, the $50 is enough for repairs on two average television sets per year. The reason for the double figure was given as the abuse that these sets receive and the continuous performance.

The unused portion of the fund will be used to replace old sets and to add new ones. The repairs and replacement of the TV sets was until now, taken from the Dorm Social Fund and was handled by the individual dormitories.

Evans later said, "Chancellor Aycock and Mr. Branch are to be congratulated and thanked for the firm, swift and effective handling of such crying needs as dormitory television repair, student parking, and Memorial Hall re-decoration."

Staff Meeting Set Today At 2

A meeting of all old staff members and those interested in joining the staff of The Daily Tar Heel will be held today at 2 p.m. in The Daily Tar Heel office on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

Editor Neil Bass has urged all those interested in joining the staff to be present at the meeting.

The Daily Tar Heel publishes daily except Sunday. Positions are open in all phases of production, including advertising, business, photography, news writing and editorial writing.

Obituary To Freedom: Momism And Cancers . . .

The Daily Tar Heel christened the inauguration of Consolidated University President William Friday as the beginning of a new Progressive Era.

We were again high on our praises when William Brantley Aycock assumed the chancellorship duties in June.

Now we offer high laurels to new University Business Manager J. B. Branch for the energetic approach he has taken.

Already Branch has negotiated to allocate $5o per dormitory out of dormitory vending machine profits to establish a contingency fund for television repairs.

Also Business Manager Branch has begun negotiations to provide much needed relief for posteriors which have been subjected to the archaic, cement-hard seats in Memorial Hall.

Branch is seeking an appropriation with which he may purchase new cushioned seats for the only large auditorium on campus.

Such demonstrated energy truly makes Branch eligible to hold a key position in the University's new Progressive Era.

Student government officials have attempted for more than five years through committees and otherwise to secure a portion of vending machine profits to defray expenditures necessary to maintain television sets. Now Branch has allocated a portion in a mere couple of months.

Such enthusiasm deserves highest praise, laurels and lauds. As Student Body President Sonny Evans said:

"The new University administration is demonstrating to everyone a decisiveness and true concern for the problems facing all areas of the campus . . .

"Chancellor Aycock and (Business Manager) Branch are to be congratulated and thanked for their firm, swift and effective" handling of numerous problems facing student government and the University as a whole.

We join student government in its highest commendation for the new, welcomed wave of enthusiasm.

Our highest hopes are that such enthusiasm will permeate the entire student body and administration.

Lauds, Lauds, Lauds For Progressive Move

Liberalism dies.

The Daily Tar Heel deplores the University's new brand of momistic coddling, preferential treatment of athletes and segregated housing evidenced in the placing of eighty-five football players in Cobb Dormitory.

The trend is definitely toward social position, by participation in trend has never dominated the University's policies in the past.

We forsee a time when each University dormitory will be crammed full of "academic counselors," such as are now placed in Cobb; a time when students must report in and out; possibly a time when house mothers will tuck poor, little University men and women into their cozy beddy-bves with a wet, affectionate smack.

According to the Student Affairs office, all freshmen footballers have been neatly categorized into Cobb. Here they can be closely supervised by Big Brother counselors. Perhaps there'll even be a few minutes of organized hate each morning, directed against all who don't don shoulder pads and give their all for the University.

We can't believe that footballers themselves embrace the University's new liberlaism-stilling policy. Certainly they are entitled to as much freedom as any other group. They contribute much to the University community's life.

Such preferential treatment is assuredly not commensurate with the University's past liberal traditions — non-beanie-wearing, non-rah-rah, boola, boola traditions. And it was not in being prior to the institution of a new ten-gallon headed individual on this campus.

The University of Oklahoma's Bud Wilkinson houses his athletes similarly in a separate dormitory, which students affectionately call the "zoo."

Such terminology is assuredly a grave injustice. But if we were to suggest a new name for Cobb it would be "Megolamaniac's Menageric."

The blame for the University's new brand of momism and coddling can not be entirely affixed upon this individual. It must also be affixed to administrators and to the athletic director and department for allowing itself to be overrun by this big-time, cantankerous centipede.

The brakes must, however, be immediately applied. A screeching halt must be brought to this creeping cancer which threatens to malign all University liberalism—from non-preferential housing to freedom of thought and freedom to study or say "to hell with it" without a little demigod counselor on wheels to say "study" or "do not study."

Live Modern New Series

Liberalism dies.

For struggling Graham Memorial-ites, modern living suffered a severe set back when the second floor water fountain went into disrepair.

As any poor tongue-wagging, cigarette-smoking, hassling GM-ite knows, water—its use and disuse—is a vital part of everyday life. GM-ite pipes grow dusty without it.

Thus we issue a fervent plea to GM-wheels, cogs, bolts, nuts et cetera:

Please! Repair the water fountain. We beg and implore you.

Modern living demands an abundant water supply.

Do's And Don't's For Freshmen: Number Two

Whit Whitfield

As a college freshman you will receive more than a fair share of advice. From the dean, the orientation counsellors, the instructors, and from a legion of friends who are upperclassmen you will hear innumerable DO'S and DONT'S.

These will only tend to confuse and astound you. By far the best policy is to live and learn. After all, why take advantage of professional advice and counselling? Just because these people have successfully met the trials and tribulations encountered in a college community is no reason to heed them.

Far be it from us to give advice, but there are some few pointers that might be kept in mind during your stay here.

* * *

Stay up late at night for bull-sessions, poker, or canasta. These you will find to be an important part of the educational process here at Carolina. You will find them a great source of inspiration on hour quizzes, final exams, and even in later years when the going is rough.

Cut class often. Don't give people the idea that you place too much stress on the academic phase of college life.

Sit in the back of the class when you do attend. Don't be earmarked a bookworm. If the lecture is boring, then the crossword puzzle or Pogo might interest you. After all, none off the material in the lecture will be given on a quiz. Even if it is, you can find it in the text.

Some of you, no doubt, will experience feelings of inferiority when speaking to others who are more widely read than you. This can be overcome by selecting your reading matter at Jeff's. Be pseudo. It's vogue this year.

An important phase of college life, one that should enrich your stay here, is extra-curricular activities. Besides the sheer enjoyment of belonging to a group that gets things done, the impression made by the activities list beside your name in the Yack is everlasting. Just think of the pride of belonging to the Di and the Phi ,both political parties, the YM- and YWCA's, the Methodist Youth Fellowship and Baptist Student Union, in just four years!

Another important thing to incoming students is how to escape the relative obscurity in which you enter. If you don't wish to remain in oblivion then by far the best way is to spend all the time you can spare in Y-Court. This is the focal point of campus social life, and no one can be completely socially acceptable without apprenticing there. If your class schedule does not allow a break in the mornings, then drop your ten o'clock and take Sociology I on the steps at Y-Court. You won't get credit for the course, but you'll profit by it nevertheless.

One last reminder — try to learn all you can about the campus and its personalities, but don't feel too badly if you have trouble at first. After all, there are many upperclassmen who still don't know the name of the Math building is Coker.

"You Keep Out Of This!"

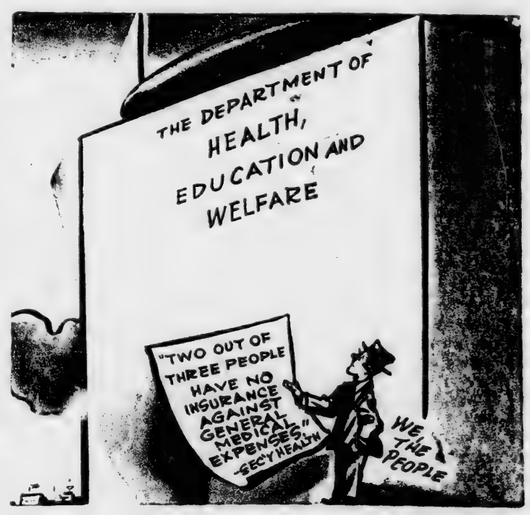
The Battle Of The Bermudas

Relaxing restrictions on Bermudas will be the subject of a bill which will be brought up in the Student Senate this Wednesday night. The bill will recommend that the WSGC permit coeds to wear Bermuda shorts after 3 p.m. inside living units on weekdays. The bill is only a recommendation, however, as the final decision is with the WSGC.

It is about time that this matter came up. As the bill's sponsor has claimed, a restriction on coeds such as this is medieval and absurd. Bermuda shorts are attractive, and they are socially acceptable. They are cool, easy to wear and wash, and they are practical. Judging from the numbers of girls that wear them on the one day a week Bermudas are permitted, they are quite popular.

Arguments used against the wearing of Bermudas in the past have been that they are sloppy, look terrible on some girls and are in bad taste.

To say that they look sloppy is possibly true in some cases, but in those same cases don't those girls look sloppy in regular outfits too. There is nothing intrinsic in a pair of Bermudas that makes them look sloppy—it's the person wearing them, and that same person will make anything she is wearing look sloppy. Perhaps Bermudas look casual, but this is no justification for saying flatly that no girl may wear them any day but Saturday without a raincoat over them.



The second argument, that from an aesthetic standpoint some coeds just look terrible in Bermudas certainly may be true.

But it is also true about almost any piece of clothing ever worn, from sabre-toothed tiger skins up to the present day. Some girls look terrible in sweaters but does this justify outlawing them for all girls six days a week? Some girls look terrible in modern bathing suits, but does this justify passing legislation against them? Don't most girls have enough sense to shy away from clothes they look terrible in? If they don't, they wouldn't spend half as much time in front of mirrors, and they wouldn't spend half as much money on the latest fashion magazines as they do, in order to look their best.

The only comment necessary to make about this claim is that if it is true someone had better pass the word to style-conscious magazines such as Vogue and Seventeen, and to supposedly respectable schools such as Vasar and Smith.

Undoubtedly some student senators and WSGC members will come up with some equally invalid arguments against permitting Bermudas, even in the limited sense that this bill recommends them. There have been criticisms in the past that neither of these organizations represent the students. Let's not let it happen on this issue.

From Last Year:

UNC or The Best View Of Carrboro

Roy Moose

(Mr. Moose, former member of the English dept. faculty and former Oxonian, writes this poignant and acrid view of the University from the faculty-eye point-of-view.) (Freshmen may muse over or disregard it.—The Editor)

Since the student at U.N.C. seems confused about his being at the school, I feel that it is necessary to aid the neophyte in his effort to learn our "game" at Carolina. Certainly, one cannot play the game without first knowing the rules.

Thus the following suggestions are humbly submitted as an attempt to foster better relations between the student and his betters.

Suffice to say, the suggestions have been adapted from another source, as benefits a scholar; in fact, if the Honor Council wishes to investigate, this paper is downright plagiarism.)

THE TOWN: Chapel Hill is an up-to-date commercial city with some of the finest suburbs in the country (cf. Carrboro). The walk from Rosemary Laundry to Carrboro city limits is justly famed and admired.

The visitor is advised to waste no time on the campus in the city, as it contains nothing of interest except crumbling buildings of an obsolete pattern and large quantity of objectionable youths of both sexes. It is hoped that both of these undesirable features will eventually be cleared away; and the project of converting the campus into one huge paved parking lot, bisected by a six-lane highway through the heart of this decadent quarter, is to be welcomed as a positive step in the right direction.

THE UNIVERSITY: To belong to this bourgeois organization is often the only way to obtain lodgings within easy bus-ride of Durham. In order to enable students to put up a passing show of interest in the place, here are a few pieces of information that the more crusted reactionaries expect one to know.

THE ADMINISTRATION AND CAMPUS POLICE: Least said soonest mended.

THE FRATERNITIES: Here is a representative selection of college fraternities which will provide the discerning with a good indication of their several undersirable characters.

Sigma NU—Too much is not enough.
Phi Beta Kappa—Better than nothing.
Phi Kappa Sigma—Vive le Sport.
Sigma Chi—Vino in Magnum.
St. Anthony Hall—Repondeat Cafeteria.
SAE—One Good Turn.
SPE—Deserves Another.
Chi Phi—Turn Again.
Phi Eta Sigma—Everything in Excelsior.
Beta House—Evertvhing in Selzer.
Chi Omega—Everything!
Pi Beta Phi—When Did We Last See Your Father?

LECTURES: These are ritual ceremonies carried out continuously during the term and attended by a clique of devout lecture-worshippers, distinguished by a pair of levis and a T-shirt (Clean levis-minor acolytes; filthy levis—class I. fanatics.) Freshmen are advised to be wary of attending too many of these functions. Their effort is similar to drugs being both narcotic and habit-forming. Once the habit has a hold it may last a lifetime.

LIBRARY: A place of assignation and a convenient cloak for dubious advances. Gate-crashers are strictly prohibited, and double-knocks are sternly enforced between 8:00 and 10:30 p.m.

PROFESSORS: Officials appointed by the University to outwit students. The rules of the game and the method of scoring are given below:

HOW TO PLAY: 1. Professor sends Advisor a card requesting attendance of student in his class to arrange work for term.

2. Student sends long list of excuses (preferably not printed).

3. Professor either (a) demolishes excuses or (b) suggests the next class. If (b) student returns to 2. If (a):

4. Student falls ill.
5. Professor waits patiently.
6. Student gets bored and recovers.
7. Professor repeats 1.
8. Student repeats 2.

Eventually the student visits the class or the term ends. After each visit the Professor scores as marked below and begins again at 1.

SCORING:

Class periods attended:	Student score	Prof Score

UNC Students Are Winners

Winning second place East-West were Mr. and Mrs. J. Gray McAllister, III, while two student partnerships, Ted Hill and Narvel Crawford and Joe Converse and Richard Hichk, were tied for third and fourth place East-West.

In the North-South direction, Bill Uzzle was the sole student winner. He teamed with townsperson, Mrs. James Pinney, and won fourth place North-South.

The director of the tournament, Dan Duke, announced that these weekly tournaments are open to all student bridge players (as well as to townspeople and visitors). He further announced that student bridge players inexperienced with duplicate bridge would have no trouble adjusting to the tournament version of bridge, and that said inexperienced players are especially urged to come down some Monday night and attempt the conversion.

The bridge club meets each Monday night in the Rendezvous Room at Graham Memorial Building. Starting time is 7:30 and participators are urged to be on time.

Classics Department Receives Quarter Million Dollar Fund

A sum, slightly in excess of $247,000 has been given to the University of North Carolina as a result of the will of the late George Lucas Paddison of Burgaw.

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced recently that the quarter of a million dollar fund has been established here to bolster the University's Department of Classics.

"It is my desire to encourage and inspire the love of learning and wisdom in the students of the University by helping to build up and maintain at that institution, a faculty of great scholars and great teachers."

The will stipulates that income will be used to supplement the state-appropriated salaries of distinguished professors. The professorships so supplemented will be known as the George L. Paddison Professorships.

G .L. PADDISON

The Paddison bequest comes at an opportune time, just as the Humanities Institute starts its first full year in the University. The Humanities Institute will bolster the liberal arts. The Paddison Fund in Classics gives the Institute its first powerful boost.

George Lucas Paddison was born at Burgaw in 1883, majored in chemistry at the University, helped work his way through school as an assistant in chemistry, and borrowed money from the University Loan Fund upon the recommendation of President Francis Preston Venable.

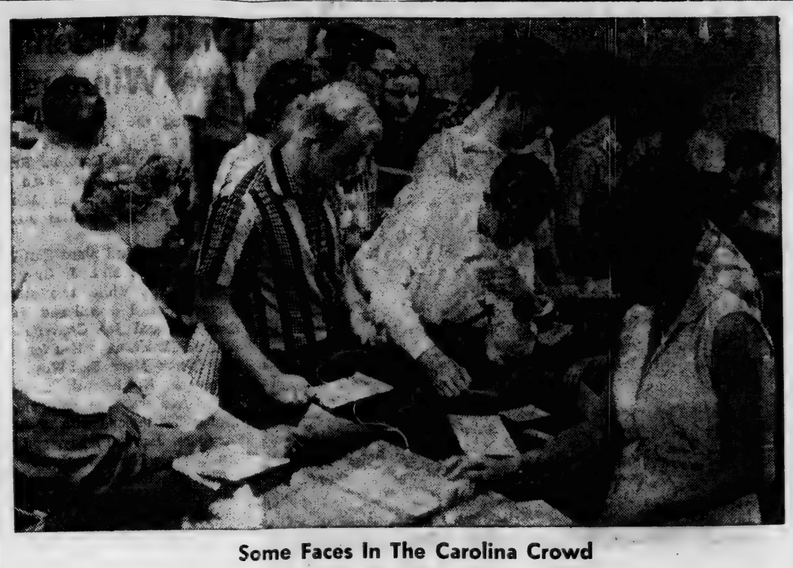
Chancellor Aycock Recommends Five For Positions With University

A new semester usually brings with it, along with the usual influx of new student faces, occasional changes in both faculty and Administration.

This Fall, like any other, offers its share of personnel change to the Carolina scene.

According to a recent report submitted by Chancellor William Aycock to President Friday and the Board of Trustees, five appointments are or were pending approval before assuming duties here.



Recommended by Chancellor Aycock to posts in the University were: Eugene William Loeser Jr. as Assistant Professor in the Department of Neurologic Medicine, School of Medicine; Robert Bruce Hughes as Assistant Professor in the School of Education; William Parker Matthews as Assistant Professor in the School of Education; Frank Winkler Ryan Jr. as Assistant Prof. in the Dept. of Social Science; and Claude Piantodesi as Assistant Prof. in the School of Pharmacy.

Two resignations were listed in the Chancellor's report. They were Jacob T. Hunt, Assistant Professor in the School or Education, and Joseph C. Hutchinson, Assistant Professor in the Department of Romance Languages who resigned effective August 31 in order to accept a position at Tulane University to direct Foreign Language Laboratories there.

One death, that of Philip Macon Cheek, of the Department of English, was also noted in the report. Prof. Cheek died August 7 in Maine of a coronary thrombosis.

Luanne Ellen Thornton

Miss Thornton, UNC graduate, class of '55, has been named Personel Advisor to Women here. Miss Thornton served as Director of Student Activities at Sullins College in Bristol, Va., and has done graduate work at Emory University in Atlanta since her graduation.

Some Faces In The Carolina Crowd

Coed 'Postman' Comes To UNC From Mail Fields Of New York

By WALT SCHRUNTEK

A "Face in the Crowd" of this year's incoming Carolina class will be that of blonde, long-stemmed Sue Voight of Manhasset, Long Island.

Like other newcomers to the Carolina campus and Way of Life, Miss Voight brings to UNC, in addition to her personal aspirations, energies and pursuits, the impact of her personality and distinctions of the past.

In Miss Voight's case, recent distinctions take a singular and certainly noteworthy turn. Singular because she accomplished a "first" in lieu of recent summertime employment and noteworthy because several national newspapers and a national television panel show saw fit to highlight her accomplishments.

To what does the new Carolina coed owe her singularity and newsworthiness? To what can we attribute her significance to the news and views of the American public? Why, to the fact that she employed herself as the first girl "postman" in Long Island history last summer.

This fact seems perhaps not startling or singular to the first glance of the eye, but to many of the 20,000 residents of Manhasset where she toted her 35 pound bag of mail each day, the eye was certainly the thing. Certainly to the male population at any rate.

Miss Voight's story could be approached from another angle as well. For in her accomplishments and subsequent successes in a heretofore strictly male field (pardon the misnomer, please), she served to champion and further still the neverflagging cause of woman suffrage.

As first letter carrier on Long Island, Miss Voight had to overcome the barrier of tradition and resistence offered by long-time post office practice.

When interviewed on her choice of summertime employe, the Long Island Lady Letter Lugger remarked that she found it much more difficult to convince her parents than Postmaster Joseph Wilson of her aspirations and capabilities.

It would seem that Miss Voight's physical endowments were the clincher in Postmaster Wilson's approval of Sue as a letter carrier. Said he: "Ordinarily I wouldn't hire a girl to deliver mail, but Sue is a big girl (6 feet big) who looked like she could handle a mail pouch so I thought I'd take a chance and hire her."

Wilson admits that he was somewhat skeptical of feminine invasion of hitherto sacred male precints, but offers himself now as a great booster of women for the post office (And who can really blame him?).

Asked how she impressed native Manhassetites who she served during her 10 mile jaunts each day, Miss Voight said: "I did get whistled at from time to time, but I guess every girl who wears shorts gets whistled at." (A fact, sad to say, which is not always entirely true.)

"I tried to wear slacks the first day on the job," continued Sue, who is majoring in sociology here, 'but they were too hot to wear with all the walking I had too do. Skirts wouldn't have been right either so I thought I'd follow the lead of some of the boys also working here in the summer and wear Bermuda shorts."

Late in August of the summer past, Miss Voight was a guest of John Daly on national t.v. hook-up "What's My Line" which added further to her successes in several local and metropolitan New York newspapers.

And, I might add in postscript that Chapel Hill could certainly take example from Manhasset's cue. Lady letter carriers would surely be a welcome sight to Carolina's suffering Male population. Bermuda shorts and all.

16th Annual Press Institute Will Have 250 Students Here

Chapel Hill, Sept. 17 — The 16th annual North Carolina Scholastic Press Institute will be held Saturday, Oct. 1, at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

Over 250 student editors and faculty advisors representing high school newspaper and yearbook staffs are expected to attend the 1957 Institute.

In the absence of Walter Spearman of the UNC journalism staff, Chris Folk of Charlotte Central High School is acting director of this year's one-day meeting. The Institute is sponsored by the UNC School of Journalism; the University Extension Division; the Daily Tar Heel, UNC campus newspaper; and the N. C. Department of Public Instruction.

At the opening session the delegates will be welcomed by Norval Neil Luxon, Dean of the UNC School of Journalism. Talks and discussion on such topics as editorials, news writing, features, sports, advertising, photography and makeup are scheduled during morning and afternoon sessions.

Prof. Bob Morrison of Winthrop College and Newton, director of the Carolinas Editors Conference held each summer at Winthrop, will assist with the discussions. Featured speaker at the Saturday night banquet will be David Stick of Kitty Hawk, author of "Graveyard of the Atlantic" and founder of the North Carolina Scholastic Press Institute.

Advanced registration is now taking place and will continue through Sept. 28.

Art Exhibition

An exhibition of drawings and paintings by Robert B. Dance of Kinston opened recently in the South Art Gallery of the Morehead Planetarium on the University of North Carolina campus here.

A graduate and award winner at the Philadelphia Museum School of Art, Dance attended the Ringling School of Art. Many of his nature works have appeared on the covers of the magazine, "Wildlife in North Carolina."

The programs, part of the United States History course designed for high school students, will originate in the North Carolina Room of the Louis R. Wilson Library.

Miss Lois Edinger, television teacher of this course, will interview Dr. Hugh Lefler, Kenan professor in the UNC Department of History and author of the North Carolina history text used in North Carolina Public Schools. Dr. Lefler will give an account of the colonial history of North Carolina.

Yackety Yack Seeks Workers

In an interview with The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, Gene stated "It seems absurd that more interest has not been shown, as there are a number of section editorships available and marvelous opportunities to get in on the ground floor."

When asked about experience, Gene's reply was "Experience, heck! What we need is interest and willingness to workand learn; somebody is going to be needed next year for the position off editor and business manager. Whitehead added that first year students were needed most of all. He encouraged all interested workers to meet at 5 p.m. in the basement of Graham Memorial.

UNC Marching Band Chorus Open Tryouts

Tryouts are now being held for positions in the University Marching Band and University Chorus in prepartion for musical presentations here this year.

Director Wilton Mason of the chorus said tryouts for his group are being held all this week. Interested persons should go to room 204 of Hill Music Hall.

Herbert W. Fred, director of the marching band, said persons interested in that group should contact him in room 102 of Hill Hall.

Membership is open to all University students who qualify on the basis of audition and interview, Fred asserted.

A busy schedule for the instrumental group this year includes trips with the football team to Maryland, Wake Forest and Duke, as well as presentations at all home games.

Mason, director of the chorus, said that group is devoted to the presentation of "outstanding" masterpieces of vocal literature.

Principal presentation of the fall semester will be Honegger's "King David." The University Symphony will also be featured in the program.

Following this program, Mason said, the University Chorus will appear with the University Band in a special program featuring Percy Grainger as soloist and composer, and will present a number off Grainger's work under his direction.

Rehearsals for the chorus are being held twice weekly—at 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Friday. Auditions for new members will continue throughout next week.

Tar Heel Footballers Open Season Against State In Kenan Tomorrow

By BILL KING

Football is upon us once again and tomorrow afternoon in Kenan Stadium, the 1957 edition of Carolina football will come trotting out of Kenan Field House amid the thunderous sounds of Carolina fans and alumni to challenge ancient rival North Carolina State College.

2:00 p.m. is kickoff time and nobody is awaiting the big moment more eagerly than Jim Tatum and his Tar Heels. For Sunny Jim and his football clan it means the beginning of an era which they hope will win the name "brighter days."

Tatum is in his second current season with his alma mater but he'd like to forget last year as would all Carolina followers. A quick recapitulation shows that the Tar Heels of 1956 went 0-10 for the season. Actually they won a couple and tied one but the winning side of the ledger was erased when it was learned that an ineligible player had been on the squad.

The slate is clean now and the "pots right" and nobody is more cognizant of that fact than Tatum. The Tar Heel mentor has been keeping his opinions mostly to himself this season but readily admits that "we'll be an improved ball club."

Carolina will face a tough schedule, with four of its opponents rated in the top ten teams in the nation—Duke, Tennessee, Miami (Fla.) and Navy. The Tar Heels will be inexperienced at some positions — still, there is that certain "look" in Tatum's eyes that indicates his sincere belief that the future looks mighty good.

Specifically speaking, the Tar Heels have every reason to be up for tomorrow's contest. They can still vividly recall last year's 26-6 loss to the Wolfpack in Kenan Stadium. Some State fans made sure Carolina players and fans wouldn't forget when they left an inscription in the verdant turf at Kenan that read, "NCS 26, UNC 6." It was the first time State had stopped its Consolidated Brothers since 1942.

Carolina will be deeper this season. Tatum has at least 22 players who are almost certain to see action tomorrow, and behind the "first 22" are many others who have fine potential and should get in their licks before the season ends.

Actually, Tatum has no definite "top eleven." Rather, it's the "top 22" and from this group the Tar Heel coach feels that he will have eleven capable men on the field at all times.

A run-down on the top 22 shows an array of young talent combined with old hands which should give the Tar Heels a formidable foundation.

From terminal to terminal, Carolina has Co-Captain Buddy Payne, Jimmy Jones, Don Kemper and Al Goldstein at the flank positions. Payne and Jone are probably two of the top passlcatchers in the ACC and will probably get the starting nod tomorrow.

Stuart Pell and Phil Blazer are the two top tackles at present, but Leo Russavage and Don Redding will probably see an equal amount of action.

Guard could be the Tar Heel's strongest point with four men like Jack Lineberger, Ed Furjanic, Don Stallings, and Bruno Raso.

Ronnie Koes and Fred Swearingen are the top center prospects but sophomores Dick Need and Jim Davis should be valuable replacements.

In the backfield, Carolina has veterans Dave Reed and Curt Hathaway at quarterback along with a couple of very promising sophs in Nelson Lowe and Jack Cummings.

FOOTBALL CO-CAPTAIN

Buddy Payne is one of the Tar Heel's most outstanding prospects for All-Conference honors this season. Coach Jim Tatum is putting a great deal of confidence in the 6-2, 205 senior from Norfolk, Va. Payne will be one of the starters in the UNC-NCS contest tomorrow.

Fall Baseball Practice

Baseball coach Walt Rabb announced yesterday that all boys interested in fall baseball practice report to room 304 in Woollen Gym Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

In case of conflict, Rabb has asked that candidates report to Emerson Field as quickly as possible.

"As in the past," Rabb said, we invite all boys with any baseball background out for practice." The Tar Heel coach asks that anyone interested in baseball who will not be able to practice now please contact him.

Cross Country Team Shows Fine Potential

By ERWIN FULLER

Coach Dale Ranson's 1957 edition of the Tar Heel cross-country team appears loaded. Gone will be Jim Beatty, Carolina's great two-time All-American distance runner, but returning will be four of the eight performers who led the Tar Heel harriers to a 12-1 record and the ACC crown last fall. In addition Ranson has Wayne Bishop, a swift-striding junior who sat out last fall's competition due to a severely injured knee, and sophs Cowles Lipfert and Fick Arthur, who paced last fall's Tar Babies.

Bishop, in top shape again, promises to be the biggest addition. As a freshman he was undefeated and he appeared set for great things last year before his injury. Lipfert's record as a frosh too was unmarred until a twisted ankle hampered him in his final two meets.

Top returnees include Everett Whatley, the team's captain who is beginning his final year here; Dave Scurlock whose track efforts in 440 and 880 yard competition have won him conference titles in both events as well as national acclaim; and Howard Kahn and John Reaves both tested performers. These veterans plus the promising newcomers should provide the backbone of another strong contender for conference honors.

Winning has become a habit for the personable track-cross-country mentor. Here at UNC since 1927, Ranson's cross-country teams have never finished lower than fourth in cross-country competition. Since the ACC's organization five year's ago, the Tar Heels have finished either as conference winners or in the runner-up spot.

Coach Ranson has urged that anyone interested in cross-country come down to Fetzer Field and work out. Daily workouts are set for 4 p.m. He is especially interested in looking at the freshman talent. "Freshman cross country offers a splendid opportunity for any boy who is willing to work and train", Ranson has stated. "Although it is certainly helpful, previous experience is certainly no prerequisite for a spot on my squads. It has been our experience that many boys who have participated in other sports in high school find that they have a better opportunity in track and cross-country in college", he concluded.

Reconstruction is now underway on the old Institute of Government building to renovate and reconvert the building into headquarters for the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Early this month, the Department of Administration in Raleigh approved bids for the reconstruction work which will cost approximately $42,500.

After the renovation is completed around January 1, 1958, Consolidated University officers will move from South Building to their new headquarters in the Institute of Government Building.

The offices of President William Friday will be on the first floor where the Institute of Government Library used to be. Offices of two vice-presidents and secretarial staff will also be on the first floor.

On the second floor will be offices of the Provost and the Treasurer and Business Officer, a board room, and offices for secretarial staff. The basement floor will be used chiefly for storage.

When the Consolidated University officers move into the Institute of Government Building, UNC Chancellor William Aycock will move to first floor in South Building.

World In Brief

Asian Flu Spreads

The United States Public Health Service has estimated that about 100,000 cases of Asian Flu have been reported in the continental United States.

Increasing absenteeism has occurred in schools in Oregon, Colorado, Mississippi, and Texas and in a few industries in California. Utah, Oklahoma, and Tennessee also have reported an increasing number of cases.

Southwest Texas College at San Marcos, Tex., has been closed until Monday because of flu, and extra beds have been set up at Texas A&M College Hospital as new cases continue to spring up.

Attorneys Walk Out

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., —(AP)— The Motion-ridden Little Rock integration struggle has taken another dramatic turn. Attorneys for Gov. Orval Faubus walked out of U. S. District Court saying "we're through."

They denied that the federal district court had jurisdiction over the governor of a sovereign state.

Gromyko States Position

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., —(AP)— Andrei Gromyko has told the U. N. the Soviet Union cannot remain an "impassive observer" while the United States and other western powers try to turn the Middle East into a tinderbox.

The Soviet foreign minister outlined his country's position on the Middle East, disarmament and other East-West issues in a policy speech of 1½ hours to the 82-nation assembly.

Thor Missile Fired

MISSILE TEST CENTER, CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA., —(AP)—A huge, flame-trailing missile has been launched from here today in what was believed to be the first successful firing of the Air Force Thor.

The projectile rose like a sky rocket with a flaming tail, traveling upward on an even keel for perhaps 15 or 20 miles before turning in a more horizontal direction.

In Washington—the Air Force has announced development of a radar that can detect a ballistic missile 3,000 miles away and record its trajectory, speed and even size.

Hoffa Sent Court Order

WASHINGTON, —(AP)— James R. Hoffa and other Teamsters bosses have been ordered to appear in federal court here Sept. 27 to answer charges that they have conspired to rig the union's election in favor of Hoffa.

U. S. District Judge F. Dickinson Letts directed them to show cause why the election scheduled for the teamsters convention at Miami Beach, next month should not be delayed by a temporary injunction.

Festivities To Include GM Dance, Reception

By ANN FRYE

One of the attractive coeds from the Consolidated University of North Carolina will be crowned CU Queen tonight as a climax to CU Day activities here today.

State College students and busloads of WC girls will arrive in Chapel Hill early this afternoon for the State-Carolina football game which is the initial event in the CU Day program.

During the half-time ceremonies of the game, three girls from each unit of the Consolidated University will be introduced as candidates for CU Queen.

The candidates from Carolina include the following:

WC contestants are:

Joan Backus, Rocky Mt., junior; Beth Hines, Wilmington, junior and Mary Lynn, Arlington, Va., freshman.

Candidates from State College, selected last night at a pre-game pep rally, were too late for publication in The Tar Heel.

The new queen will be presented and crowned during the CU dance tonight in Woollen Gymnasium by Kelly Maness, chairman of the Carolina CU delegation.

While a reception is being held in front of Graham Memorial or, if raining, in the Tin Can after the game, the nine candidates for CU Queen will meet with judges in the Morehead Planetarium.

The Order of the Grail, sponsors of the dance tonight, has announced that all girls in the Consolidated University will be admitted free to the dance. Tickets for men are $1 each.

Music for the dance will be supplied by the Duke Ambassadors, and Jim Crisp's combo will perform during the receptino this afternoon.

The CU dance, honoring all girls in the Consolidated University, will begin at 8 p.m. and continue until 11 p.m. in Woollen Gym.

The CU Council will meet this morning for a business session in Graham Memorial to be followed by a luncheon in Lenoir Hall. The agenda for the meeting has not been disclosed.

Chairmen of the three delegations to the CU Council will be introduced during half-time of the football game.

Aycock Inauguration On UNC's Anniversary

William Brantley Aycock will be installed as Chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on the birthday of the University, Saturday, Oct. 12, in Kenan Stadium at 11 a.m.

Classes on that day—the same football game in Miami—will be suspended at 9:50 a.m.

Governor Luther H. Hodges will deliver the investiture into office and the oath of office will be administered by J. Wallace Winborne, Chief Justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court.

Consolidated UNC President William C. Friday will be in charge of the ceremonies. The faculty processional preceding the installation will be led by Chief Faculty Marshal J. C. Lyons.

Greetings will come from James Webb of Greensboro, representing the alumni; President Hollis Edens of Duke University, representing the N. C. College Conference; Victor Bryant of Durham, representing the trustees; Kenan Professor Fletcher M. Green, representing the faculty; and Eli Sonny Evans of Durham, representing the student body.

The main address will be delivered by Chancellor Aycock. The public is invited to attend the ceremonies.

On Friday evening, Oct. 11 before University Day, a reception for the faculty at Chapel Hill will be held at Woollen Gymnasium.

Besides the installation ceremonies, special exhibits are planned for University Day, including a display in Louis R. Wilson Library relating to William Richardson Davie, founder of the University; exhibits in the Law School Library and a special showing at Morehead Planetarium.

Chairman of the committee on arrangements for the installation is Prof. Henry W. Lewis of the Institute of Government. Other members are, Kenan Professor Richmond P. Bond, James L. Godfrey, Dean of the Faculty; J. M. Saunders, Alumni Secretary;

Also Charles M. Shaffer, Director of Development; Professor Willard Graham of the School of Business Administration; Dr. Nathan Womack of the School of Medicine; J. Arthur Branch, Business Manager; Dr. Louis R. Wilson; Dean Arnold Perry and Mrs. F. S. McConnell of the Consolidated University office.

Library Shows Faulkner Work

The exhibit includes several of Faulkner's most famous works, as well as some of his earliest novels now out of print. A feature of the exhibition is the author's latest book, "The Town," published in May with reviews of the novel and excerpts from it laid out for introductory reading. Magazine and newspaper articles and critical books about the author are also part of the expansive display.

Planetarium Begins Shows

The Morehead Planetarium opened its 1957-58 program of special shows for school groups at 11 a.m., Friday, September 20.

The first show was presented for fourth graders of Badin School. The program included "A trip to Venus," a tour of the Planetarium's and science galleries and a visit to one of the science departments of the University.

The school programs, designed to interest children in science, will be presented every Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m., through May 1958.

The school groups having advance reservations will take specially conducted tours of the botany, chemistry, geology, pharmacy, physics, television or zoology departments, following the regular Planetarium show.

3 New Faculty Men Appointed

Chancellor William B. Aycock has announced the appointment of three new faculty members in education and social science at UNC.

The new members were named after approval by University President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Those appointed as assistant professors were Robert Bruce Hughes and William Parker Matthews in the School of Education, and Frank Winkler Ryan Jr. in the Department of History.

Matthews comes to UNC from Lynchburg College where he has served for the past five years as associate professor and assistant dean of students. He holds a B.A. from Lynchburg College and an M.S. and Ed.D. from Columbia University.

Ryan is known at UNC as a former student and instructor. He received both his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina. His undergraduate work was completed at the College of Charleston. Aside from serving as an instructor here, he has held the rank of assistant professor at The Citadel.

Hughes received B.S. and M.A. degrees at the University of Washington and is presently working toward his Ph.D. at the University of Illinois. He has served on the faculty at the University of Washing. Montana State College and the University of Illinois.

Tar Heels Meet Wolfpack In Grid Opener Today

By BILL KING

A revenge-minded Carolina football team will open its 1957 season at 2 o'clock in Kenan Stadium this afternoon against one of its oldest rivals, North Carolina State.

Coach Jim Tatum's club will be out to turn the tables on Earle Edward's Wolfpack after a humiliating 26-6 defeat in Kenan Stadium last season.

The Tar Heels, "greatly improved" according to Tatum would like to get off on the right foot this year. Many fans feel that the loss to State in the opener last season had a demoralizing effect that the Tar Heels could not overcome nor reconcile for the rest of the season.

Tatum, too, has ample reason to crave a victory this afternoon. It is his misfortune to have been the central figure in an interesting anecdote concerning the two teams. Carolina holds a one-sided 36-6-6 all-time margin against their Raleigh relatives. Until last season, the Wolfpack had not beaten Carolina since 1942 and the coach of the 1942 Tar Heel team was a fellow named Jim Tatum.

State will be tough. Tatum said recently that he could think of no tougher opening opponent on the schedule than Duke, Tennessee or perhaps Navy. The Wolfpack are deeper and more experienced than they were a year ago. Edwards will field almost the same team which stopped the Tar Heel last season, with only two or possibly three starters from 1956 missing.

Tatum will be counting heavily on his 22 man "first team" this afternoon. The Tar Heel mentor considers these 22 men of almost equal ability, and all are expected to see considerable action.

Physically, Carolina should be in top shape for the game. Nelson Lowe, an outstanding sophomore quarterback is the only man who'll miss today's game. Lowe pulled a ligament during practice this week and will have to sit this one out, but should be ready for the Clemson game here next week. Ed Furjanic, slated for the left guard starting slot has recovered from his injury and will be ready to go today.

Jack Cummings, another sophomore qb will probably handle the punting for the Tar Heels. Behind Cummings in that department will be Don Coker, Daley Goff and Dave Reed. Phil Blazer is the point after specialist.

Tatum is pretty well set on his starting lineup this afternoon but will probably do some alternating. He'll go with seniors Buddy Payne

Changes Noted In GM Operations

By EDITH MacKINNON

A July 1 change in administrative status for the Director of Graham Memorial Student Union and the GM Board of Directors has been brought about by action taken by the Administration Board on Student Affairs.

Both student government and administration officials recognize the status change as a step toward securing a permanent student union director and more definite plans for a new union building.

In accordance with the new regulation, both the director of GM and the GM Board of Directors are now of the same status as the Council of Student Affairs. This council includes the Office of Admissions, Central Records Office, Dean of Women's Office, Offfice of Student Activities, Housing Office, Placement Office, Health Office and the Testing Office.

Before the raising of status the Student Union director and the GM Board were under the direction of the Office of Student Activities.

During the past summer, at the request of Chancellor W. B. Aycock, a special meeting of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors and the Administration Board on Student Affairs was called. Eighteen of the GM Board of Directors members returned to the campus to present their recommendations to the meeting. The following recommendations concerning the status change were made and approved:

1. "The Director of the Student Union shall report directly to the Dean of Student Affairs (having administrative status equal to the Director of Student Activities, the Director of Admissions, etc.) and shall be a member of the Council of Student Affairs.

2. "The Director of the Student Union shall be nominated by the Board of Directors and appointed by the Chancellor of the University upon the advice of the Dean of Student Affairs; the power to terminate the appointment of the Union director shall be vested in the Chancellor of the University, in consultation with the Board of Directors and the Dean of Student Affairs."

The change in status comes as the result of a three-year effort on the part of Student Government to clarify the situation of Graham Memorial's directorship. According to Student Body President Sonny Evans, the move is a forward step toward a complete change in the philosophy of the Student Union program on the UNC campus. Evans stressed the need on the campus for a professional director to manage the new union.

"In the last 25 years Graham Memorial has had 21 temporary directors. Tom Lambeth is the twenty-second," stated Evans. The student body president added that the status change would emphasize the need for a professional director and would strengthen the GM Board's efforts to secure such a man.

"The former status of the director gave an incorrect picture to all perspective professional men in the field as to what the philosophy of the Student Union was to be on this campus and was stifling every effort that the Graham Memorial Board of Directors made to get an outstanding man of caliber both to run the present Union and to begin plans for a new one," Evans said.

He continued by outlining the duties of such a permanent director, which the GM Board hopes will be a "life-time job." According to Evans, the new director will be in a position not only to manage the present student union program but also to initiate plans for a future new building, and to sell the state of North Carolina on "bringing the UNC program into focus with N. C. State and Woman's College, both of which have new unions."

A new UNC union would be the greatest union in the country, Evans feels, because its budgetary control would still be under the control of the students. The Graham Memorial Board is made up of ten students and six faculty members.

Evans cited the administrative status change as a decided inducement to a man who would be able to design his own union for a university which "will certainly reach a 10,000 enrollment by 1960 and which already has an area set aside for such a union."

"There is no doubt that we will hire a new permanent student union director by September of 1958," Evans concluded.

The appointment of such a director would be the culmination of a long period of study by the GM Board of Directors in seeking a new GM head. During the last year several offers made by the GM Board to outstanding union leaders over the country were turned down. The most recent refusal came from Howard Henry of the University of Wisconsin, who did not accept the GM post after being nominated by the GM Board and approved by Administrative officials.

Chief Justice Suggests New 'One Court System'

Establishment throughout North Carolina of a "one court system of limited civil and criminal jurisdiction at the local level" was called for here last night by Chief Justice J. Wallace Winborne of the State Supreme Court.

Delivering the Heck Lecture at the UNC School of Law, Chief Justice Winborne suggested elimination off local individualized courts and creation of one system of inferior courts, "subject to one supervisory legal authority."

Some improvement in the administration of justice in North Carolina has been brought about by legislation in recent years, he said. "Perhaps the leading accomplishment was the judicial re-districting with a much needed increase in judicial man-power which was brought about in 1955.

"The redistricting of the Superior Courts and the 50 per cent increase in regular judges, plus special and emergency judges available for the enlarged system, has brought a natural result of more cases disposed of and a commensurate increase in the proportion of appeals," the Chiefe Justice reported.

"If this continues, there may be need for an intermediate appellate court," he added.

Chief Justice Winborne suggested needed improvement in the rules or procedure as well as in the structure and administration of the courts.

"Another very important change sponsored by the Judicial Council, but which the Legislature has not seen fit to approve, is a bill which would place the rule-making power in the Supreme Court," he added.

Chief Justice Winborne noted that "with the hoped for simplification of our local courts, the administrative control of the Chief Justice could be extended to all the courts and his powers in this respect broadened.

He cited four of the Canons of Ethics and Rules of Professional Conduct included in Article 10. Foremost among these were:

Workers Hasten Lot Completion

Spectators for the football game will probably to able to use a new parking lot of 350 spaces, Director of Athletics Erickson said yesterday.

He explained Friday afternoon that if the weather continued clear work would go on into the night in order to complete surfacing the lot located east of Kenan Stadium behind the fieldhouse.

Presently the lot will be covered with gravel. The land occupied by the parking spaces was formerly a gully.

For this project, costing approximately $10,000, the Athletic Association payed about half for the drainage. The University payed the other half for grading.

Director Erickson said that recent rains had greatly hampered the construction. In the future the lot will be used five days a year to take care of football crowds.

No action has been started in regards to restricting or zoning the lot. At present the Student Traffic Committee is only considering the Belltower lot for action regarding restrictions.

Thus we feel that gradual educational integration is not only inevitable but necessary.

But we cannot condone the rabble-rousing tactics of certain Northern carpetbegger journalists — carpetbagger journalists who remind us of Fanatic, Schizophrenic John Kasper in their prodding to excavate the extreme.

Such journalistic carpetbaggers are so busy racking the muck that they neglect to mention certain conspicuous silences in North Carolina and Texas and eight tax-supported colleges in Faubus-Peron-tainted Arkansas, and other places which are complying with the law.

The golden sunlight of compliance with the supreme law of the law shines in several Southern states. But the little demigods on wheels continue to rack the muck.

As old Francois says, every darn body's wrong unless he agrees with me. That's the attitude many damnyankees have taken.

We wholeheartedly support gradual educational integration.

But we be damn if we want anything crammed down our throats.

And we abhor this journalistic muck-racking which stifles all but the bad.

Every Southerner isn't as bull-headed as National Guard-caller and hog-caller Gov. Orval Faubus.

From Oregon Daily Emerald:

The Importance Of Why?

Just a minute there. Before you finish that final bit of packing and rush out to buy that extra buckle-back accessory — it's time you thought things over a bit. It's time you asked yourself why. And don't give us that "are they screwy?" look: you owe this one to yourself.

Just why are you packing all these "essentials" to begin a new life you know very little about? Why did you save those pennies from that job this summer, and perhaps several summers, to spend them on something you're not sure of? Why have you parents bustled around making sure you have the "right" things for something you're not even sure is right for you?

Oh, but you are sure, you say; you know very well what this is all about—after all college, higher education, the American way . . . what is there to question why?

How about your motive? Well, to get an education, of course, is your response to that one—what else do you go to college for? And what kind of an education? This is serious business—we've got seniors here that dont' know the answer to that one.

Why are you really going into this big business of college (if you don't think it's big business, you'd better take a look at the budget you've got outlined)?

Is it because that's what has been expected of you since you toddled around waving a college banner in your hand for the relatives? If that's all you can think of to justify this extensive preparation you've been making, and the money's there, go right ahead —but it might be handy to think of some other reason for this higher education kick.

Is it because the rest of "the gang" is all set to go—has been since high school commencement last spring—and you'd be just lost without them? In that case, you'd better start looking at yourself. Chances are that you might even be better off at home taking that job at the telephone office—the one you spurned because you were "off to college."

Is it the social whirl that has you excited? You just can't wait to wade into it—rushing, the parties, the house dances, desserts — the kids in the class of '56 came back last year and told you all about their freshman year and you KNOW it's going to be your whole life. Maybe so, again, we have seniors who think the same way—but not too many seniors; they don't usually last that long with that type of an idea.

Or is it that you know you can make the team, be elected president, show 'em all how it's done? If that's it, fine; we need people who can do these things. But what about the stuff that goes along with it? Can you take the books, the profs, the tests too? If you're not sure you might have done the right thing if you'd gone into the army with that bunch from your class in July.

Some folks may think it's a bit of treason for us to suggest it, but you might be in the wrong institution of higher learning. Try that why once again. Why did you choose Oregon?

Sure, you can go down the list again: the gang is all coming, it's been "expected" of you, you've heard about the "country club" and it's for you. But can you say that seriously?

If you've decided on a major field, fine. But don't count on that one entirely—you're still young; we all are. That's why the University has the general liberal arts course requirements for your freshman and sophomore years. And don't be afraid to follow a change in preference indicated by a like or dislike in one of these courses—even if it leads you out of Oregon to some other school.

In summary, remember, once again, that this is big business. You'd probably give a car quite a bit of test drive if you were going to spend as much on it as you figure to drop in just your first year at Oregon. But you've probably not given Oregon much of a "test drive" at all—except in a few cases like that social life or the campus fire tree placement.

And that's why we wanted you to sit down for a moment. We want you at Oregon, sure, but you can do us — and yourself — more good if you know what you're doing here. That's why you ought to know the importance of the why.

Whit Whitfield

(Whitfield was chairman of the University delegation to the Tenth Annual National Student Association Congress.—The Editor

The United States National Student Association celebrated its tenth birthday in grand style at its Congress site, the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, August 20th through the 30th.

Registration began on Monday, August 19. The following day the first plenary session got under way at four o'clock with Dr. Gallagher, President of City College of New York as the keynote speaker, after which discussion groups met to analyze the address, which was concerned with the topic "The Lost Generation." A reception was held for the speaker later in the evening.

The following day we met in our commissions for the first time. Each delegate is sent one of four commissions. These are Student Government, Student Affairs, Educational Affairs, and Foreign Affairs. Each commission, in turn, is divided into sub-commissions which contain 12-15 people each. Discussions are held in the subcommissions, and ther is a free exchange of ideas from the different schools represented. From the subcommissions originate new and revised policy. Resolutions to be presented on the floor of the plenary sessions must go through the commission first. Here is decided which resolutions are important enough to offer before the plenary sessions. This process keeps the amount of work to be done in the plenaries at a reasonable level.

The subcommissions met Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. There were also some commission sessions meeting simultaneously on Saturday and Sunday. All commissions met on Monday.

Aside from the commissions and subcommissions, there were also business plenary sessions every day, as well as regional caucuses.

On Wednesday, August 21st, the Honorable G. Mennen (Soapy) Williams, Governor of the State of Michigan spoke to the delegates in plenary session. The California-Nevada Hawaii region was kind enough to put soap flakes in several of the many beautiful fountains on campus near the auditorium as a welcome. He viewed this as an ingenious way to say hello, to say the least. His talk consisted of a hearty welcome to the USNSA, which was relatively brief and to the point. Then he expounded upon the merits of the State of Michigan for the remainder of the time. He had an excellent sense of humor however, so the talk was not as boring as one would suppose. His braggadacio was without peer.

On Friday, August 23rd, Ruth Geri Hagy, creator and moderator of the College News Conference, spoke to us briefly about a conference she had just finished with John Foster Dulles, about her job as Chairman of the USNSA Financial Advisory Board, and about our responsibility as delegates. Then he introduced Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota who spoke at length extemporaneously (as senators are prone to do at times). Much of his speech was concerned with his efforts as a senator to inquire, to speak, and to legislate to the best of his ability, but mainly the new Civil Rights Bill which he had furthered.

The next evening the Past Presidents' Banquet was held, honoring all the past officers, but particularly the presidents: Nine were present altogether, two of which were former Carolina students. They were Al Lowenstein and Dick Murphy. Earh president introduced his fellow officers who were present, and then each president delivered an address.

Lowenstein, for those of you who don't know him, was probably the most popular personality of the Congress. Every time he had occasion to speak, regardless of how bored the delegates were, their ears pricked up and everyone listened intently. He was picked deliberately to be the last speaker at the banquet for his oratorical prowess we believe, for after four hours of words, most of the delegates were asleep mentally if not physically. The delegates were in stitches for 35 minutes as he brought the program to its finish. Again, for those of you who do not know him, he most definitely is not the sophisticated and poised picture that you might paint, but instead he is quite earthy and unconventional, which no doubt are the reasons for his popularity. Entertainment was provided at the banquet by the famous folk-singer, Odetta, who kept the audience wide-eyed during her several selections.

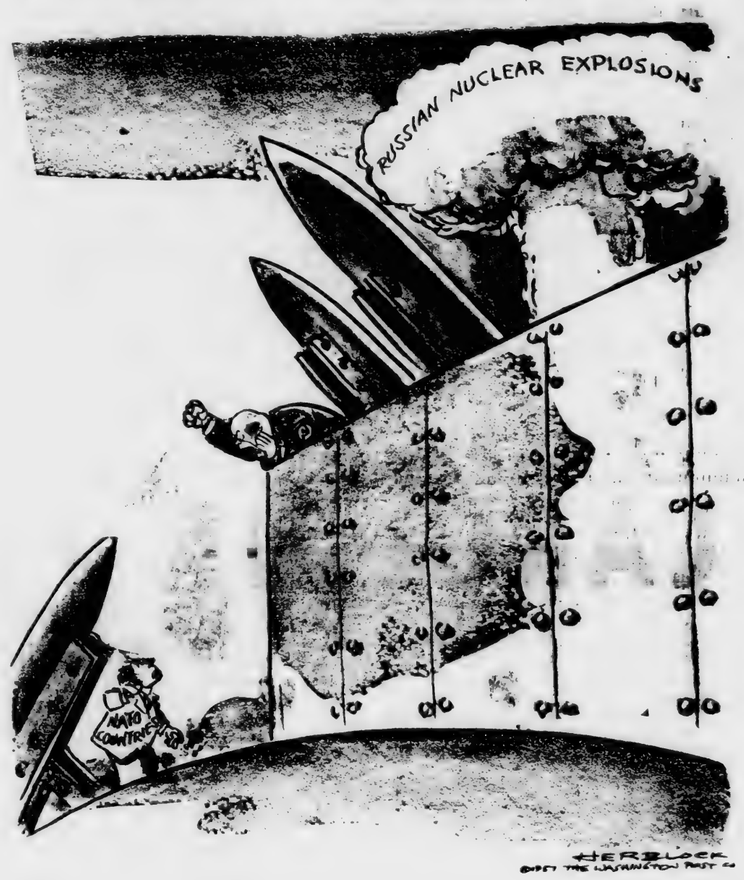
On Monday afternoon John Cogley, former editor of the Commonweal, spoke to the delegates in plenary session on the topic "Freedom." Mr. Cogley is currently a member of the Fund for the Republic.

The agendas for the final plenary sessions were so large that recess was not called until well after 1 a.m. It was only after this that the regional caucuses could convene.

Friday, August 20th, the last day of the Congress, was reserved for the election of officers for the coming year.

Sidelights On The Congress



Even though the hours were long and often arduous, there were some interesting sidelights to the Congress. The demonstrations by the different regions were usually amusing, some even laugh proviking. None of the sessions started on time, so to amuse themselves, as well as the other delegates, different groups would sing, perform stunts and skits.

Parties of one sort or another were given each morning after the sessions were over. These were usually over by 3 a.m. Then most everyone had breakfast.

The Carolinas-Virginia region did itself proud in this respect by initiating a series of parties at the American Legion Hut which were successful enough so that they were held for several nights in succession. Also, on the next to last evening our region rented the Hut and invited the whole Congress to be its guests, which it did. (The money came out of each individual's pocket, to clear up any misconceptions as to how the delegations' money was spent.)

The work, the fun, the exchange of ideas, and fellowship—all integral parts of the NSA Congress. Those who were fortunate enough to attend will never forget the experience.

GUESTS EDITORIALS:

A Perspectus Of The Publications

N. C. State Technician:

For the past several years there has been much controversy each fall about tickets to football games. Each year a hasty plan is drawn up and announced to the students about mid-season. It seems that this is a very fine example of very poor planning.

There is one month left in the present school year. The problem of date tickets and tickets in general should be ironed out now, rather than next year. The students have a right to know before next year at registration whether they are going to have tickets, ticket books, or identification cards to get into the State-Carolina game—which is the very next day after registration.

The Student Government in the past several weeks has recommended both that students have identification cards (instead of ticket books) next year and that date tickets be available for $1.00

The Athletic Council must now make a decision on these recommendations. It seems that it is the duty of the Athletic Council to meet immediately and make some decision on both of these matters. Of course, the Council could wait and hold its next meeting after school is out and leave the students uninformed on any decisions until next year. We hope, however, that they will not follow such a course.

Many students now have the opinion that $1.00 date tickets are definite and that they are a "sure thing" for next year. This is not the case, however. One dollar date tickets are not definite . . . in fact, we have heard that the Chancellor has said that there is very little chance, if any at all, that we will have them. (And if the William & Mary game is sold to the Shriners, how much chance is there of getting a ticket for one dollar to that game?)

Those who are opposed to the $1.00 date tickets say it is financially impossible. They point to the fact that nearly one-half the Stadium would be filled with people who were paying less than a third of what the tickets could be sold for to others, and say that just last year the football team went $18,000 in debt.

As for the identification cards, there is the problem of getting them ready—with photographs—while the student is registering . . . or at least by the football game the next day.

Admittedly, the Athletic Council has two problems here. Not in spite of the problems, but because of them do we request that the Council meet as soon as possible. The problems should be resolved and the student body should be informed before school is out of any decisions made.

The Miami Hurricane:

That college students have a monopoly on foolishness is a world-renowned fact. Any mature adult will readily tell you about the idiocy of goldfish-eating, panty raids and the like.

Is this such a monopoly, however? A local paper recently featured an article about a fellow who wanted to set a world record for staying under water. We realize, of course, the importance of staying underwater as far as fish are concerned, but aside from the possible theory of colonizing the bottom of the ocean, why humans?

Another favorite pastime of non-college students used to be flagpole-sitting. The logic behind this inane endeavor also escapes us. Possibly a more accurate study of the solar system may be obtained if one is fifty feet closer to stars several billion light years away.

Add to this the adult carousel riders, people who push peanuts with their nose, ad infinitum, and what have we got? Merely the knowledge that no particular group can say that they are less foolish than another. Or more.

The Cavalier Daily:

Another bill to repeal the poll tax will be introduced to the General Assembly this year. Supporters of the repeal movement predict that this year's try will fail as have others before it. It is unfortunate that Virginia, which is hailed as the cradle of democracy, should tolerate so undemocratic an instrument as the poll tax.

Two theories are advanced explaining the purpose of Virginia's poll tax. One states that it is to keep Negroes and poor whites away from the ballot box. The other says that it is to keep the vote small so that carefully organized groups, which have paid their taxes, can wield greater power in general elections. Both are repugnant to the most basic principles of democracy.

Probably the single argument in favor of the tax which could approach validity is that its payment is within the means of all—the annual rate is only $1.50. It is not the amount which holds down Virginia's vote, it is the trouble of paying it. Citizens who live in one place and pay state property taxes can pay the poll tax at the same time, but persons who move around and have no holdings upon which to pay a property tax must show what amounts to great initiative to get their poll tax paid. It usually requires a special trip to city hall for registration. With complications like this in the path of our voting privilege, it is easy to understand how Virginia stands fifth from the bottom of all states in percentages of eligible voters casting ballots. It is a disgrace to our state.

Text books of this University teach us that a democratic principle just as important to us as Majolty Ruse is Regard for Minority Interests. This second principle seems to have flown to the four winds in recent years, not only in the case of the poll tax but also as it concerns the great issue of racial segregation facing us today. Perhaps facts such as these should be made plainer to the members of the General Assembly whose continued support of the poll tax seems to perpetuate its existence in Virginia law.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH
Chapel Hill

IS CONCERNED WITH PERSONAL AND SOCIAL MORALITY

Jesus brings to men principles that are essential to the well-being of the individual and the increase of justice and good-will in society. Believing this we want our Church to play a critical and corrective role within the framework of our common life.

ENCOURAGES FREEDOM OF THOUGHT

God has spoken "in various times and divers places." So no church, indeed, no single religion, has the complete and final truth about God and man's relationship to him.

Individual freedom of conscience is maintained at all times. There is no formal creed to which all must subscribe, no book of discipline, no fixed rules or regulations. Our appeal is to the sensitive and concerned conscience.

TRANSCENDS RACE, COLOR AND NATIONAL ORIGIN

EMPHASIZES RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

We would know and pass on to our children the wisdom recorded in our Judeo-Christian sacred writings. We would also acquaint them with universal truths as perceived by saints and seers of other religions.

SERVES THE COMMUNITY AT HOME AND ABROAD

The Community Church works separately and in cooperation with other community agencies to meet human needs.

IS DEMOCRATIC IN ITS ORGANIZATION AND GOVERNMENT

Every member of the Church has equal voice with every other member. The program of the Church is planned by committees chosen from the membership.

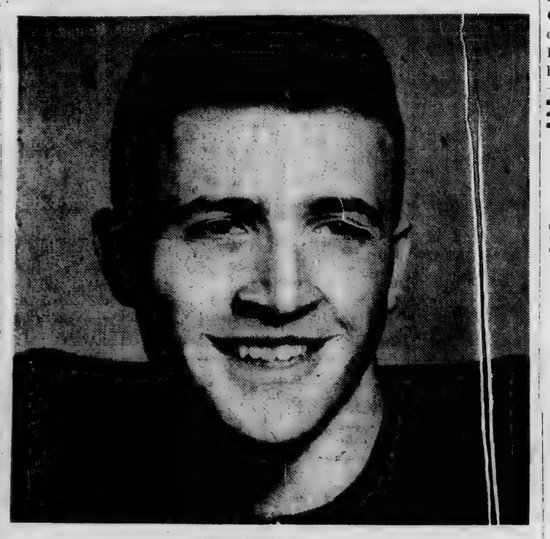
Choo Choo Was Impressed With Work Of Schuler

The little man who started a legend here was back in town. He was talking to Carolina football coach Jim Tatum about prospects for the 1957 season. The occasion was the first full scale, game scrimmage of the year for the Tar Heel varsity.

Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice, the all-time great Tar Heel halfback whose deeds on the gridiron during the late 40's left an everlasting memory for football fans in these parts, was impressed with the latest grid edition of his old alma mater. He had good reason to be—the Tar Heels had just scored 11 touchdowns in a brillant display of offensive fireworks that surprised even Coach Tatum.



Justice, who was in town to get a line on the progress of the 1957 Tar Heels, had nothing but praise for the offensive star of the day, sophomore Jim Schuler. "I never was that good in my first varsity scrimmage," Justice remarked. "That boy looks like a real great ball carrier."

Tatum looekd pleased with his new find too. Schuler, now a High Point, N. C. resident, transferred to North Carolina this year from the University of Washington. His family moved east from Santa Monica, Calif., and to hear Jim talk, it was the best thing that ever happened to him.

With Justice looking on, the 180-pound sophomore flash scored three touchdowns for the winning Blue team and was the leading ground gainer during the afternoon. He had runs of 60, 38, 32 and 25 yards, not to mention several stabs up the middle for five yards plus. It was his day to shine and he made the most of it.

The play of Jim Schuler is typical of the Jim Tatum football machine this year. Definitely a dark-horse after last season's disasterous 2-7-1 slate, the Tar Heels will be counting on several sophomore "rookies," just like Schuler, to give the team depth. If and when these untried gridders advance from the chrysalis stage to full bloom, Tatum will have a sound unit, capable of topping anyone in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

As far as "Choo Choo" is concerned, football at Carolina is finally returning to post-war brilliance. Old No. 22 saw shades of it that day in the running of Schuler and a great passing attack that clicked to the tune of 16 completions despite the absence of first team quarterback Dave Reed.

Actually, this afernoon's extravaganza might be termed a battle of the darkhorses. Both clubs have won the respect of the other conference teams but neither is rated highly in the national scope.

Offensively, anything could happen. Omitting the weather element the Tar Heels will probably pass more than the Wolfpack. Reed is considered a top-notch passer. State has a couple of the best running backs in the country in Dick Christy and Dick Hunter. However, quarterbacks Frank Cackovic and Tom Katich are a couple of fine prospective passers. Thus, it will be one of those games when nothing comes as a real surprise. Carolina should be able to run with the Pack if Tatum choses to do so.

Experience-wise, State holds the edge. One of the Tar Heel's brightest elements of hope is that Reed, who missed the entire game last season, will be in there pitching today.

A crowd of thirty thousand or more is expected to be on hand for this ACC and Big Four opener. Today is Greater University Day and student bodies of Carolina, State and Woman's College in Greensboro will be in Kenan Stadium to lend color to the occasion.

THE MIXTURE AS BEFORE

Today begins my fourth year of writing this column and, as before, I will continue to explore the issues that grip the keen young mind of campus America—burning questions like "Should housemothers be forced to retire at 28?" and "Should pajamas and robes be allowed at first-hour classes?" and "Should proctors be armed?" and "Should picnicking be permitted in the stacks?" and "Should teachers above the rank of associate professor be empowered to perform marriages?" and "Should capital punishment for pledges be abolished?"

Should capital punishment for pledges be abolished?

Philip Morris Incorporated sponsors this column. Philip Morris Incorporated makes Philip Morris cigarettes. They also make Marlboro cigarettes. Marlboro is what I am going to talk to you about this year.

Before beginning the current series of columns, I made an exhaustive study of Marlboro advertising. This took almost four minutes. The Marlboro people don't waste words. They give it to you fast: "You get a lot to like in a Marlboro . . . Filter . . . Flavor . . . Flip-top Box."

Well, sir, at first this approach seemed to me a little terse, a bit naked. Perhaps, thought I, I should drape it with a veil of violet prose, adorn it with a mantle of fluffy adjectives, dangle some participles from the ears . . . But then I thought, what for? Doesn't that tell the whole Marlboro story? . . . Filter . . . Flavor . . . Flip-top Box.

Marlboro tastes great. The filter works. So does the box. What else do you need to know?

So, with the Marlboro story quickly told, let us turn immediately to the chief problem of undergraduate life—the money problem. This has always been a vexing dilemma, even in my own college days. I recall, for example, a classmate named Oliver Hazard Sigafoos, a great strapping fellow standing 14 hands high, who fell in love with a beautiful Theta named Nikki Spillane, with hair like beaten gold and eyeballs like two tablespoons of forgetfulness.

Every night Oliver Hazard would take Nikki out to dine and dance, and then to dine again, for dancing made Nikki ravenous. Then they would go riding in the swan boats, and then Nikki, her appetite sharpened by the sea air, would have 8 or 10 cutlets, and then Oliver Hazard would take her home, stopping on the way to buy her a pail of oysters or two.

To raise money for these enchanted evenings, Oliver Hazard took on a number of part-time jobs. Between classes he cut hair. After school he gutted perches. From dusk to midnight he vulcanized medicine balls. From midnight to dawn he trapped night crawlers.

This crowded schedule took, alas, a heavy toll from Oliver Hazard. In the space of a month he dwindled from 260 to 104 pounds—but that, curiously enough, proved his salvation.

Today Oliver Hazard is a jockey, earning a handsome living which, combined with what he makes as a lymph donor after hours, is quite sufficient to curb Nikki's girlish appetite. Today they are married and live in Upper Marlboro, Maryland, with their two daughters, Filter and Flavor, and their son, Flip-top Box.

Wolfpack Takes Second Consecutive Win; Tar Heels Unable To Pierce State's Line

LOOK WHAT I CAUGHT

Quarterback Dave Reed pitched out to RH Goff with four minutes thirty-three seconds gone in the third quarter. Goff went to his left, sat and threw this pass to LH DeCantis. DeCantis was tackled by No. 17 Cackovic and No. 22 Christy. In the background is No. 84 for Carolina Don Kemper, No. 24 for State, Trowbridge. The play carried to the State 30 yard line, but was recalled because Carolina had an illegal receiver down field.

Carolina Downed 7-0 In 1st Game

By BILL KING

N. C. State halfback Dick Hunter wiggled five yards for a touchdown at the close of the first quarter and the Wolfpack line throttled Carolina's running attack all afternoon to give State a 7-0 victory over the Tar Heels in Kenan Stadium yesterday.

The largest Kenan Stadium crowd since the Tennessee game in 1953, 39,000, watched the Wolfpack administer a second straight setback to Jim Tatum's Tar Heels in a season opener at Kenan. The Wolfpack romped to a 26-6 win last season.

State's big line was entirely too much for the Tar Heels. The Chapel Hillians could muster only 73 yards rushing while the Raleigh club chopped out 252 through the Carolina front wall.

Hunter's five yard touchdown run was the culmination of a 76 yard drive from the Carolina 24 yard line. Second string center Paul Balonick was the man who set the stage for the tally when he pounced on a fumble by Carolina fullback John Hayworth at the 24.

From there it took the Wolfpack just six plays to go over for the score. Halfback Ron Podwika got two yards around left end. Quarterback Frank Cackovic then pitched out to Wally Prince and Prince went six yards before flipping back to Cackovic who carried all the way to the Tar Heel 23. Cackovic lost a yard and had a pass intercepted by Emil DeCantis but State kept possession as Carolina was penalized 15 yards for holding.

The penalty put the ball on the Carolina 5 and Hunter squirmed over from there on the next play. The speedy Wolfpack back then booted the extra point to give State the 7-0 edge.

Carolina's two biggest threats came in the final quarter when the Tar Heels twice moved within the State 30.

With 11:20 remaining, the Carolina moved to the State 23 after Dave Reed's 52 yard quick-kick had backed State deep into its own territory. Haywood intercepted a Cackovic pass at the Wolfpack 39 and went to the 23. The Tar Heels could not take advantage of the break as they ran four plays and lost a yard. Two Reed passes and one by sophomore Qb Jack Cummings were incomplete during the series.

Biggest gain of the day by Carolina came moments later when Hunter kicked to DeCantis on the Carolina 30 and he returned it to the 38. Cummings then fired a 35 yard pass to Al Goldstein and the Tar Heels had the ball on the State 28. Three plays later at 6:33 Carolina had lost back to the 43 and Curt Hathaway punted into the end zone.

From there, the Wolfpack ran out the clock, holding the ball for six minutes and 20 seconds and picking up four first downs in the process.

Tatum substituted frequently in an attempt to come up with the best combination. The Tar Heel mentor used three men at every position and substituted mostly in units. The quarterback trio of Reed, Hathaway and Cummings threw a total of 17 passes and completed four for 75 yards.

The Tar Heel backs simply could not penatrate the more experienced State line. Time and again the Big Red stopped the Tar Heels when it seemed that a big surge might be in the making.

Co-Captain Buddy Payne was perhaps the outstanding line performer as he grabbed a couple of passes for good yardage and returned a kickoff 21 yards. Halfback Daley Goff was the only back to gain more than 12 yards as he went for 34.

For the Wolfpack, it was Cackovic, Hunter, Dick Christy, Don Hafer and quarterback Tom Kalich who did the most damage. Christy set a school rushing mark early in the fourth quarter.

Physically, the Tar Heels were unharmed except for a slight shoulder injury to DeCantis.

Next Saturday Carolina will meet the Clemson Tigers in Kenan Stadium.

UNC 'Afraid Of Mistakes' Tatum Says After Opener

By DAVE WIBLE

Amid the shouts of "Poor Carolina!" from the east side of Kenan Stadium and the murmurs of, "wait 'til basketball season," from the west side the beaten, exhausted Tar Heels slowly ambled off the field toward the locker room.

"Profit by your mistakes," the assistant coaches repeated over and over as they moved around the locker room giving each of the players a reassuring pat on the back. When all the players were in the room the door was closed and Coach Tatum spoke.

Tatum told the press later the text of his talk to the team. "We are playing scared football-afraid of making mistakes. The line charged with reserve. So many mistakes already made, afraid of making more." Tatum said it and the players agreed. Co-captain Buddy Payne put it this way." The team needs something to hold onto, to give us drive and confidence."

Tatum does not feel as if he is in the same spot as he was this time last year. "It will not be as great a problem this year since we have more youngsters giving us quality depth."

The weather was an important factor in the game. Both teams felt it but the inexperienced Carolina sophomores felt it more. Tatum pointed out that a veteran football player knows how to rest and regain their energy when they are out of the game but less experienced ones don't.

Payne when asked how he felt said, "Usually when you're down on about the poor Carolina cheering the field you don't hear it, but when you're in a spot a good show of support by the students gives you a boost to not let them down." However, "I think that the team must take the first step and give the students something to cheer for."

Tatum had no excuse for the loss other than the bad breaks which he says he always gets when he plays State. "Every time we made a long gain it would be called back."

The dressing room gradually emptied as the Tar Heels left to join friends and well wishers outside. Handshakes were exchanged and individual compliments given, only to be answered by slow meaning nodding of heads. The Tar Heels had lost again.

In Brief

Explosion Wounds Coed

MUNCIE, IND., —(AP)— State and Local Police have joined forces to find the sender of a booby-trapped package that exploded on the Ball State Teachers College Campus and wounded a pregnant coed.

Mrs. Melvin Reynolds, 20-year-old senior home economics student from Anderson, Ind., was reported in satisfactory condition at Ball Memorial Hospital. The blast from a shotgun shell severed the tips of two fingers on her right hand and riddled her face, neck and arm with buckshot. Mrs. Reynolds is expecting a child in two months.

Russia Denies Charge

MOSCOW, —(AP)— The Soviet Government has denied that Russian Police held an Israeli diplomat for 26 hours and threatened him with death unless he spied for Russia.

The foreign office termed Israeli charges in the incident a provocative statement issued to hide the diplomat's anti-Soviet activities.

Israel charged last Monday that her Moscow Embassy Secretary, Eliyahu Hazan, was seized by Soviet agents while vacationing in Odessa. It said he was questioned for 26 hours and told he would "disappear" unless he agreed to spy for Russia. Hazan has since flown back to Israel.

Beck Defies AFL-CIO

MIAMI BEACH, FLA., —(AP)— In a new show of defiance, Dave Beck, retiring president of the Teamsters Union, told the AFL-CIO that it is up to the Teamsters' membership to decide whether top officials have been guilty of wrongdoing.

He also denied charges made by the AF-CIO Ethical Practices Committee and, in effect, rejected an invitation to appear at a hearing on them before the AFL-CIO Executive Council in New York Tuesday.

MANAGER WANTED

Anyone interested in the position of advertising manager for the Carolina Quarterly should contact the editor, Christian Lefebure, any day between 3 and 5 at the Quarterly office in Graham Memorial. This is a paying job based on percentage of sales.

5 New Series Slated On TV

Five new series of live nationwide TV programs will appear on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, the University's educational television station. The series will begin October 28.

One of the scheduled series will concentrate on the International Geophysical Year, surveying the range of activities now going on as a part of the IGY.

American resources, current affairs and creative arts will be among the subjects of the other series.

Each of the series, including 10 programs telecast over a 10-week period, will be presented Monday through Friday nights from 6 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Adlai Here Next Saturday

Former Presidential Candidate Adlai Stevenson will deliver a public address here next Saturday during a one-day visit in Chapel Hill and Raleigh.

He will speak at 10:30 a.m. in Memorial Hall and later will attend the Carolina-Clemson football game with a host of local and state officials.

Traveling under auspicies of Encyclopedia Britannica Films, Inc., Stevenson will arrive at Raleigh-Durham Airport at 5 p.m. Friday and will stay at Carolina Inn that night.

His address here was arranged by the North Carolina Citizens for Better Schools, an agency appointed by Gov. Hodges and headed by Holt McPherson of High Point.

Saturday night, Stevenson will be the house guest of Governor and Mrs. Hodges in Raleigh. His address here will be followed by a press conference in Gerard Hall.

Stevenson is chairman of the advisory board of the Britannica firm, a post he accepted last April upon his return to private life.

At that time he said he accepted the position because of the "unusual opportunities" it offered to lend his influence to audio-visual education in the nation's schools.

ADLAI STEVENSON

"After years of familiarity with public questions. I have found the deficiencies in education our most serious and urgent domestic concern," Stevenson said.

He predicted a "major breakthrough into a new era of teaching" with the application of audio-visual techniques and said classroom film can "improve education at all ages."

"I am convinced of the need for greater public understanding of the role of the motion pictures in teaching," he added.

In numerous communities, he continued, techniques of audio-visual education have been used "with such stimulating effects that I foresee a major breakthrough into a new era of teaching."

Stevenson's visit here will also include breakfast Saturday morning with President Friday and lunch at 12:30 p.m. in the Morehead Building.

Riot Follows Saturday Game

Riot broke out after the Carolina-State game here yesterday and police hauled at least two men away.

Local officers said it would be "at least 7:30 or 8 p.m." before charges, if any, were lodged at the police department here.

Two officers escorted one middle-aged fan off the field only moments after another unidentified person had been nabbed by police.

A full report of the riot could not be obtained from official sources by press time.

Hundreds of fans thronged the south end of Kenan Stadium when a mob—apparently instigated by State College fans—attempted to tear down the goal post there.

As officers hauled one man away, another observer mingled among

Time Flits; Cars Stall; Police Grab Much Moola

"Flitting away, flitting away; All that we cherished most dear; There is nothing on earth that will stay; Roses must die with the year.", —Alphonso Alva Hopkins.

Time is inded flitting away, and the new 577-space parking lot just isn't finished.

The congested situation was slated to be partially relieved by completion of the new parking lot by the first of this month. Now the whole matter is rather indefinite.

Some say the middle of next month. Some say the latter part of the month.

We say it's overdue.

And the Chapel Hill Police Dept. makes us tired as it picks our pockets at the slightest provocation. A new municipal palace of gold is in order for the thousands of $$$$$$ which police have taken from students.

If the parking lot isn't soon completed, students may not be able to afford cars. And the much-needed lots won't even be needed.

Pork-Barrel, Reps! Or Feather Dose Nests!

There is an old frowned-up political practice known as pork-barreling in which a representative feathers the nests of his own constituents.

We openly advocate pork-barreling among student legislators as the new 23rd assembly swings into session.

In the past there has been a tendency among student representatives to play hush-mouth throughout meetings when theoretically he is entrusted with the responsibility of playing mouthpiece for a constituency of 250 or more students.

Every student is supposedly verbally represented by a spokesman in the legislature. Thus an elected representative must investigate the problems of his constituents, afford them opportunity to express their gripes and complaints, and air his findings before the lawmakers assembled on Thursday night.

The past 22nd assembly was commendable in that 60-plus measures ran the legislative gamet. But still there were representatives upon whom was thrust the responsibility of speaking for their constituency yet did not once speak during the assembly.

There are too many Thursday night legislators—the rest of the week during which investigation should be conducted be hanged.

Thus we make open advocation for pork barreling.

Feather your constituents' nests, lawmakers. That's why you're there.

From Our 1955 Files: Heart Must Dictate . . .

"As long as there are people like me around there will be trouble," an acquaintance told us the other day. He referred to the trials of desegregation, which he strenuously opposes.

By now he must be disappointed to find the ranks of his comrades in trouble-making so shallow.

We have heard little more than the grumblings of the professional malcontents since the three Negro undergraduates, Brandon and the two Fraziers, were enrolled in the University. If our ears don't deceive us, even that grumbling has lost decibels.

The revolution has gained its foothold quietly, unanswered by grenades, counterrevolutions, and exposures of Ku Klux mentality within the student body.

Outside of the Board of Trustees, there seem few left who believe an appeal of the court directive will avail any stay. Thus, overnight, has the University's mandate in the matter of desegregation passed from the first to the second stage; but the second stage has not lost its magnitude.

The obligations at the second stage are well pointed up, we think, by Dr. E. McNeill Poteat in The Greensboro Daily News. Writing on the conflict between recognition of individual need and zeal to protect institutions, he has this to say:

We cannot dispense with either aspect of the problem since each is necessary to the other. Nevertheless one may wonder what would happen if by magic the concern of the world could suddenly and for a sustained period be turned to human need even if, for the nonce, concern for dogma could be reduced.

Suppose . . . instead of protecting our denominational system we united in creating a Christian Community . . .

Our loitering at the level of academic argument has been cancelled. The court has ruled out the dogma of Jim Crow admissions policy, and has barred the way to quibbling about institutions and so-called principles. The institutions undeserving of permanency have gone the old route, but human need remains.

Our worthiness in the way we acquit ourselves will depend, for the most part, upon the heart and not the intellect.

PETITE DRAMATIQUE:

Playmakers To Hold Tryout For 'The Lark'

Anthony Wolfe

When tryouts for "The Lark" begin tomorrow afternoon, the Carolina Playmakers will enter their fourtieth season, and the current crop of Playmakers will fall heir to a highly respected tradition on the Carolina campus.

In 1918, the organization was founded as something of an experiment in "community theatre," as well as a workshop for the new Department of Dramatic Art. The Carolina Playmakers became known in the years that followed as one of the leading theatrical groups of its type.

* * *

One of the earliest notable Playmaker alumni was Thomas Wolfe; the most recent was Andy Griffith; in between, many former Playmakers have gone on to work in various capacities in the American theatre. Bettina Jinette, a leading Playmaker last season, is now appearing off-Broadway in "Sweeny Todd."

Besides preparing students interested in the theatre for the professional ranks, the Playmakers is also one of the leading sources of entertainment for the campus, the town, and surrounding communities.

This season begins on October 16, when Lillian Hellman's translation of Jean Anouilh's "The Lark," directed by Kai Jurgenson, will begin a four day run.

The next production, running from November 15, through the 17, is the well-known "Teahouse of the Augus: Moon," John Patrick's Pulitzer Prize-winning comedy about the American occupation of Okinawa. "Teahouse" replaces the customary musical in Memorial Hall.

* * *

This season' pre-Christmas show is J. M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows"—a venerable comedy involving marital difficulties.

Perhaps the major event of the season will be one of the first American productions of the expanded version of Arthur Miller's "A View From The Bridge." One of the critical successes of last year on Broadway, the play was expanded into its present form for the London stage, where it was received very well.

"A View From The Bridge" is a stunning realistic drama about the domestic upheaval of a lower class immigrant family when an adopted daughter falls in love.

Arthur Miller is America's finest living tragic playwright, as well as being Marilyn Monroe's husband. His earlier works include "Death of a Salesman," and "The Crucible."

Two evenings of one-act plays by Paul Green, performed by the Playmakers and visiting dramatic groups from eight theatres in the Southeast, take over the Playmakers stage on March 28, and 29.

* * *

For the last production of the season, Shakespeare's "The Comedy of Errors," the Playmakers move to the Forest Theatre.

The absence of Shakespeare from last years Playmaker program was a serious error of omission, and it is heartening to see at least one of the Bard's works will be presented this year. Certainly some training in the classics is essential for any student of the theatre, and it is equally certain that Shakespeare is good for the audience as well.

Aside from "Teahouse of the August Moon," which is an obvious commercial venture, this year's list looks like solid theatre and good entertainment. Whether anything will compare with last year's "Peer Gynt" is hard to say, but the overall calibre of the performances may well surpass that of the past season.

Maurice Evans will bring his Broadway production of "No Time For Sergeants" to the same place later in the year. This is the play which gave Carolina's Andy Griffith his first Broadway hit.

"Oh, Boy — Lots Of Headlines"

TO RUN OR NOT: 'TIME'

Adlai Refuses To Run 'But Grandson's Grown'

In the ten months since Adlai Stevenson tiredly conceded that he had lost an election but gained a grandchild, he has been busy influencing friends and winning column inches.

Showing slight interest in settling down to the nonpolitical routine of his Chicago-New York-Washington law practice, Stevenson toured Africa and Europe on a three-month, 16-nation jaunt, wrote articles, delivered speeches, held press conferences, appeared on television shows, enjoyed publication of his biography and his collected 1956 campaign speeches.

At intervals, he thumped away at the man who beat him twice—and at some politicians in his own party. Stevenson openly disapproved of the civil rights compromise approved by Presidential Prospect Lyndon Johnson, snorted loudly at the independence and interdependence scheme for Algeria advanced by Presidential Prospect John Kennedy.

All this began to touch off speculation about Adlai's hopes and aims: in the event that none of the new presidential hopefuls seems to have a commanding lead, might not seasoned old gladiator Stevenson be sent out in 1960 for yet another battle? Gossiped Chicago Tribune Columnist Herb Lyon: "Some of Adlai Stevenson's most avid Chicago followers are plotting to get him to try again."

Last week Stevenson took painful pains to scotch the idea. Said he: "I am not a candidate; I will not be a candidate, and I don't want the nomination." The tone was familiar. There was once a candidate who said, "I do not dream myself fit for the job—temperamentally, mentally or physically.

And I ask therefore that you all abide by my wishes not to nominate me." This was Adlai Stevenson, speaking to his Illinois delegation six days before he accepted his first Democratic presidential nomination, in 1952.

Carolina Forum members are flapping over the frigid way 'I gained a grandson but lost the election' Adlai Stevenson decided to breeze into Chapel Hill for a short address next Saturday. The Forum's been trying for a number of years to secure Mr. Stevenson's oratorical services, but to no avail.

Is the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs destined to see a vigorous fight from "I was pushed into resigning because I was dictatorial" Frank Crowther?

L'IL ABNER — by Al Capp

THE LIBERAL MIND:

Semantic Smog Of Sagacious Slurs?

Frank Crowther

Since the University of North Carolina is often referred to as the "liberal mind of the South," we may well ask the questions: "What is liberalism?" "Are we really liberal-minded?;" and "What are the aims of contemporary liberals?"

In dealing with the first question, we will certainly run into no end of difficulty. The word liberal itself seems to suggest an open-handedness and largeness in the thing given—but this isn't the definition which we are seeking. Again, liberality, a vague term itself, supposedly represents a form of generous open or broad-mindedness. This too is equally general. So we may turn to liberalism and hope to find our answer.

Liberalism today is a kind of misnomer. The term has been so misapplied and misbegotten that we no longer have any specific definition of the term. We may, but it has become foggy.

In the original interpretation of liberalism it was used to describe the principles and/or the methods of those people who favored greater freedom in dealing with political or religious matters. Practically applied, it refers to social reform and a political democracy, the liberal method used being that of gradual change and improvement. We will be better able to see where the term should be placed if a comparison is used: Conservatives, who for the most part wish to maintain the status quo, speak with a euphonious voice; Radicals, who wish to make revolutionary changes in the present order of things, speak in a more cacophonous tone; the Liberals occupy the middle ground between the two. The analogy may be oversimplified, but it serves a purpose.

If we further narrow the subject and try to see which way a liberal would lean, it would undoubtedly be toward conservatism. If there is any common ground, and we think there is, it is occupied by conservatives and liberals. As Emerson wrote: "Each is a great half, but an impossible whole. Each exposes the abuses of the other, but in a true society, in a true man, both must combine." Their common ground, then, is the belief that we must have a free society with civil liberties and an extensive distribution of political and economic power and control.

Now, the two must part company, and to give the best possible arguments for the liberals, I will have to refer to the writings of two of our greatest contemporary liberals, Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., and Theodore Meyer Greene. The following are excerpts from several of their works, with a few, very few, of my own remarks interspersed.

Greene feels that our freedoms are in a double jeopardy.

"We are confronted externally by a ruthless enemy engaged in its own 'great experiment at home and apparently determined to dominate the entire globe . . . . What alone concerns us is the growing might of Soviet communism and, in particular, its radical repudiation of the freedoms we value—freedom of speech on all controversial issues and the right of honest dissent, freedom of worship and the rights of religious minorities, and all the other freedoms the Constitution and its amendments seek to protect . . . .'

"But there is also, "Greene continues, 'a grave internal threat to our freedoms against which we are not yet suffciently on guard. The most dramatic symbol of this threat is the hunt for Communists in our midst by methods that flagrantly violate the very freedoms we profess to cherish . . . . What is alarming is the wide public support of these men (elected representatives who are unscrupulous demagogues) have elicited, the failure of leaders in every walk of life to protest and resist these practices, and, above all, the atmosphere of fear and suspicion generated by such tactics throughout the nation. The danger of Communist infiltration is indeed urgent . . . but the danger of losing our rights and freedoms in the very effort to defend them is far greater."

Further on, Green quotes John Foster Dulles in the latter's book, WAR OR PEACE, as follows: "Something has gone wrong with our nation, or we should not be in our present plight and mood. It is not like us to be on the defensive and to be fearful. That is new in our history . . . ."

Green himself later asks, "Do we today face Communism and the rest of the world with a comparable philosophy, program, and passion? How deep and how informed is our devotion to our cause, our Great Experiment (which was our original quest for Liberty when the Foundation Fathers crossed the Atlantic to escape religious persecution and secular restraint)?

"History seems to have played an ironic trick on us. Would not an impartial observer, surveying the two opposing camps . . ., expect to find greater loyalty and zeal, a firmer belief and a more passionate dedication, among us, with our historic faith in a God of righteousness and love, our traditional respect for all men as men, and our age-old search for objective truth and justice? . . . . Yet it is the Communists who seem to have the missionary zeal; we the indifference; it is they who have a shared philosophy and common creed, which we seem to lack; it is too often they, not we, who seem today to be capturing the imagination of men and women who are in desperate need and are looking for a solution to their own most urgent problems . . . .

In concluding his chapter on "The Crucial Problem of Our Time (in his book LIBERALISM AND THE LIBERAL ATTITUDE), he asks, Can we achieve a steadfast common faith, a liberal equivalent of the Communist Manifesto? Can we capture our ancestor's faith in liberty? That, I believe, is our crucial problem. It is the challenge to liberalism today."

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., another well-known liberal and professor of History at Harvard, asserts that "the first job of the liberal is to combat the complacency, official piety, emptiness and stagnation settling over our national life."

Panhellenic Tea Launches Rush For New Coeds

By PATSY MILLER

Graham Memorial Lounge was brimming over Friday evening as coeds began rush by attending the Panheelenic Tea.

All women interested in formal lenic officers; presidents of the six rush were present to meet Panhel- sororities and their rush chairmen; Katherine Carmichael, dean of women; and Martha Decker, assistant to the dean of women.

Floating representatives from the sororities were also present to meet and talk to the coeds.

Those women attending the tea automatically will be invited to the first six rush parties which are, like the tea, compulsory for anyone wishing to continue rush.

At the first round of parties only water will be served and entertainment may be provided with skits.

"I would like to encourage all ther they intend to pledge or not, as it is such an excellent opportunity to meet new girls," said Sarah Hudson, Panhellenic president.

"Also I hope no one will have preconceived opinions of the various sororities and that every girl will enter rush with an open mind," Miss Hudson continued.

Three one-hour parties, 6:30-10 p.m. on Monday and Tuesday; day of rest Wednesday; three one-hour parties, 6:30-10 p.m. on Thursday; two one-hour parties, 6:30-8:45 p.m. on Friday; day of rest Saturday; four 45 minutes parties, 1:45-5:30 p.m. on Sunday; three 45 minute new coeds to go through rush whe- parties, 6:30-9:15 p.m. on Monday.

The final round of parties consists of a progressive dinner on Tuesday, Oct. 1, 5:40-9:40 p.m These dinner parties are not planned in a prejudiced way according to dinner course.

On Wednesday, Oct. 2, between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m., the rushee will sign the preferential list in the Dean of Women's office. All rushees are to stay in their respective rooms between 7 and 8 p.m. Wednesday night when written bids or rejection slips are placed under their room doors.

Bids for town students will be delivered to their homes.

The Panhellenic post office, located in the three Roland Parker Lounges in Graham Memorial, will be conducted by Stray Greek advisors. Rushees will accept and decline invitations there.

Post office time is 9:15 a.m.-1:15 p.m., Monday; 12:45-3:15 p.m., Wednesday; 9:15 a.m.-12:15 p.m., Saturday; 9:15 a.m.-1 p.m., Monday, Sept. 30; 9:15 a.m.-1 p.m., Tuesday, Oct. 1.

How To Look Best For Rush

How to present your prettiest and very best self during the rapid succession of rush parties is probably a weighty question in the minds of many incoming Carolina coeds.

In the rush manual there is a sketchy description of what-to-wear for each party, but with the variable weather prevalent in Chapel Hill this list often needs revising somewhat.

At a casual affair, your costume should definitely be casual. But, for instance, if sweaters and skirts are the order of the day and the thermometer soars to 108 in a flurry of indian Summer enthusiasm, the smart coed will appear at her polished best in a simple Ivy League skirt and tailored skirt.

One important thing to remember is that although clothes are important at rush parties, just as they are everywhere, they are definitely not the last word.

A natural, relaxed attitude plus meticulous grooming will sell you faster than the latest Ceil Chapman or Dior creation.

If the temperature should plunge, a good knit sheath or tailored wool dressed up with simple jewelry would be ideal for the dressy parties. For the teas, most girls will be wearing exactly what they would wear to church, complete with gloves, bag and simple hat.

Although some may appear in bouffant, more elaborate dresses, there is no necessity to wear attire of this sort if you feel more at ease in conservative designs.

Simplicity reigns supreme in Chapel Hill. Frills, bangles and faddish ensembles are strictly out of place. Coeds are alert to the latest in good fashion and select the basic styles which appear each season.

If the weather actually is cold enough for cashmeres and tweeds you may be sure they will be worn at the informal parties. White collars frequently spark necklines, and skirts are generally slim with little or no detail. Tailored shirts with good leather belts are always a perfect topping.

Fraternities To Begin Rush

One of the most important activities for many freshmen is fraternity rushing. Rushing is a period during which freshmen interested in pledging a fraternity visit the various fraternitiese and attempt to decide which fraternity to join.

Formal rushing for men begins this year on Sunday, Sept. 29, and ends with pledge day on Saturday, Oct. 5. A compulsory meeting of all rushees will be held on Thursday, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall as a preliminary to rush week.

The purpose of this meeting will be to discuss the rush rules with the rushees and answer all questions the rushees may have about rushing and fraternities.

To begin rush week, the fraternity rushee will pick up his invitations to visit frat houses at Gerrard Hall on Thursday between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. and on Friday between 9 a.m. and 12 noon.

After receiving the invitations he is prepared to visit the fraternities from which he has received invitations during the prescribed rushing hours. He must visit each fraternity from which he has received an invitation on the first or second day of rushing.

After the first two days of rushing, the rushee is free to visit any house for any length of time, but only during the prescribed rushing hours.

Intramurals At UNC Very Good

By DAVE WIBLE

"Rah! Rah! Rah!! Delta!" is heard at one end of the field. From the opposite end comes the cry, "Rah Rah! Rah! Sigma!!" So ends another intramural contest as the opposing teams move off the field of battle.

The yells above and those of almost every other organization on campus whether it be Pegram Dormitory or the Psi sorority will be heard over and over this year as each and every dorm, fraternity house, and group tries to show its worth on the athletic fields and courts.

The Carolina Intramurals Department offers numerous sports from wrestling (men's) to fencing for team and individual competition.

In team competition there are four divisions: Fraternity blue division—for the more experienced fraternity men—fraternity white division—for those who do not make the blue team; dormitory and independent divisions — for dorm men and independents who wish to form a team, and the graduate division—for graduate men such as Med and Dental students.

In each dorm and fraternity there will be elected—or appointed — an intramural manager who is responsible for team organization. The manager in each of the divisions meet to discuss the program and acts as correspondent between the Intramural Department and their resepective teams.

There are individual tournaments offered by the department as well as mixed activities such as the Co-Rec Carnival which will be held this fall.

Also this fall there will be a rod and gun field meet. The annual event held at the Durham Wildlife Club Area offers competition in archery, bait casting, target shooting, trap shooting and fishing.

At the end of the year the department sponsors its annual banquet where final awards are given to the outstanding intramural teams and individual performers of the year. Awards are given to the team in each division which compiles the greatest number of points on an organization point scale during the year.

Supervising the entire intramural program is Mr. Walter Rabb, director. He with his assistants Tommy Johnson, Bill Bailey, and field supervisor Ralph Hunt, coordinate the program, plan tournaments and supervise the activities.

ALL-STARS GO FOR UNC

It seems the high school all-star football players of 1956 are flocking to the University of North Carolina these days under the new Jim Tatum reconstruction plan. Among the 69 Tar Heel freshman candidates (many not on scholarships), 22 were selected to various All-State teams and four were named high school All-Americans.

The N. C. State Fair Arena cost $1,600,000 exclusive of portable furnishings.

Edwards Says Line Play Was The Difference

By AL WATTERS

State College Coach Earle Edwards was a very happy fellow about 4:30 yesterday afternoon. His Wolfpack had just handed Jim Tatum's Tar Heels a 7-0 defeat—the second time in two years that his club had been able to whip the Tar Heels.

"Our line outcharged theirs both offensively and defensively," commented the State coach following the contest. "I think that was the most important factor in our winning the game," he said.

Edwards expressed surprise that most so-called pigskin experts had favored Carolina. He figured that this was based on Jim Tatum's fine coaching record and not on the actual ability of his ball club.

The State mentor didn't feel that the game was well-played. Mostly because it was so awfully hot out there today—brutal for a football player who this early in the season is not in top condition.

Edwards thought Carolina was stronger defensively a year ago but didn't show too much on offense. (Carolina gained only 73 yards through the State line).

Coach Earle would not admit that yesterday's game will be a definite indication of the rest of the season. "It was to sloppy and far too hot to judge a contingent's power," Edwards concluded.

The Carolina-State series now stands at 34-7-6 in favor of the Tar Heels. Until last year, State had not beaten Carolina since 1942.

Booters Prep For Opener

By KEN FRIEDMAN

An experienced Carolina soccer team, under the tutelage of Coach Marvin Allen, has been working out daily this past week in preparation for their opening tilt with Roanoke College at Fetzer Field Monday, Sept. 30.

Despite the hardships imposed by the inclement weather conditions at Chapel Hill lately, the rains have failed to dampen the spirits of the "Tar-Heels" Allen was pleased with their improvement and expects the team to better it 4-3 record of last year.

Allen's main problem lies in finding a replacement for the capable Chuck Hartman, who held down the goalie spot in '56. Hartman, now a grad student, is assisting Allen in several experiments designed to produce his own successor as net tender. Jim Rattay, Mickey Zletnicki, and John Hollard are all being given a shot at the vacant slot.

On the brighter side of the picture, Bill Blair, captain and halfback from Morehead City, N. C., leads an imposing list of veterans from last season's sophomore-studded eleven. Blair and Charles Covell, Ted Smith, Tom Rand, Jim Purks, Ted Youhanna, Ricky Grauman, and Coleman Barks are also back for another campaign.

The Number one new face in workouts has been soph. John Ghnanin, a high-scoring center forward, who is expected to mail down the starting position. Others up from the Fresh with a good chance ot cracking the lineup are Bill Stem and Bill Thompson.

Roanoake, a perennial power in the Mid-Dixie Conference, will provide the Carolinians with a stern opening test and enable Allen to determine whether his squad is still in the midst of a hangover from three successive shoutout losses at the tail end of last season. The "Tar-heels" meet Maryland and Duke, two of their conquerors in the race to the finish line in 1956, late in the season at Chapel Hill and will be gunning for revenge for those two disasterous defeats.

the crowd shouting, "Are you going to let them take him away?" His face was blood smeared.

Later, officers had several young men handcuffed as they questioned them near the field house just off the playing field.

A huge crowd still was assembled on the field about an hour after the game and a portion of the goal post had been broken.

IDC Elections To Fill Posts Set Tomorrow

The Interdormitory Council will hold its fall elections tomorrow. IDC President Tom Walters announced yesterday that the election will be held to fill the dorm posts of secretary-treasurer, IDC and intramural representative.

Walters disclosed that polls will be open in each dorm according to the discretion of the dorm presidents. This has been necessitated by the widely varying schedules encountered in holding dorm elections.

The IDC president stated that the only stipulation upon "poll hours" will be the requirement that they close by 8 p.m. "Each dorm president will be responsible for seeing that his ballot box is returned promptly at 8 p.m. to the IDC Office in New East Annex, for the ballot counting," Walters added.

Walters emphasized that Cliff Mann, elections coordinator, will be available in 317 Aycock for all dorm presidents who run into difficulty with voting procedures and administration.

President Walters asserted that "Individual Dorm Government" is the keystone of the IDC program for the year. In thanking all the dormitories for their cooperation in advance of the elections, Tom expressed the hope that "effective government can be achieved in each dorm if all qualified voters vigorously express their right to vote."

Work Started On New School

Rapid progress is being made on a new, $1½ million School of Pharmacy Building at the University of North Carolina and officials hope the structure will be ready for use by September, 1959.

Dr. E. A. Brecht, Dean of the School of Pharmacy, said groundbreaking ceremonies should be held by March of next year, pending on preliminary plans and other work now underway.

The modern, three-story structure will have some 62,400 square feet of floor space and will be located on Pittsboro Road directly across from N. C. Memorial Hospital. It will be double capacity of current pharmacy quarters.

The structure is being financed by state funds, Dr. Brecht said, and architectural contract for the work has gone to Holloway and Reeves, Raleigh.

Riot Breaks Out In Little Rock

By KEITH FULLER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 23 (AP) — A frenzied, fighting crowd of white men and women apparently won a bloody first round against the integration of Central High School today. Eight Negro students got inside for more than three hours but were withdrawn in the face of a threatened riot.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said "The children will not return to Central High School until they have the assurance of the President of the United States that they will have protection against the mob."

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 23 (AP) — President Eisenhower said today he would use the full power of the United States, including whatever force may be necessary, to uphold the law, in the Little Rock school integration violence.

The President described the outbreaks as disgraceful occurrences and said he wanted to make his position very clear.

"I will use the full power of the Unied States, including whatever force may be necessary to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the Federal Court," he said.

Bloody fights broke out sporadically. Negro adults were attacked, kicked and beaten. Three Life Magazine representatives were assaulted. Students quit classes in protest and chanted "Two, four, six, eight, We ain't gonna integrate."

Central High's sprawling campus was the scene of one violent clash after another as the crowd —estimated variously from 500 to 1,000—boldly charged police lines, cursed, yelled and cried. Women screamed and wept.

The chaotic scene started at 8:45 a.m. (CST) just as the final buzzer sounded for classes to start.

Police lines had kept the crowd from inflammatory actions until this time. Suddenly four Negro adults appeared in the street in front of the school approaching the crowd.

A man yelled: "Look. Here come the niggers."

The angry crowd surged toward them and the Negroes ran. The advance men caught one of them, identified as Alex Wilson, representing a Negro newspaper in Memphis, and beat and kicked him.

During this diversion, three Negro boys and five girls were driven onto the campus and calmly walked into the school building through a side door.

The slip-through of the students angered the crowd and someone yelled: "Look, they're going into the school."

"Oh, God, the niggers are in the school," a man roared.

A woman screamed "Oh, my God" and burst into tears.

Hysteria swept the crowd and a man leaped upon the police barricade and shouted: "Who's going through?"

The crowd answered "we all are."

With the students inside, the snarling crowd turned its venom on newsmen. Francis Miller, a Life Magazine photographer, was slugged in the mouth by a segregationist. The photographer, with both hands full of camera equipment, fell to the grass bleeding.

Later two more Life representatives were attacked.

White students went to a nearby Catholic School, St. Bartholomew's, were the Negro students were coming out for the lunch period. The Negroes were attacked by rocks and retreated inside the school.

From Sea Island, Ga., where he is attending the Southern Governor's Conference, Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas said the violence today in Little Rock was what he had attempted to avoid by calling the National Guard out Sept. 2.

Y Remodeling Adds Services

An old student hurrying into the YMCA Building for his first between-class coffee break of the year might at first feel as lost as the greenest freshman.

Gone are the shoving crowds which once clustered around the small counter at the far end of the room. In fact, gone is the small counter around which they clustered.

In its place sits the cashier's cage, and running the length of the west wall is a brand new counter, appropriately decorated with Carolina blue and white.

H. R. Ritchie, general manager of campus retail stores, says that workmen began tearing out the old facilities about an hour after the last class of summer school and completed the new installation only the day before orientation began.

He estimates that the new counter, some 60 feet in length, can take care of one-third more students than the old one. The fountain capacity has been doubled, and coffee can now be dispensed along the whole length of the counter rather than in only one spot.

According to Ritchie, more people are being employed behind the counter in order that the increased facilities may be more fully utilized.

In addition to the new counter, the room has been repainted and redecorated. Mrs. Kay Kyser, wife of the well known band leader, helped in choosing the color scheme and planning the redecoration.

Ritchie is especially proud, he asserts, that the recent renovations have been completed "without increasing a single price."

Evans, Aycock Move To Avert Future Riots; Get State O. K.

Proposal Would Give Goal Post To The Victors

A proposal that goal posts be presented the winning team after future State - Carolina games gained quick approval yesterday and officials hoped it would help to avert future riots.

The proposal—result of a mob riot colored by flying bottles and fists—came after State's 7-0 victory over Carolina in Kenan Stadium Saturday.

It was suggested by Student Body President Sonny Evans and Chancellor William Aycock and gained approval Monday by State Student Body President Jim Hunt and Carey Bostian, Chancellor.

Numerous Chapel Hill police officers thronged the playing field moments after the game Saturday when hundreds of fans flocked to tear down and defend the south end goal posts.

Three persons were booked by police on charges of disorderly conduct. Police said no injuries were reported, but at least one man, his face blood-smeared, mingled among the crowd.

In a statement Monday, Student Body President Evans said the proposal is aimed at "preventing anything like the incident.

"Things of this sort cause nothing but hard feelings on the part of students at both institutions," he said.

Evans termed the riot "a regrettable affair," and said that "every effort should be made to see that this sort of thing never happens again."

Hunt and Bostian said in a statement they also regretted the incident but said they were convinced that "press reports of the incident were highly exaggerated."

Under Evans' and Aycock's proposal, the president of the student body of the losing team would present the goal posts to the president of the student body of the winning team.

WC Contestant Chosen Queen During CU Day

Joan Backet, a 20-year old junior at the Greensboro branch of UNC is the new beauty queen. A tall brunette from Rocky Mount, Miss Backet was runner-up this past season in Rocky Mount's beauty contest, her only other appearance in a beauty contest.

The naming of the queen took place at the Grail Dance at Woollen Gym. When the name was announced, Sonny Evans, president of the UNC student body, presented Miss Backet with a dozen long-stemmed red roses, donated by University Florist.

During half-time ceremonies at the Carolina-State game, the nine candidates, three from each unit of the Consolidated University, were introduced, along with the chairmen of CU Day and presidents of the three student bodies.

Nancy Garner of WC, chairman of the CU Student Council, was in charge of CU Day. Other CU Day chairmen were Kelly Maness of UNC, Julie Shore of WC and Gene Bostian of NCS.

While a reception was being held in front of Graham Memorial after the game, the nine candidates met the judges in Morehead Planetarium.

The judges first met each girl individually and later in a group. Judging was on a basis of beauty, poise, personality and intelligence. Judges were Jim Carse of the YMCA staff, Dean Shirley of the State faculty and Prof. De Vene of the WC faculty.

Candidates from Carolina were Lila Scott of Shreveport, La., Julia Ann Crater of Raleigh and Carol Tieslau of Chevy Chase, Md.

Music for the Grail Dance was presented by the Duke Ambassadors, while Jim Crisp's combo performed during the afternoon reception.

Miss Backet will reign as queen until next year's CU Day when her successor will be named. Born in Dresden, Germany, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Backet.

An English major, she is interested also in art and travel. She is a graduate of Rocky Mount Senior High School.

Classes Set Saturday Despite Adlai Speech

Classes will be held Saturday as usual during the visit of Governor Adlai Stevenson to this campus, according to a statement by Chancellor William Aycock yesterday.

The Chancellor said that since Governor Stevenson's visit is not a University function, classes will be held as scheduled.

The presidential candidate will speak in Memorial Hall at 10:30 a.m. Saturday and will hold a press conference at 11:45 a.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Chancellor Aycock said students are welcome to attend the Governor's speech in Memorial Hall. He remarked that in case Memorial Hall becomes overcrowded loud speakers will be placed in Y-Court.

The Chancellor explained that Governor Stevenson is being brought here for the purpose of discussing education, and the role of the University in his visit is to make facilities available. Stevenson's address here was arranged by the North Carolina Citizens for Better Schools, an agency appointed by Governor Luther Hodges.

After the speech and press conference, Governor Stevenson will attend the Carolina-Clemson football game. Saturday night he will be the house guest of Governor and Mrs. Hodges.

Stevenson is expected to arrive at Raleigh-Durham Airport at 5 p.m. Friday and will stay at the Carolina Inn Friday night. The visit to Chapel Hill and Raleigh is being sponsored by Encyclopedia Britannica Films, Inc.

Dr. Guy Phillips of here is handling Stevenson's itinerary in Chapel Hill.

GM Purchases 2 New TV Sets

The Graham Memorial Activities Board has announced the purchase of two new television sets.

Of immediate interest to students will be the acquisition of a G.E. color TV. It may be seen until 11 p.m. any night. A complete list of all scheduled color programs maf be obtained at the information desk of Graham or on the bulletin boards.

This set, which is located in the television lounge, may be seen in black and white as well as color. Students are reminded that it may only be tuned by members of the staff.

An RCA portable has also been obtained. It may be taken to any authorized area within the building.

Many new recirds are constantly being purchased for the enjoyment of students. Eleanor Brawley, Assistant Director of Graham, has asked that students go to the information desks to request their favorite records.

RAM & EWE TO MEET

An organizational staff meeting for those interested in working on the Ram & Ewe, new campus humor magazine, will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Roland Parker Lounge, Graham Memorial Building.

Students wishing to subscribe to the magazine, which will publish four issues this year, are asked to send $1.40 to The Ram & Ewe, P. O. 1137, Chapel Hill, or to leave the money, with their names and addresses, at the information desk in Graham Memorial.

Cars Are Aim Of Crackdown

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, said yesterday that license numbers on all cars not displaying registration stickers are being taken and checked for identification in Raleigh.

Jefferies reminded freshmen that they are not allowed to have cars on campus. He mentioned that any freshman having a car here will be prosecuted to the "full extent."

The penalty, he said, would be "drastic" for such a freshman, adding that a freshman might be denied car priviledges for his 4 years at Chapel Hill.

Jefferies commented that the registration fee for students owning or operating an automobile is only $1.00, whereas last year the fee was $2.50.

MANAGER WANTED

Anyone interested in managing the freshman soccer team is requested to contact Marvin Allen, 311 Woollen Gym, or call 9-3322.

World In Brief

Frieda Veers Away

MIAMI, Fla. —(AP)— Tropical storm Frieda has veered away from its beeline course toward the Florida coast and the weather bureau said all of the southeast portion of the U. S. may not be out of danger of being hit.

Frieda isn't a hurricane yet but the power in her winds was increasing. Aircraft flying into the storm clocked the blow at 35 to 50 miles per hour, with gusts up to 60.

Present indications, said chief storm forecaster Gordon Dunn of the Miami weather, are that Frieda "will not significantly affect" the southeast coast.

Farmer Held

DOBSON —(AP)— Sherman man Luster, Surry County farmer most of whose family is serving long sentences for an ambush murder, is being held in the Surry County jail here without bond on a charge of raping his 21-month-old granddaughter.

Sheriff Neal Thompson said Luster is charged with criminally assaulting the daughter of his unmarried daughter, Ruth Luster, 18, at their home on the Pilot Mountain-Westfield road last Thursday.

The sheriff said no date has been set for a hearing as he has not completed his investigation.

Luster's wife, Mamie, 36, is serving a life sentence for the February ambush slaying of John Allen Branch, 58, of Pilot Mountain, Route 1. She and Amos Maynard, 40, of Pilot Mountain, Route 2, were convicted of first degree murder with recommendation for mercy.

Luster's son, Johnny Luster, 23, and Monroe Willard, 16, pleaded guilty in the slaying and were given life terms. Luster's daughter-in-law, Johnny's wife, Irene Holder Luster, 20, pleaded guilty to second degree murder and was given a 12-15 year sentence.

Convict Carried Knife?

RALEIGH—(AP)—One of the eight convicts on trial for the slaying of a fellow prisoner testified the slain man once told him that he always carried a knife.

Jackie Lee Schneider, Greensboro man serving time for breaking and entering and escape, said in Wake County Superior Court that Martin Chavis, Robeson County Indian who was fatally knifed last July 30, told him that "anytime he had his pants on he had a knife."

Schneider is the sixth of the eight convicts accused of murder to take the stand in his own defense as the trial moved into its third week. He claimed, as four of the five to testify before him had, that he was elsewhere when the fatal stabbing took place.

Ozark Orval: The Pied Piper Of Violence, Boo!

"People don't ask for facts in making up their minds. They would rather have one good, soul-satisfying emotion than a dozen facts."—Robert Leavitt.

From Little Rock comes the actual chant:

"Two, four, six, eight: we ain't gonna integrate!"

How absurdedly prejudicial may one city get?

Yesterday in Fanatic Faubus's dictatorship, the Associated Press reported this scene:

"A howling, shrieking crowd of men and women outside Central High School, and disorderly students inside, forced authorities to withdraw eight Negro students from the school today, three and one half hours after they entered it."

A story in bigotry and bias . . . self-explanatory.

The whole, wretched Little Rock fiasco—the South's big bellyache—stems primarily from a prelude established and played vociferously by the little pied piper of violence, Oligarchic Orval of the Ozarks.

Oligarchic Orval gave the South its big bellyache of rebellion when he called National Guardsmen with fixed bayonets to surround Central High School allegedly to prevent "violence."

Yet his action was the prelude which set the mood for violence. The little pied piper's call was the equivalent of a man't thrusting his chin under another's fist and saying:

"Don't hit me. Here's my chin. But now, don't hit me. I double-dog dare you not to hit me."

Fanatic Faubus dared his city to retort with violence, in effect.

And violence is what he got.

It must have given 'ol oligarchic satisfaction — a great deal—a whole passle of it—to see blood from Central High School yesterday amid the gusty chant:

"Go home niggers. Two, four, six, eight: we ain't gonna' integrate"

Yet not more than a fortnight ago, all eight tax-supported Arkansas colleges were opened to Negroes. And Negroes had enrolled in white elementary and high schools in ten school districts. All this . . . and Orval called the guardsmen with his chin stuck out.

Eisenhowes Speaks . . . . . .

"I want to make several things very clear in connection with the disgraceful occurrences of today at Central High School in the City of Little Rock:

(1) "The federal law and orders of a United States District Court implementing that law cannot be flouted with impunity by any individual or any mob of extremists.

(2) "I will use the full power of the United States—including whatever force may be necessary to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the federal court.

(3) "Of course, every right thinking citizen will hope that the American sense of justice and fair play will prevail in this case. It will be a sad thing for this country—both at home and abroad—if school children can safely attend their classes only under armed guards."

The Communist press, under the ultimate direction of "Cuddles" Krushchev, has already been whipped to a razor-sharp edge by the obstinance of G.I. William Girard. The Communist propaganda presses are thus thrashing at a white-hot heat. And Orval's actions are fuel for the fire.

President Eisenhower should be extremely hesitant in using "force." But a rose is a rose is a rose. And:

The supreme law of the land is the supreme law of the land is the supreme law of the land.

Local Cop--'Lookie' I Got Me Some Tonsils

Student Body President Sonny Evans, with the valuable help of Energetic Chancellor Bill Aycock, has assuredly used his head in handling the problem of Carolina-State football game aftermaths.

In lieu of issuing a critical and negative statement concerning Saturday's goal post fiasco, Evans proposed that the winner of the bitter rivalry contest be awarded said objects, not lately used by Carolina.

Certainly a tradition is in the making.

We believe the situation might have been handled with a little more finesse.

The policeman undoubtedly thought he was Mr. Moto, and that he was being televised like Saturday night wrestling.

His performance did not make a pleasant sight.

Even Mr. Moto has some amount of respect for his Opponent's larynx.

Or did the policeman think the vocal cords of a State fan—agravating as they were Saturday — might make an excellent souvenir of Saturday's encounter to bottle in formaldehyde and proudly place in his trophy room along with many students' wallets and traffic tickets?

The local force performs a vital function.

All we ask is fines in lieu of brute force.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Don't Conform; Be Superior . . . Argue, Man!

There are entirely too many people around today with unsuccessful negative attitudes. These people are really sincere.

They want to be disliked, considered obnoxious, and in general aggravate others. So often, however, they slip up and say or do something nice. This inconsistency not only bothers them but perplexes their friends.

If this is the case with you or some of your friends then it might be wise to heed the advice given below.

First of all, be a superlative. Develop a good superiority complex. If someone has a cold, have a worse one; If a friend feels good, feel better;If his car will do ninety-five in second, go him five mph better; If his courses are hard, tell him your history professor gives his quizzes in Sanskrit and you have to answer in Gaelic; If his girl is beautiful, show him the fashion model you broke up with. Remember to better, if not best, at everything.

Speak authoritatively about every subject. Don't give anyone the impression that you do not know the most factual knowledge that there is to know about a certain subject. Cite references for all your information, such as encyclopedias, texts, or source persons. Occasionally, should you want to make a person feel really stupid, accredit your information to common knowledge. Disagree as often as your discretion will allow, and interject your factual comments into all conversations. In the event that people will often cite references, also do not be dismayed. Only say that their information source is out of date.

Impose your will upon other people as often as possible. If you are a member of a group that is planning a party, and the consensus is that the party should be at the Cabin, hold out for the Scout Hut. Disagree violently, and even if they don't decide to have the party at the Hut they may get so sick of the argument that they won't have the party at all, which is exactly what your purpose was to begin with. If the other couple wants to see "Hatful of Rain," insist on seeing "I WAS a TEENAGE Werewolf." You won't enjoy the picture as much, but you will feel a sense of authority that you couldn't if you had seen the other.

Another important thing to remember is that you must gripe about everything that does not suit you. If too many things suit you, then gripe anyway. Always be overly critical of others. If your friend wears a new shirt which you would like to have bought first then say, "Nice shirt, but didn't they have your size?" You get the idea. Never let the movie or the play be as good as the printing. Never let the food or the service be good enough to withstand your critical eye.

These are not all the rules to be sure, but some of the most important ones. If you adhere strictly to these few however, you will be so obnoxious that even your best friends won't tell you. In fact, no one will even speak to you unless absolutely necessary.

"Ezra, I Don't Know What We'd Do Without You"

FROM THE MIAMI STUDENT:

Current Educational Trend: Neglects 'Uncommon' Man?

In America, much emphasis has been placed on the doctrine of sanctity of the common man, but in our administration of this democratic principle we must guard against the danger of forgetting the uncommon or exceptional man.

This danger is especially rampant in the field of education. One of the new trends in elementary and secondary education is to provide special classes for slow learners.

is very difficult for the teacher to deal individually with children of all intelligence levels, so she must teach for the average child, hoping that the dull one will catch on and the bright one will not be too bored:

This results in the fact that the United States fails to utilize to the fullest extent one of its most valuable resources, the exceptional mind. Other countries with less democratic school systems have a much better record along this line.

It has usually been assumed that the bright child, while he may have been overlooked to a certain extent during his earlier schooling, comes into full bloom during his college years, when under the stimulating atmosphere of the university he is at last able to utilize his capabilities to the fullest.

This assumption is probably true, at least to a large extent. Even state universities, such as Miami, which are designed to give everyone a chance for a higher education, also offer a chance for the superior student to show what he can do.

However, as more and more people go on to college, there is a danger that our universities will became more like advanced high schools and less like institutions where the nation's really good minds have a chance to develop.

During the next decade, American universities will have to adapt themselves to their new role of educating the growing masses of young men and women who are suddenly willing and able to come to college; and at the same time continue their old role of giving the superior intellects a chance of utilize their abilities.

If America is to maintain her role as the leader in social, literary and scientific advancement, she must utilize the best brainpower available without abandoning the democratic principle of an education for all.

In order to do this she must revise her policy of caring for the exceptional child to include not only the exceptionally dull but the exceptionally bright.

The public schools must lay the groundwork for this, acceptance of the "uncommon man," but the ultimate responsibility must fall upon America's colleges and universities.

We, the people of America, should be glad that the President is taking frequent vacations to insure his health and long life. A sad state we would be in if he were to die, and leave the cares of the world on the shoulders of Richard M. Nixon.

Our guess is that those who have held the position before were only pretending to be busy. Maybe it is only a part time job, like the Student Aid Office offers.

OTHER INSTITUTIONS:

Problems Are Quite Similar

Outlining his hopes for a broad new academic program to make the University of Pittsburgh a world leader, Chancellor Edward H. Litchfield recently included the following four proposals:

1. A better balance between liberal arts and professional training. He suggested a year-round school of three semesters in which there would be no technical training in any undergraduate school.

The technical or professional training would come in graduate school. By going year-round, the student could achieve this goal in a reasonable time.

2. Greater internal unity within the university with closer contact between the students and the faculty of the various schools. He would house schools of related fields in the same building and put libraries together so students might more clearly see the world outside their own narrow interests.

3. Regular analysis of what the world needs from the university. This would enable educators to toss out some programs and set up new ones as the times dictate.

4. Make students "total human beings" by taking more interest in their moral and spiritual development outside the classroom. This would entail more "campus life" at Pitt, such as the new Union at the old Hotel Schenley.

Yale's newly-revised curriculum in the arts and sciences embodies the first basic change in the study program since 1946. The 14-man committee which prepared the major changes in the study program emphasized in its report to the faculty the unity of the four college years "and the inadviseability of stressing a break at the end of sophomore year."

This opinion is in contrast to the Report of the President's Committee on General Education, which placed more emphasis on the continuity between school and the first two years of college.

Heart of the new undergraduate program, now entering its second year of operation, is a system of "distributional credits," for the first two years. Distributional credits must be earned, either in high school or college, by taking courses in certain fields of study before a student can begin specializing in his major subject.

Distributional credits, aimed at encouraging a breadth of academic interests, must be earned in the following fields: English, ancient or modern foreign languages, ancient or modern history, the history of art or the history of music, the social sciences, the natural scienres or mathematics, and classical civilization, philosophy or religion.

Under the revised curriculum, these subjects have been grouped for purposes of concentration into three major areas: the humanities and the arts, history and the social sciences, and the natural sciences and mathematics. Students in their first two years will be required to take three one-year courses in one of these three areas, and two one-year courses in another area.

While they cannot take more than one course in any one department in a single year, students are being encouraged to take a sequence of courses in one department during the first two years, thus allowing the student to begin concentrating in his major field of interest in his sophomore year.

Distributional credits may be earned by students who do unusually well in preparatory school courses in subjects for which such credits are offered at Yale.

While the committee which planned the new curriculum declined to establish a rigid pattern of requirements for admission to Yale, it recommended to secondary school program which would include: four years of English, a minimum of two and preferably four years of a foreign language, three years of mathematics, one year of science and one year of history.

Wittenberg College will put into effect a small university-type academic structure, beginning with the 1957-58 academic year, according to a recent announcement by President Clarence C. Stoughton.

"The plan calls for four separate divisions or schools, each designed to care for special student needs, but all resting upon a strong liberal arts base," Dr. Stoughton said. These four divisions include the School of Arts and Sciences; the School of Applied Arts and Professional Studies; the School of Community Education; and the Hamma Divinity School.

The multi-unit plan will center around the School of Arts and Sciences, where only liberal arts courses will be undertaken and liberal arts degrees awarded.

The School of Applied Arts and Professional Studies will grant the bachelor of fine arts degree, bachelor of music degree and bachelor of science degrees in business administration, education, home economics, medical technology, nursing and religious education.

The School of Community Education will comprise the college's Management Development program, the Evening Session, the Wittenberg-Dayton YMCA courses and the NCO Academy, where Wittenberg instructors participate in a special educational program conducted at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

The Hamma Divinity School will grant the bachelor of divinity degree to students completing the advanced courses required.

Eisenhower set up the warning in a sober talk opening the twelfth annual meeting of the 64-nation World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

He appealed for prudent national policies governing spending, lending and industrial expansion.

"To fail to do these things is to ask the economy to do more than it can," Eisenhower said.

"It will react to this pressure through rising prices. If unchecked, this leads to reaction and downturn and all the evil consequences we know so well."

Dean Godfrey: A Man Of Responsibilities

By LAWRENCE MADDRY

Dean J. L. Godfrey, recently appointed successor to Dean Spruill as Dean of the University Faculty, is a man on the go, with innumerable responsibilities.

His four paramount tasks are closely allied with the duties of Chancellor Aycock.

First, he is responsible for the entire budget, with the exception of Health Affairs, which is handled by Dr. Henry Clark. Secondly, he is responsible, again with Chancellor Aycock, for the academic affairs of the university schools, such as General College, Arts and Sciences, Education, and the School of Business Administration.

Dean Godfrey's third duty is as academic advisor to the chancellor, a 24-hour job within itself. His fourth and final responsibility is as a member of the chancellor's cabinet, where he is a consultant on policy.

Increased enrollment is one of the main problems which confronts the new Dean of the Faculty. Dean Godfrey has expressed the belief that his "main job," in the position of Dean of the Faculty, is to "see to the growth of the university in such a way as it may become bigger and better at the same time—this will require a good deal of academic planning and good administration."

Born in Roanoke, Va., Dr. Godfrey came to the University as a graduate student. From then on he depended upon scholarships and fellowships to further his education. He earned his masters degree while studying under a fellowship here and later obtained his doctorate in 1942 from the University of Chicago.

The new Dean of the Faculty is a man with considerable educational study both in this country and abroad. He studied in Paris and London during 1938, 1950 and 1951. In 1952 he was awarded the President's Fellowship of Brown University.

Now 50, and in good health, the new dean spends most of his free time at home with his wife, the former Eleanor Smith of Shelton, Nebraska and his two daughters, Jean and Ann. A famous toastmaster and master of ceremonies, Dean Godfrey steals as much time from social functions as possible for his favorite hobby—reading.

The freshman has driven a school bus in his home town for several years without an accident.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Herbert Hood of Lillington, Hood wsa competing with school bus drivers from over North Carolina in the Rodeo. The scholarship was good for any college of his choice.

One interesting sidelight to Hood's scholarship is that his father is school transportation supervisor in Lillington.

Riot

U. S. Attorney Osro Cobb said in connection with the day's violence that it was local responsibility to maintain order but "I will not hesitate to proceed criminally against provocators who conspire together . . . to forcibly deny rights secured to our citizens . . ."

The swelling anger of the crowd apparently caused concern among the officials. A few minutes before noon Supt. Virgil Blossom called Ass't Police Chief Gene Smith if he thought the Negro students should be withdrawn.

Smith, who was commanding the embattled police at the scene, said he did. Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, got on the police radio and told patrolmen to announce to the crowd that the students were being withdrawn.

None of the crowd saw police cars take the students away and a number of people said "Its a trick to get us away." Later however the word spread and many of the men in the crowd left.

From inside the school reports came of additional violence, but the Negro students later denied that they were beaten as white students had reported.

Terrance Roberts, one of the Negro students who entered, said he was "pushed around" some but was not harmed. He said he did not think any of the Negro girls were touched.

"Nothing really happened. We were taken out and driven home.

"Some school officials came and took us out. There was not a whole lot of trouble.

"I was pushed but I don't know that anybody got hit.

"It was quiet after we got into classes. Some of the white students walked out. Just a few of them."

Roberts would not say how he was taken to his home.

Another student, Thelma Mosthershed said:

"Nothing much happened at all."

"I went to three classes. There was no shouting or anything. Neither the teachers nor most of the students acted like they resented having us there. We didn't pay too much attention to the commotion going on in the halls.

"Then the registrar came and got us out of the classes.

"We weren't told why."

Like Roberts, she would not say how she was taken to her home.

"Some of the students spoke to me and some ignored me.

"I was the only Negro girl in my class."

She said she was not told if she could go back to the school or when.

The last act of violence before the afternoon lull was an attack on Paul Welch, a reporter for Life Magazine and his co-worker photographer Gray Villette.

FOOTBALL THROUGH THE AGES

The football frenzy is upon us. But let us in the midst of this pandemonium call time. Let us pause for a moment of tranquil reflection. What is this great American game called football? What is its history? Its origins?

Let us pause for a moment of tranquil reflection

First of all, to call football an American game is somewhat misleading. True, the game is now played almost exclusively in America, but it comes to us from a land far away and a civilization long dead.

Football was first played in ancient Rome. Introduced by Julius Caesar, it became one of the most popular Roman sports by the time of Nero's reign. The eminent historian, Sigafoos, reports a crowd of MMCLDDXVIII people at the Colosseum one Saturday afternoon to see the Christians play the Lions.

With the decline of the Roman empire, football fell into disuse. The barbaric Huns and Visigoths preferred canasta. Not until the fifteenth century A. D. did football emerge from its twilight and rise to its rightful place in the firmament of European sports.

Which brings us to September 29, 1442, a date dear to the hearts of all football fans. It was on this date, according to the eminent historian Sigafoos, that a sixteen-year-old lad named Christopher Columbus tried out for the football team at Genoa Tech. He failed to make the team because he was too light. (He weighed at the time only twelve pounds.)

And why, you ask, is this date—September 29, 1442—so dear to the hearts of all football fans? Because young Columbus was so heartbroken at not making the team that he ran away to sea. And if that hadn't happened, he never would have discovered America. And if Columbus hadn't discovered America, the world would never have discovered tobacco. And if the world hadn't discovered tobacco, football fans never would have discovered Marlboro—which, as every fan knows, is the perfect companion to football. And why shouldn't it be? Look what Marlboro's got . . . Filter . . . Flavor . . . Flip-top Box . . . You can't buy a better smoke. You can't smoke a better buy.

The end of football in Europe came with the notorious "Black Sox Scandal" of 1587, in which Ed Machiavelli, one of the Pisa mob, paid off the University of Heidelberg Sabres to throw the championship game to the Chartres A. and M. Gophers. It was a mortal blow to football on the continent.

But the game took hold in the American colonies and thrived as it had never thrived before. Which brings us to another date that remains evergreen in the hearts of football lovers: December 16, 1773.

On that date a British packet loaded with tea sailed into Boston harbor. The colonies had long been smarting under the English king's tax on tea. "Taxation without representation," they called it, and feelings ran high.

When on December 16, 1773, the British ship docked at Boston, a semi-pro football team called the Nonpareil Tigers, coached by Samuel (Swifty) Adams, was scrimmaging near the harbor. "Come, lads," cried Swifty, seeing the ship. "Let's dump the tea in the ocean!"

With many a laugh and cheer the Nonpareil Tigers followed Swifty aboard and proceeded to dump the cargo overboard in a wild, disorganized and abandoned manner. "Here now!" called Swifty sharply. "That's no way to dump tea overboard. Let's get into some kind of formation."

And that, fans, is how the tea formation was born.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

The Tar Heels just got beat.

What else can you say when a team runs over and around you like N. C. State did Saturday? There's no denying that Carolina was outplayed, offensively and defensively.

The Wolfpack, with the tenacity of a Saint, kept pounding away at the Carolina line. After the Raleigh club got the lead as the first quarter ended, it was in nohurry to move. Thus, the short gains up the middle and around the ends were instrumental in allowing State to keep possession of the ball for long periods.

It may be remembered that in the final quarter State held the ball for over six minutes to run out the clock and picked up four first downs in the process — an indication of the ease with which it moved the pigskin.

Still, there was some encouragment in the work of the Carolina line. Certainly it is better than a year ago. State did not move so consistently inside the twenty yard line.

Offensively, Carolina did little, picking up only 73 rushing yards. The State defense was especially tough inside the 30. Only twice could Carolina move past the 30 and both times the rugged Wolfpack front wall held tight. Carolina's passing game showed promise of becoming a vital weapon in future action.

SELF-CONFIDENCE

The Tar Heels are not dead. Nobody is writing any obituraries for Jim Tatum's club. There is some fine talent on the Carolina roster — inexperienced perhaps, but potentially very good.

In evaluating the Tar Heels, it must be remembered that many of the players were making their varsity debut Saturday. They made many mistakes and they'll make more before the season ends. But with each game comes added experience and consequently a reduction of mistakes.

What is Tatum's biggest problem? In this corner's opinion it is making his club congnisant of its own attributes. We believe that self-confidence is the shot in the arm needed most by the Tar Heels.

Tatum himself said that his club played a "scared" brand of football Saturday. "They were afraid of making mistakes."

Our opinion of the Tar Heel's performance Saturday was that it was apprehension rather than lethargy. Certainly the players were hustling. But there seemed to be a reluctance to really go all out. Until proven otherwise, we maintain the view that it was nerves and not laziness.

CLEMSON NEXT

Clemson College is the next foe for the Tar Heels and the Tigers will come into Kenan Stadium Saturday knowing "the sweet smell of success."

Frank Howard's boys completely mutilated a hapless Presbyterian College team Saturday, 66-0. Of course PC cannot be considered a tough opponent, but anytime a team win by such an astronomical score, they are bound to appear awesome to their next opponent.

The Tigers, with sophomore talent galore, can still remember the Orange Bowl in 1956 (where they lost to Colorado) and Howard's youngsters would like nothing better than to successfully defend their ACC football crown.

This will be the first stiff test for Clemson and the Tar Heels certainly should be "up" for this one. Jim Tatum has actually lost 11 straight ball games since his return to Carolina and very few fans feel that this drought will continue for much longer. The Tigers will have to be sharp when they take the field Saturday — but so will the Tar Heels.

CAROLINA-STATE OFFICIALS

A pat on the back to Carolina and State officials for their actions concerning the fracas which followed Saturday's game.

Chancellor Aycock and Student body President Sonny Evans joined with Chancellor Bostian and Student Body Prexy Jimmy Hunt of State in declaring that from now on, the winner of the Carolina-State game will be presented the goal posts in post-game ceremonies.

Saturday's incident, though seemingly accentuated, was an unfortunate one. Equal blame must be accredited both schools. By the same token, nobody, other than those who were on the field purely for a fight, can be blamed for wanting to enjoy the "festivities" and defend their respective schools.

Incidents of this kind speak poorly of the schools involved and tend to create an unfavorable bit of animosity between the institutions. Rivalry is good, but not when it gets out of hand as it did Saturday. Let's hope that the matter will be dropped and will not be repeated.

CAROLINA OPPONENTS

A recap of Saturday's action around the nation shows that Carolina opponents came up with a record of 3-3-1 and two did not play.

Virginia (Nov. 30) played to a 6-6 tie with West Virginia, Miami (Oct. 11) dropped a 7-0 decision to Houston and Maryland (Oct. 19) battled gamely with Texas A&M before losing, 21-13.

Duke (Nov. 23) avenged an upset of a year ago with a 26-14 win over South Carolina (Nov. 9). The powerful Navy Middles (Oct. 5) walloped Boston College, 46-6 and this week's foe Clemson crushed Presbyterian, 66-0. Wake Forest (Oct. 26) and Tennessee (Nov. 2) don't open the season until Saturday.

Statistics from the State-Carolina battle show that halfback Daley Goff led the Tar Heel's rushing with a total of 34 yards. Goff carried 7 times for a 4.9 average. Fullback Bob Shupin was next with 13 yards followed by quarterback Dave Reed who went for 12.

Sophomore QB Jack Cummings, an outstanding signal-calling prospect, topped the Tar Heel's passing with a 35 yard pass to Al Goldstein. It was his only completetion in three tries. Reed threw seven and completed two for 21 yards and Jim Schuler completed one of two for 19.

Reed had a phenominal 56.1 punting average. The Tar Heel co-captain got away two quick-kicks for 113 yards. Don Coker was second with a 34-yard average and Curt Hathaway had two punts for 40 yards and a 20 average.

Freshman Harriers Look Good

By ERWIN FOLLER

Approximately 25 candidates for the eight top positions on the freshman cross-country squad have been working out daily for the past week on Fetzer Field under the guidance of Coach Dale Ranson.

Ranson is very pleased with the present turnout and is anxious to have any freshmen interested in track and cross country participation take part in the workouts.

He reports that the group has been "looking very promising thus far."

Although emphasizing the fact that at present he has had only a very limited opportunity to observe his charges in action, Ranson has stated that he feels his 1957 frosh harriers will be stronger than the Tar Baby unit last season this largely because of additional depth. "Judging from our early work, I would say that we will have considerable depth on our freshman squad this year," says Ranson. The depth deficiency Ranson feels, was largely responsible for last season's mediocre showing, despite the superlative individual efforts of standouts Fick Arthur and Cowles Liipfert.

of Charlotte, Bob Costello of Chapel Hill, and Harry Miller of Connellsville, Pa., are among those who have drawn special praise from the cross-country mentor. Others who have been impressive include Benjy Segell, Bill Fackert, John Elliott, Charles Graham, Falcon Knight, Danny West and Bill Morse. Many of these boys have had no previous experience in cross-country competition, Ranson pointed out.

Scheduling arrangements have not been completed at present, but the freshmen harriers should meet their first foe sometime in mid-October.

Fall Baseball Preps Begin

Although the major leagues are winding up their respective seasons, things are just beginning to hum around the Carolina baseball diamonds.

Fall practice, scheduled to last for three weeks, opened yesterday in near-perfect weather with forty-five boys on hand to greet Coach Walter Rabb. The group is an even mixture of varsity and frosh candidates.

Rabb's chief immediate concern lies in uncovering replacements for All-Conference hurler, Jim Raugh, and for other graduation losses whinh depleted his infield holdovers to shortstop Roger Honeycutt.

As a result, the former minor leaguer will give a long look — see at any of the youthful prospects who exhibit any talent and desire in these offseason workouts. "Any freshman or upper-classman on campus who has enough interest may come out and try his skill in the next three weeks. We'll have a better chance to screen everyone if the warm weather continues. It's not mandatory to come out, since these are just informal sessions."

Tar Heel Football Staff

Goal Posts Will Go To Winner From Now On

Officials of Carolina and State decided yesterday it's best to give away a set of goal posts rather than have heads cracked in post-football game ruckeses.

So, they decreed, there will be a little ceremony after Carolina-State games of the future in which the losing school will present its goal posts to the winning school.

The decision followed a near-riot that broke out after last Saturday's game in which State defeated the Tar Heels 7-0. As the final whistle sounded, State students and some fans swarmed out on Kenan Field and made for the goal posts. Carolina students and backers swept out to defend their goal posts.

According to Police Sgt. Coy Durham, some members of both sides had armed themselves with bottles which they began swinging. Durham said police moved in to keep heads from being cracked. Before halting the fray, they arrested three persons on disorderly conduct charges. No injuries were reported.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock and Student Body president Sonny Evans joined in issuing one statement about the fracas. State Chancellor Carey Bostian and State Student Body president Jimmy Hunt also issued a statement. Both expressed regret at the incident.

Bostian and Hunt said, however, that in their opinion press reports of the ruckus "were highly exaggerated." They said, "for example, numerous eye witnesses have said they did not see any students with bottles."

Evans proposed to Hunt that "to forestall such incidents' after State-Carolina grid games in the future a ceremony be arranged in which "the president of the student body of the losing team will present the goal posts to the president of the student body of the winning team." Bostian and Hunt said they though it was a fine idea and the ceremony would "provide a more appropriate end to this annual game in future years."

Aycock and Evans said in their statement, "We feel that the action of the police in trying to control the crowds around the goal post were taken not in order to protect the $15 worth of goal post structure but with a view to preserving law and order and to prevent a scuffle from becoming something worse."

Stoneham, San Francisco Officals Hold Conference

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23 (AP)—President Horace Stoneham of the New York Giants opened discussions with Pacific Coast League President Leslie O'Connor today on the price of taking over the San Francisco baseball territory. During the meeting, Stoneham stated flatly, "we're coming to San Francisco," and O'Connor indicated he felt the Brooklyn Dodgers would be in Los Angeles next year.

Following the session, part open and part closed, Stoneham said the purpose of his visit was to acquaint the PCL with the Giants' desire to operate a PCL franchise in any city acceptable to the league.

The New Yorker said the Giants would like to purchase the franchise of the present San Francisco Seals and operate it in another city of a realigned PCL.

O'Connor, who declared the No. 1 aim of the PCL was to stay in existence, told Stoneham and newsmen that he had no authority to make any committments today since the PCL has taken no formal action.

"If we can't re-organize, we certainly will look for compensation," added the PCL leader who has expressed league disappointment that the majors hadn't conferred previously with the PCL.

Asked whether some compensation might be sought if the Giants purchase the present San Francisco franchise which is owned by the Boston Red Sox, O'Connor replied:

"Quite possibly. We don't see any western cities as good as San Francisco and Los Angeles and there might be additional travel expenses."

Freshman Football Team Appears To Be Powerful

By DAVE WIBLE

The Tar Babies, Carolina's freshman football squad, seventy plus strong and loaded with talent, will turn this week from its present day job of defending the Navy Field goal line from the fury of the varsity to the equally difficult problem of finding the right combination to take to the turf against the Maryland frosh October 4.

Directing this, the second edition of Tatum recuited gridders, is a new member of the Tar Heel staff, Bud Carson. Carson if you remember was a star Carolina tailback for Carl Snavely during the 1948-51 seasons.

Under Carson's supervision is one of the strongest and largest freshmen teams ever to be assembled on a Carolina practice field. It is the largest ACC freshman squad this year. The team will be cut however to fifty-five or sixty before the opener.

Quanity and the looseness of the opening days of school have hurt the progress of the team. "With seventy boys to watch it has been hard to pick top prospects and give individual attention where it is needed. We have also had a little trouble getting the boys together, especially during freshman orientation," Carson stated.

Carson has his job cut out for him for the next two weeks for Maryland has recruited what he considers one of the greatest freshman teams in the nation. Last season the Carolina frosh beat Maryland 21-7.

Looking over the list of outstanding performers to date the abbreviation "N. C." appears often. Russ Hollers a 190 pound quarterback from Durham leads the list of the "outstanding." Hollers proved his versitility as an athletic last year when he was selected All-State for both football and basketball. Bright too, he is a Morehead Scholar.

Carson and his staff have not had the opportunity to pick a number one team since the team has been together so little but they have noticed some boys who, "will play a lot of ball."

. . . Carson

Pete Modrow, a Bloomfield, N. J., boy and Joe Kulpa from Chelsea, Mass. have been the most rugged linemen to date. Modrow is a guard and Kulpa a tackle. Carson calls center his strongest position. The strength lies in the equally powerful trio of Larry Roberts of Harrisburg, Pa., Tom Cabe from Brevard, and Bill Talley from Burlington. The four top ends are Carl Eanes of Martinsville, Va., Tom Hunnicutt of Asheville, Mike Greenday, of Chester, Pa., and Bob Campbell from Philidelphia.

In the backfield the top along with Hollers are Jim Graham a hard charging fullback from Raleigh and Sonny Folckorner of York, Pa., who has looked like the team's sharpest halfback so far.

With twelve days left before their debut the Tar Babies are digging in with the hopes of producing a ball club that will out shine last year's, who finished the season with a 3-2 record.

The new advancements in farm machinery are proudly shown by manufacturers in the Farm Machinery Parade on Wednesdays at the N. C. State Fair.

Tag Football Meet

Intramural tag football entries in the fraternity blue and the graduate divisions are due at a meeting of the team managers in 301 Woollen Gym at 7:30 p.m. today, Intramural Director Walter Rabb said yesterday.

Some 30 teams are expected to compete in the two divisions when play begins.

Coach Rabb said entries in the dorm divisions will close Oct. 1, and the fraternity white lists will close Oct. 14.

Actual play will begin next Monday when teams in the grad division start. Play in the fraternity blue division will start Oct. 7.

Coach Rabb said that from past experience he expects 85 to 90 teams to compete for the campus-wide tag football title.

Murals Officals Will Hold Meeting Tomorrow

A clinic for intramural tag footallb officials will be held in 301 Woollen Gym at 4 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday.

All-Day Ballot To Fill Three Key Positions

Inter-Dormitory Council President Tom Walters, in a statement to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, urged all men's dormitory residents to vote in today's election for dorm officers.

Elections will be held today for intramural manager, Inter-Dormitory Council representative and secretary-treasurer to serve for the 1957-58 school term.

Walters stated that keynote of this year's IDC plans is dorm government. He said that emphasis will be on informing dormitory presidents of administrative processes of the IDC so that more dorm administration will be handled on the individual dorm level.

"I would like to urge all dormitory members to get out and vote in today's election. I would particularly like to urge them to elect capable men because in the 1957 school year the IDC keynote is dormitory government itself.

"The IDC will work toward informing dormitory presidents of all phases of dormitory administration so that more of this can be taken care of on the dormitory level.

"We are very pleased with the work of the IDC so far and are anticipating a good year."

Presidents and vice-presidents of dormitories were elected in campus-wide elections last spring.

Opening and closing times for today's elections have been left to the discretion of individual dorm presidents; however, the Inter-Dormitory Council requested today that all balot boxes be returned to the housing office by 8 p.m. today for counting.

All Carolina men's dormitory residents are eligible to vote in their respective dormitories, according to IDC regulations concerning dormitory elections.

Alumni Give UNC $41,000

UNC alumni have donated $41,000 for "special and unrestricted" use by faculty and students here this school year, it was disclosed today.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and Tom Bost, Jr., director of Alumni Annual Giving, said the funds will supplement state appropriations and fill gaps not covered by tax dollars.

Chief benefits are expected to go for faculty research, graduate fellowships, faculty travel to professional meetings, a Chancellor's "emergency fund" and other uses.

Some $132,000 has been turned over to the university by the Alumni Annual Giving since the programs' inauguration four years ago. The amount given has increased each year.

Federal Troops To March On Little Rock

Ozark Guard Nationalized; Chaos Mounts

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Helmeted paratroopers from the 101st Airbourne Division took up stations around Little Rock Central High School last night while hundreds of people looked on.

There was no immediate reaction from the crowd.

Strife-torn Little Rock, rocked by a day and night of racial violence, reacted to President Eisenhower's order to federalize the Arkansas National Guard with surprise, approval and dismay.

Eisenhower's order was interpreted at the State Capitol to mean that the federalized guardsmen will be under orders from Washington now, and that they will be detailed to keep in Little Rock.

President Eisenhower in a broadcast address last night appealed to citizens of Arkansas, "to assist in bringing to an immediate end all interference wtih the law."

Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon, after first refusing comment said:

"Upon proper request from the local authorities, I was prepared at all times to call out the National Guard to help preserve the public peace. I have never received a request from the local authorities."

In Birmingham, Ala., Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas said in an interview state authority would have settled Little Rock's school integration problems without violence if President Eisenhower "had left law and order to us."

Faubus said "as long as the National Guard was in control, not a blow was struck, nor property damaged."

In Washington, the Defense Department said regular U. S. troops probably will be sent to Little Rock, Ark., to help enforce school integration. They would augment Arkansas National Guardsmen called into Federal service.

Secretary of Defense Wilson Federalized the Arkansas Guardsmen just two hours and three minutes after President Eisenhower had directed him to take such action.

Eisenhower, in an executive order signed at his Newport, R. I., vacation headquarters, said he acted because "certain persons in the state of Arkansas, individually and in unlawful assemblages . . . have willfully obstructed" enforcement of a federal court order for racial integration at Little Rock's Central High School.

The White House was emphatic in declaring it had a firm legal basis in taking its action.

Gov. Faubus yesterday questioned the president's legal authority to use federal troops in Little Rock unless requested by the governor.

James C. Hagerty, the president's press secretary, told a news conference today that "people quoting the laws on the president's

Administrative Doors Opened For 1st Time

By BEN TAYLOR

In a surprise move yesterday, the Chancellor's Cabinet extended a formal invitation to top student body executives to attend its future meetings.

The long-awaited invitation came to Student Body President Sonny Evans' desk Tuesday afternoon, asking that student body officials sit in on future meetings of this top executive body.

It was expected to enable student body officers to narrow the gap between the "big six" and student government on matters concerning students here.

The letter formally invited Evans, Student Body Vice President Don Furtado and Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass to attend this year's first meeting September 30.

Evans immediately issued a statement calling the action a predecessor to "a new era in administrative and student government relationships."

He said the student body here "owes an immeasurable debt of thanks to both Dean Weaver and Chancellor Aycock, for at least we can emerge as junior partners of the University."

"It has long been the hopes and desires of individuals in student government to participate in the far-reaching and essential things in the University," Evans declared.

"However," he added, "it could never be done so long as we did not have representation on those bodies which set this long-range policy."

Evans said that student expression within the Cabinet will "make for a more mutual understanding of problems facing everyone."

He called the action "a time of great moment," adding, "we are at the beginning of a new era in administrative and student government relationships."

The State Department made public a diplomatic note, couched in blunt language, handed today to the Soviet foreign ministry in Moscow.

It said similar notes were delivered by the French and British.

They were the latest in an exchange touched off Feb. 11 when Russia called for a big four declaration condeming use of force in the Middle East.

200 Students Wanted For GMAB Committees

By PATSY MILLER

Two hundred students are needed to work on the 14 Graham Memorial Activities Board committees, according to a statement made yesterday by Benny Thomas, president of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

"GMAB is one of the largest student organizations on the campus," Thomas said, "and it is in contact with all the students on campus. It takes a large number of interested, capable students to do the job expected of us.

The work is most rewarding and self-satisfying. Committee work is open to any interested student and applications are now available at Graham Memorial information desk," Thomas said.

The 14 committes are recreation, film series and drama, forum, dance, publicity, office, receptions and decorations, polls, calendar, tournament, Mardi Gras, Sound and Fury, music and free films.

The film series and drama committee is responsible for the Petite Dramatiques, film series and other dramatic productions.

The forum committee works with faculty, administration, townspeople and discussion groups.

Campus calendars for each semester and other special events are arranged by the calendar committee.

Adlai Address Gaining Statewide Attention

Governor Adlai Stevenson's challenge to educators to modernize teaching has focused statewide attention on a scheduled address by the former presidential candidate here Saturday.

The N. C. Citizens Committee for Better Schools' state educational rally will sponsor the 10:30 a.m. address in Memorial Hall on the UNC campus.

Chairman Holt McPherson, of High Point, said today that inquiries have come from all over the state, especially from superintendents who are bringing school board members and local better schools committeemen to hear the message.

Members of the Council of State, the Board of Education, the Board of Higher Education and the sponsoring committee, together with a number of other officials and friends of Gov. Stevenson, will have seats on the platform.

Gov. Luther H. Hodges will handle the introduction and be a guest, along with Gov. Stevenson, at a breakfast University President William C. Friday is giving at the Carolina Inn for members of the committee.

The full program will be broadcast over WUNC-TV and WPTF-FM, feeding a statewide hookup of stations. WFMY-TV at Greensboro will broadcast live the Stevenson address and Gov. Hodges' introduction from 11-11:30 a.m.

Gov. Stevenson will be interviewed at a press conference in Gerrard Hall at 11:45 a.m. After luncheon at the Morehead Planetarium he will attend the Carolina-Clemson football game. He will spend the night as a houseguest of Gov. Hodges at the executive mansion in Raleigh.

Stevenson, who is chairman of the Advisory board of Encyclopedia Brittanica Films, Inc., comes under sponsorship of the State committee because of his interest in educational advancement. He says that after years of familiarity with public questions, he has found the deficiencies in education a most serious and urgent concern.

"I am convinced," he told the committee, "the need for greater public understanding of the tools by which I foresee a major breakthrough into a new era of teaching."

A Milestone: Aycock Paves The Accomplishment Road

A significant and signal accomplishment has already come out of the University's new Progressive Era.

The accomplishment is the betterment of relations between student government and the University administration.

It is in the form of a mere letter from the principal in the University's new wave of progressivism — Chancellor William Brantley Aycock. The effect of the mere letter is momentous.

Chancellor Aycock has invited student government officials to sit in on meetings of the Chancellor's Cabinet along with the University's top administrative officialdom —the heads of the administrative divisions.

A recent student body president had as a campaign platform plank the establishment of a junior partnership between the administration and student government. It sounded good on paper, but like so many campaign promises, it dwindled into the mucky mire of oblivion after ballots were favorably tabulated.

It is sincerely felt by those who know student government that Chancellor Aycock has paved the way — with his administrative change—for the development of a junior partnership during the current academic year.

Thus the way is paved for student government. It is now the responsibility of officials in student government to tread along the paved way with a series of proposals—responsible proposals—in the best interests of the student body.

We look for responsible and significant accomplishments from student government — accomplishments to parallel those already proposed by Progressive Chancellor Aycock . . .

Open Admonition To Profs: Scream Dissention

The Daily Tar Heel proposes an open advocation that University faculty members never be hesitant in speaking their minds upon any issue not only affecting the University, but also affecting any situation existing upon this massive globe.

Faculty members in the past have arisen from oblivion by asserting their learned theories upon issues affecting the University and nation.

This year should be no exception.

We have faith enough in the University administration to believe it will listen to constructive criticism from faculty members without censoring them.

Along this line, we reprint an editorial from the Oct. 6, 1955, Daily Tar Heel—an editorial justly complimenting 50 courageous University profesors who spoke their minds in the face of administrative disagreement:

"The overriding allegiance of the scholar is to his classroom and to learning, not to the world of affairs. But there come times when he may well leave the citadel of academe and speak his mind.

Such a time came last summer in North Carolina, when it developed that the Governor and the state's attorney general chose to draw no distinction between segregation problems in higher education and parallel problems in the public schools at large. After the Governor's plea for "voluntary segregation," 50 faculty members in the Consolidated University collaborated in a series of letters supporting integration.

They were joined in their protest against the Governor's plan by Paul Green, the Chapel Hill dramatist who has devoted his career as a writer to heralding American freedoms.

The duty of both the scholar and the writer, since they are kinsmen in the effort to increase and maintain the cultural heritage, becomes crucial when that cultural heritage is threatened. Make no mistake: it has been under threat in the segregation crisis. The most vocal racists would not only deny the findings of biology and anthropology, the dictates of ethics and religion; they would stomp learning altogether before they would compromise their own wounded emotions.

In a 1940 essay, "The Irresponsibles," the poet Archibald MacLeish indicted the scholars and writers of the pre-World War II period for their indifference to the cultural crisis posed by the rise of Fascism. The practical man alone, "the man whose only care is for his belly and his roof," MacLiesh asserted, could "safely be indifferent to these troubles."

The things he lives for are not menaced. And it is precisely the scholar, the poet—the man whose care is for the structure of the intellect, the houses of the mind — whose heart is caught. For it is the scholar's gods which are in danger.

Our own time of troubles, with its very real threat to the "houses of the mind," has caught the hearts of at least 50 faculty members. We wish there were more.

THE HILLTOP:

A Ubiquitous Cog In GM's Machine . . .

Nancy Hill

The way to find out facts—useful facts—about Carolina isn't in handbooks or guidebooks or even in orientation, really. It's from the people that run things, and often the people that don't get much recoghition. They're the ones that really love their jobs.

Graham Memorial is one of the places lots of students take for granted. But if you get curious about what goes on their ask Rand Bailey about it.

Rand is starting his fourth year as a cog in the GM wheel. He started out working in the pool room and is now building supervisor. You'll find him doing everything from making over desks into coffee tables to washing windows to making electrical repairs in The Daily Tar Heel office.

He knows the building inside out and gets as excited about building partitions in the Ram-Ewe office as he does about the new color television set on the TV lounge.

He was telling us the other night about improvements in GM this year The color television set is one. Another is the additional television room that has been set up on the landing on the right-hand side of the building. The portable television set is moved other places when it isn't in use there. The TV lounge, according to Rand, was packed Sunday night and people are even coming in to watch afternoon programs.

★ ★ ★

The barber shop in the basement that gives the buck haircuts has added another man to the staff. There are now three barbers, all licensed by the North Carolina Barber Assoc.

★ ★ ★

A lot of painting was done over the summer. The TV lounge is rose beige now, and the information office is pale green. The ping-pong room—nobody knows why—is painted bright red.

There is everything in GM from pool room to Sunday school classes —Presbyterian, Episcopal and Friends.

Rand is a senior religion major from Fuquay Springs who plans to attend seminary after graduation next spring. He started preaching here and has conducted services at several rural churches in the area. He rather typifies the cooperation that you'll find in Graham Memorial.

A teacher in a Brooklyn school asked Joey to give her a sentence using the word "bewitches."

"Careful, Men — Don't Break The Furniture"

FROM THE DAILY KANSAN:

London's Switchblading, And A Censored Cadaver

The Russian's increased stubbornness at the London disarmament talks following their announcement of the creation of an inter-continental guided missile shows that negotiations between nations are not grounded upon reason. "Progress" has taken the reins, and man is now guided by his missile.

Man's present plight over to atomize or not to atomize, as embodied by the London disarmament talks, is another in a continuing series of events illustrating how easy it is to miss the point.

The babble of disarmament has grown so large that disarmament itself appears to have become the end, rather than a means to end war. The diplomatic battle at London regressed to a high-level bullfest comparing national switchblades.

The contemporary reasoning seems to be that the cause of war is the weapon. This discounts the age-old method of choking an antagonist to death. This reasoning followed to a conclusion, would dictate that each man would have his hands severed at the wrist and his toes blunted.

The desire to wage war is not based upon possession of weapons, but upon a state of mind Some of the basic causes of war, such as greed, fear, envy, and misunderstanding have been forgotten as man runs a footrace with his beloved machine.

The idea that the discontinuance of the armaments race will contribute to the halting of world conflict is sound, but it is the beginning of the toughest job the world will ever face—the creation of a lasting peace.

Man is not preparing for a future, but rather is postponing an end. Diplomats appear to be men not in control of their technical forces, but guided by them. Each innovation in weapon-making upsets the delicate balance of diplomacy. This says little for man and points to the victory of machine over reason, and consequently, man. The policies between governments are not based upon reason, or even attempted understanding, but on the present level of technical intelligence.

If and when disarmament is accomplished, man is liable to sit back and say, "We've destroyed man's ability to wage war." This is nothing but international cheerleaderism.

The desire to wage war is a hardy weed and not easily uprooted by diplomtaic exhortations, objurgations, and snorts. The fact that John Doe in Zarah, Kan., doesn't have a gun means little to Abdul who stands barefooted in the sand and contemplates a haywire jingoistic slogan. It is of such tinder that wars are made, and no amount of diplomatic ninccompoopery will stave off basic hatreds.

The Kansas City Star has censored poor, pitiful Claude, one of the latest additions to the chain of characters which pass through the life of Dick Tracy.

The deletion was probably made in an effort to prevent publication of material which the Star considers to be in bad taste.

Claude doesn't present a pretty sight. The mere fact that he is dead, let alone the fact that icicles drip from his sallow chin, eliminates him from any consideration as Mr. America.

His absence from the comic strip didn't hurt the story much, either. All the censored panel contained was an off-stage quote from his wife, the gal responsible for Claude's present low temperature.

Nevertheless, we had grown fond of Claude. In a comic strip which has seen prune faces, B-B eyes and dwarfs, Claude was a genuinely new twist.

At least he doesn't prance through the strip sticking his nose into young lovers' affairs. Not once did he strut across the Sunday comic section with a chest full of Air Force service ribbons. He may never wake up, but it's a cinch he won't wake up in a newspaper office, clad in a negligee.

Claude may have made off with $200,000, but he'll have a long time to repent while sitting in that cold-storage room. He really may be a nice fellow. His personality just needs to be a little warmer.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

The Button-Down Look & Neophyte

Grayson Mills

The title of this column correctly imposes that it exists by and for music, but unlike its odious bedfellows, it will not endeavor to pursue the prosaic style that has branded recent musical journalese as publicity slosh and hackneyed presentation.

But though there will be no patented presentation, "Odes On Music" shall always have two underlying purposes: to entertain, and to show that even where music is concerned, "The world," as Oxenstierna so ably put it," is ruled only by a fraction of wisdom."

Fifteen years ago, or thereabouts, a small weed appeared on a swinging horizon. The country was still entralled with the melodious drive of the Goodman's and Dorsey's, and the subtle swing of Glenn Miller.

But there were men in music tired of a good thing. They wanted something new, something of their own. They called it their seedling bebop and it consisted of weird solo patterns interspersed with fractions of melody lines from such old Mother Goose rockers as "Mary Had A Little Lamb" and "Jack Horner Sat in A Corner."

For five years this ilegitimate youth of jazz couldn't get to first base with the public. For that matter, nothing could, because the public donned ear muffs for the entire duration of the war, causing bands to drop off like flies in the face of flit.

So devotees of bebop labored for peanuts and self-enjoyment in booze dumps, Harlem cellars and fellow advocates' garages. Its pillars of granite were Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, Stan Kenton, Roy Haynes, and a handful of others who fell on their heads as babies, creating ambryos for exciting, surrealistic forms of expression.

From these shaky beginnings, modern jazz, with its gendarme of progressive, cool tut and tuther, has miraculously grown to undreamed of popularity.

But why? The Ivy League kiddies (these come in all forms) go for it because it's like them. STRANGE. Brainy individuals say the music isn't trite and offers food for thought. Belt-buckled cats needed an excuse so they pounced on this one like a fat wallet.

Though the vogue threatens to become consummating in our colleges, the dissenter has the hope of final triumph, for man needs a musical release of his repressions and this modern jazz does not provide.

ODES ON MUSIC:

The Genesis Of Progressivism

Al Walker

So you've been through registration. So your troubles have just begun. You are now attending the University of North Carolina. Oh, you poor fish.

One of the most firmly entrenched institutions at this school is The Daily Tar Heel. It is delivered to your door, whether you're going to read it or not. It will try to start controversies, and then solve them, to increase your interest in it. But it won't do any good, because you will have already fallen into the trap that ensnares most of the people who live here and "study" here.

Ah, but this year The Daily Tar Heel has a new and wonderful attraction being added to its pages thrice weekly. And this wonderful thing which will cause you to pick up the paper with trembling fingers and tear open to the page on which your eyes now rest is my column.

Oh, if only some senior had written a column as good as mine is, when I was but a mere wandering freshman. How it would have saved me from many self-evaluating looks at my development in this large, crawling place—The Hill. But this year, things are different.

When I was a freshman I came a week early for orientation week. What a wonderful way to start off your college career. Meeting under the beautiful old trees with a real college man in a white button down shirt and a dull tie and about seven or eight other wide-eyed members of your indoctrination group. As he fingers his blue book with all the wonderful facts about our school and its traditions and sayings and things to do and things not to do, you can't help but wonder how you yourself, will turn out after four years here.

And you wander drearily around the campus, seeing the lovely sundial which, incidentally points at the North Star, in case you ever wonder which way is north, and the planetarium, which will probably be your last visit there unless you invite somebody down or up from your hometown and you want to impress them with the academic side of our campus, and the art gallery, which also incidentally, we are getting a new one of, over near Barclay's Station, and the library. I can remember when my orientation counselor showed our group around the library. The thing he stressed the most was where the head was. Apparently when he was a Freshman, he nearly split a gut looking for the damn thing. Well, he showed it to us, and I have never forgotten where it is. It is a very good head.

As I think back about my orientation counselor, the thing that I remember most clearly about him is the fact that he "tried" to be a typical Carolina Gentleman, not only in his clothes, but his thinking. At the time, as I recall, I was truly impressed by those intangible qualities which go to make up this prototype, but that was only because of my "immaturity" and the fact that this was a strange animal to me.

Now that I have found that Chapel Hill has some mystical faculty for turning out reproductions of my orientation counselor, I have hardened myself to the fact, and at times even have enough guts to sit amongst aw hole passel of them at "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter," or at the Skimpo.

So much for that.

talking about." He did not mention do not know what they are tion Faubus.

In Washington, Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) said the use of federal troops here "may precipitate more trouble than it will prevent."

McClellan blamed "this situation" on the "force decree of the Supreme Court which shattered all previous court precedents . . ."

A man-in-the-street reaction at Little Rock found a majority of the people interviewed by an Associated Press reporter in agreement with the Senator.

Federal troops will mean "disaster" a 24-year-old man who would not be quoted by name said, adding that "the Federal Government has been wrong on this integration issue from the first because it is in too big a hurry. Ten years from now, maybe. Not now."

"I think Eisenhower is doing the right thing," said Robert O'Neal, manager of a local collection agency. "I think the right-thinking people here are ashamed of what has been going on at Central High."

"President Eisenhower should know what he is doing," said Frances Williamson, 17, department store advertising employe.

But of the 15 people interviewed, 13 refused their names but were quick in denouncing federal interference.

A crowd of about 200 persons gathered about class time yesterday but began dwindling almost immediately after the buzzer called students to classes. By noon just a few persons lolled about the school and barriers were removed by police to permit traffic along the avenue in front of the building.

Thus far 48 persons have been arrested in connection with racial violence. The big majority were charged with disturbing the peace.

There were rumors of a student boycott of the school if and when the Negroes return. Supt. Virgil Blossom said 700 students stayed away from the 2,000-pupil school today.

Russia Advancing

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—Britain has told the U.N. there are signs the Communist arms buildup in Syria is intended to stock Soviet advance bases in the Middle East.

Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd made the statement in a policy speech before the 82-nation General Assembly in which he charged the Soviet Union with creating tension and anxiety in the Middle East. He also declared failure to make progress on disarmament is due to Soviet refusal to get down to brass tacks."

Lloyd's speech concided with the delivery of notes to the Kremlin by the United States, Britain and France containing similar charges on Soviet activities in the Arab world, and rejecting the Soviet request for a big power declaration renouncing use of force to settle Middle East issues.

Bonds Offered For Jobs Here

The Consolidated University of North Carolina office yesterday announced that in today's edition of the Raleigh News and Observer appears an advertisement for the sale of $2,000,000 revenue bonds to pay for the construction of three new boys' dormitories and an addition to Spencer women's dormitory here.

The advertisement also includes a notice of the sale of $2,000,000 revenue bonds to finance the construction of a dormitory at State College.

Bids will be received in the Consolidated University office until 11 a.m., October 5, at which time the Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees will meet in the Morehead Building for the purpose of opening bids and awarding contracts.

Security for the revenue bonds will come from rental fees after the dormitories are occupied. The bonds were approved earlier by the State Advisory Budget Commission.

J. A. Branch, UNC business manager, said yesterday that the three boys' dorms which will house 652 persons are 25 per cent completed at this time. He expects the dorms to be ready for occupancy by September 1958.

Branch said that the addition to Spencer dorm is now 35 per cent near completion. He said that 75 girls will be able to move into the new addition next September.

Branch mentioned that the North Carolina State Legislature has approved the building of two more men's dorms which should be completed by September 1959 at a cost of $1,000,000. These buildings will accommodate approximately 400.

The State Legislature has also approved the construction of a dormitory for men in health affairs at a cost of $790,000.

Dr. Harry Bergholz, a world renowned scholar, has been accepted as Chief Bibliographer in the UNC Library.

A naturalized American citizen and a native of Berlin, Germany, Dr. Bergholz holds the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Berlin. He has also studied at the Serbonne in Paris and the Institute di Cultura Italiana in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Prior to accepting a position with the University of Michigan in 1948, he taught languages in Germany, England, Switzerland and Lawrence College in Wisconsin. At Michigan he taught courses in German and Scandinavian Literature.

Dr. Bergholz will arrive in North Carolina October 1, to assume his duties. His responsibilities will include evaluating the Library's holdings and determining research and teaching methods. He will also work with the faculty in selecting and acquiring books and journals for the library collections.

Though Dr. Bergholz has published extensively in U. S. and foreign language journals, his most important work as a bibliographer to date, is a bibliography of the works of Josef Weinhever, which was published in 1953.

In addition to Dr. Bergholz's work as a bibliographer and instructor, he has worked as a translator, a publisher's reader and a bookseller.

International Relations Program Is Added

By CORT EDWARDS

Are you interested in working with the U. S. Foreign Service? Or how about the United Nations? Would you like to represent an American business firm in some foreign country?

Well, the University has added a new program of study leading to an A.B. which will prepare students for careers in international relations. It is called International Studies.

The program, which will begin next fall, is designed to provide a broad general understanding in the fields related to international studies.

In addition, it will provide a basic preparation for students who wish to enter upon a career in international relations.

Many of these careers exist in government service (i.e., Foreign Service), in business (i.e., dealing with operations in a foreign country), in international organizations (i.e., the United Nations), and in teaching.

Administration of the new program will be centered in the office of J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He will be assisted by a group of advisors selected from the departments participating in the program.

The new program will bring together many students interested in international relations who up to now have been scattered through several different departments.

The International Studies curriculum will consist of two main parts. First, students will be required to take a "core' of courses selected from the six participating disciplines; anthropology, economics, geography, history, journalism and political science.

The second part will give the student a choice of two alternatives. He may concentrate either in a single geographic area (i.e., Europe, Asia, or Latin America) or in one of the six participating disciplines.

The "core" courses will consist of six courses in at least five of the six fields mentioned above, plus one language course in addition to those required by the General College.

The core courses from which choices may be made are: Anthropology 122, Cultural Anthropology; Economics 111, International Resources and National Policy; Economics 161, International Economics; Geography 152, Economic Geography.

Also, History 143, Diplomatic History of the United States; Journalism 146, International Communications and Comparative Journalism; Political Science 145, Contemporary International Relations of the United States; and Political Science 86, International Relations.

Certain substitutions for these courses may be made, at the discretion of an advisor, to meet a student's special requirements.

As the second requirement, the student must choose between a particular geographic area or concentration in a particular field. The student will be required to take six courses under either plan.

These courses would include subjects as the United Nations, Cultures of Southeast Asia, Europe since 1918, and the Regional Geography of South America.

If the student chooses the geographic plan, he will be able to choose six out of approximately twelve courses. If he chooses the other plan, he must take a minimum of five courses over and above the "core" requirements.

The remaining requirement for the degree in International Studies is to complete seven or eight electives, five of which should be nondivisional upper-college courses.

As the focal point for international studies, the program will also use seminars, speakers and student clubs to better acquaint students with international affairs.

According to the administration, students who are now in General College and are planning to major in International Studies, should take such courses as Econ. 31-32; Geog. 38; Hist. 21-22, or 44-45, or 48-49; and Political Science 41.

New Features On TV

Tours of the State Governmental offices and three new courses for college credit in art, education and mental hygiene are being featured as WUNC-TV began its fourth season of regular broadcasts Sunday, September 22.

Although the 100,000 watt Channel 4 outlet had been broadcasting into schools for the previous two weeks, Sunday marked its return to the regular schedule of daytime and evening shows.

A completely new program lineup is underway with programs originating from the mobile studio, as well as programs from the three campuses of the Consolidated University.

The tours of the various state offices will come under the program title of "Affairs of State," and began Friday with an hour-long visit to Governor Hodges' office. The program will be conducted each Friday at 7:30 p.m.

The courses in art, education and metanl hygiene are being taught by Dr. Clemens Sommer, Dr. W. Carson Ryan and Dr. Alice Schriver, respectively. Enrollment is arranged through the UNC Extension Division, Chapel Hill, for the art and education courses, and through Woman's College Extension Division for the mental hygiene course.

The Channel 4 Sunday church services reach a state-wide audience through rebroadcasts by stations in Raleigh, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Washington. Services are currently being televised from the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church, by the Rev. Vance Barron, minister.

A new series of Wednesday afternoon programs covering areas of science, nature lore, children's recreation, language and career service marked the first all day programming by WUNC-TV.

Tar Heels Still Optimistic—Tatum

"I still believe we can have a fine ball club by mid-season," said Jim Tatum at his weekly press conference yesterday.

Tatum told newspapermen that he didn't feel at all like he did after the N. C. State game of a year ago. The Tar Heel mentor indicated that he knew last season that he was in for a long year, but this year 'there is a lot of hope for us."

"Naturally we were disappointed after the State game Saturday," Tatum continued, "but the boys showed improvement and definite hope for the future."

Sunny Jim readily admitted that State was the better ball club Saturday but was a bit perplexed that the Tar Heels were favored in pre-game dope. He referred to a statement made by Wolfpack chieftain Earle Edwards prior to the game that Carolina was picked to win because of Tatum's coaching record.

Tatum was disappointed and a bit amazed that his team did not score.' 'Why, before the game," he stated, "I would have staked my life that we would score as much as three touchdowns.

Passing Was Big Disappointment

Asked if he thought "breaks" was an instrumental factor in the outcome, Tatum replied: "Anytime a game is that close the breaks are bound to play a big part. We got as many breaks as State but ours were spread out and their's came together."

What phase of the Carolina play disturbed Tatum most? Passing! "I don't understand it," he said. "I know we have three good passers yet we could do little through the air Saturday."

Sunny Jim was reluctant to single out any individual stars, but remarked that Co-Captain Buddy Payne "played one of the best games I've ever seen him play."

Tatum praised the work of his tackles, all six of them. He indicated that since there were so many sophomores in the line he might make some personnel changes, though nothing radical.

The Tar Heel coach pointed out that it takes sophomore backs less time to develop than soph linemen and viewed that by mid-season some of his sophomore backfield men should be playing like veterans.

Tatum was reminded that earlier he had expressed pleasure in his offensive prospectus yet the Tar Heels got only 73 yards rushing. Evidently he felt that that was just one of those things that happens in football. You can't rely too heavily on any one phase because some Saturdays nothing goes right. The Tar Heel leader admitted that his backfield played better defensively than offensively.

Cheek, Tullai Call Clemson Tough

Assistant coaches Emmett Cheek and Fred Tullai, who scouted the Tar Heel's next opponent, Clemson, were on hand at the luncheon and both agreed that the Tigers are loaded.

Clemson blasted Presbyterian, 66-0, Saturday, and the two Tar Heel aids were impressed with what they saw.

"Of course," said Cheek, "Presbyterian was no real test but Frank Howard has a fine ball club down there. They're big and experienced and have some very fine sophomores."

Tigers Hustled All The Way

Both Cheek and Tullai lauded the Clemson backfield. According to Cheek, it has depth, speed and ability. "They are set in such a way that Howard could easily start a sophomore backfield against us Saturday," he said

Although neither saw Clemson in action except in movies last year, both expressed the view that the Tiger offense is stronger than the one which carried them to the Orange Bowl in 1956. "They're throwing more passes this season," Tullai avered.

What was the most impressive thing about Clemson? Hustle. "They never loafed," Cheek commented. "They carried out their assignment on every play despite the fact they were way ahead."

Carolina Harmony; Tickets On Sale

Sports notes gathered from here and there. Athletic Director Chuck Erickson figures the Clemson game will draw about 25,000 fans to Kenan Stadium. The State game drew 39,000 and was the largest crowd at Kenan since the Tennessee game back in 1953.

Three members of the Carolina football team are currently practicing the art of instrumental harmony. Halfbacks Wade Smith and Danny Droze have been meeting in Buddy Payne's room frequently for a jam session. Droze plays the banjo uke, and Payne and Smith play baritone ukes. Smith and Droze divide the melody and tenor parts while co-captain Payne sings bass.

Jim Tatum is of the opinion that both his Tar Heels and State College played like a couple of high school teams after the first quarter Saturday. What else can you expect when it's as hot as it was Saturday?

Carolina students are reminded that Maryland tickets are on sale right now at the gym. This is Caravan Weekend so grab your tickets, girls and flasks and lets all go pay the Queen a visit.

Virginia halfback Carl (Rip) Moser is Sophomore of the Week in the ACC. Moser was chosen for his fine work in the Cavalier's 6-6 tie with West Virginia last Saturday.

Harriers Prep For Opener With Clemson

By KEN FRIEDMAN

"Cross country is a tough game. As the Monogram Code says: 'It challenges my courage, and tests my skill. It teaches me patience and self control . . . It expects me to be fit in body and mind, and to keep fit by building sound and sufficient mental and physical habits. . . . It is a man's game, built solely for courageous, clean and intelligent men."

Such was veteran Coach Dale Ranson's greeting yesterday to the remnants of his fine 1956 cross-country squad which swept to a 12-1 record and the ACC championship last fall.

Ranson, although met the type to come forth with an out-and-out prediction, seems to be confident that his boys have enough ammunition to carry them through to another top year, despite the loss of great Jim Beatty.

His expectations do not seem too far-fetched. Four lettermen are back to bolster the ranks with a big boost forthcoming from a pair of new faces on the varsity scene.

Captain Everett Whatley, a 4:15 miler, leads the returnees who also include John Reaves, Howard Kahn, and the veryp romising Dave Scurlock, who has already posted a 1:48.2 half-mile. Ranson pointed out that Olympic champion Tom Courtney's best time for the half-mile while at Fordham University was 1:49.5.

Heading the newcomers is lanky Wayne Bishop, a top-flight two-miler, who was forced out of cross-country competition last season by an injury. He is expected to be high in the running for the number one spot on the squad. But the big surprise may come from a sophomore, Cowles Liipfert, who as a frosh bettered Beatty's standard for the mile with a 4:21.2 clocking. Fick Arthur, another soph, Alex Coffin, Doug Henderson, Frank Sirianni, and Joe Freberg comprise the front-line reserve corps.

The harriers open the season on October 7 with a dual meet with Clemson, a team which reportedly possesses their best talent in several years. Naturally, the Tigers would like nothing better than to send the Tar Heels back to Chapel Hill with a loss under their belts and so Ranson is taking no chances. The boys run an aggregate of better than 15 miles per week, practicing.

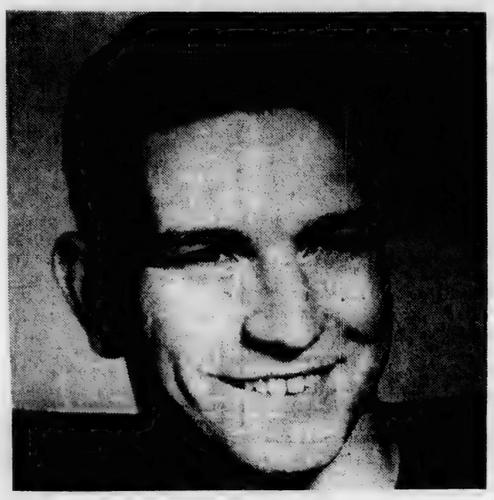
First Meeting Since 1915 For Two Schools

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels continued preparations for their Saturday encounter with the Clemson Tigers yesterday, taking advantage of some cool, sunny weather after drilling in the rain Monday.

The Tar Heels, 7-0 loser to N. C. State last Saturday, were reported in high spirits as they readied themselves for Frank Howard's tough Tigers. Clemson walked over a weak Presbyterian team, 66-0, in its opener last Saturday.

Clemson, the ACC representative to the Orange Bowl in 1956 is reported to have the guns again and should bring a formidable outfit into Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon.



The Tigers are deep and experienced with a great array of sophomore talent. Frank Howard, the wise-cracking, personable mentor of the Tigers is reported to be "loaded."

But the Tar Heels are far from awed by the power of the Clemson contingent. They'd like to reconcile the Saturday incident and there's no time like the present since they go against one of the nation's toughest, Navy next week.

Also, the Tar Heels would like to end an 11-game losing skein that dates back to the N. C. State game in 1956. Of course the Tar Heels have won since then (twice and tied one) but all was lost when it was learned that an ineligible player had played in '56.

At present, Carolina is in good physical shape. Only sophomore Nelson Lowe and junior Emil DeCantis are taking things easy. Lowe, a quarterback, missed the State game and might have to sit out the Clemson affair because of a pulled ligament. DeCantis' status is undetermined at present. He suffered a bruised chest Saturday. Daley Goff, who was injured on the last play of the game Saturday is back in harness. His injury was determined a "'cramp" in the leg.'

It's been a long time since the two clubs have met. Back in 1915, Carolina took a 9-7 win over the Tigers and the Atlantic Coast Conference cohorts haven't met since. Carolina has a 3-2 edge in the all-time series against the Tigers.

Sooners Top AP Poll; Duke Rated Seventh

The first major games of the 1957 season did nothing to alter the general pre-season belief that Oklahoma has the strongest college football team in the land.

Striking with awesome speed and power against a team that had been regarded as the best in the East, the Sooners demolished Pittsburgh 26-0 last Saturday and ran their record winning streak to 41 consecutive games.

The result was reflected today in the first Asociated Press weekly ranking poll of the new season. Oklahoma had been the pick of the sports writers and broadcasters in the pre-season poll when they rated the teams in the way they expected them to finish. Oklahoma was again an overwhelming choice in the first weekly rating, based on what the teams have shown so far in the new season.

Only nine of 74 experts participating in the weekly voting failed to put the mighty Sooners on top of the list. Seven of those rated Oklahoma second. One nonconformist wouldn't give Bud Wilkinson's squad a higher ranking than 10th and another cast a vote for fifth place.

Texas A & M rated second in the pre-season balloting, retained that place. Michigan State, ranked fourth, drew four of the nine first-place votes that didn't go to Oklahoma. Duke received two and Navy, Minnesota and Iowa one each.

In the point scoring, on the basis of 10 points for each first place vote, nine for second, etc., down to one for 10th, Oklahoma received 720 points to 460 for the Texas Aggies.

Texas A & M had a stern opening opponent in Maryland, but came through at the finish in the rain for a 21-13 victory.

Georgia Tech, an impressive 13-0 winner over Kentucky, moved up to third in the first weekly ratings, displacing Michigan State, and Navy, which gave Boston College a 46-6 battering, advanced to fifth. Tech and Navy had been rated 11th and 12th in the pre-season voting.

Others in the first 10 this week were Minnesota, Duke, Tennessee, Oregon State and Michigan. Duke caught the eyes of the voters by whipping South Carolina 26-14 and Oregon State thumped Southern California 20-0. The Big 10 teams and Tennessee don't open their seasons until next Saturday.

Card Heads Pick Braves In Series

By JOE REICHLER

MILAWUKEE, Sept. 24. (AP)—A newly confident Milwaukee team and its suddenly cocky manager, Fred Haney, actually boasted today how they were going to "take" the proud New York Yankees in the World Series. And it is surprising how many baseball-wise people here agree with them.

Frank Lane and Fred Hutchinson, general manager and field manager, respectively of the St. Louis Cardinals, whose desperate drive to overtake the Braves came to a dramatic tnd last night, are among those who think Milwaukee will humble the American League's practically perennial champions next week.

Each has a different reason for stringing along with the Braves. Hutchinson, a former pitching star with Detroit, thinks pitching, with emphasis on Warren Spahn and Lew Burdette, will win for the Braves. Lane picks the Braves on power.

"Pitching is usually the deciding factor in a short series," Hutchinson pointed out. "To my mind, Milwaukee has stronger pitching than New York. I look for Spahn to be the outstanding pitcher in the series. He has the savvy and experience. He's at his best in big games and I believe he has the kind of equipment to stop a team like the Yankees. I wouldn't be surprised if he wins two and maybe three games. I look for Burdette to beat the Yankees at least once.

Lane, somewhat recovered from yesterday's tough loss that forced his Redbirds to settle for second place in the National League race, was voluble in his praise for the Braves.

Milwaukee will prove as good a Series representative as the National League has had in many years," he said. "It is a young team, spirited and hungry. I think the Braves will come into the series with a better mental attitude than any of the Brooklyn teams that faced the Yankees during the past 10 years. That's because the Dodgers, having been beaten by the Yankees so often looked upon them with unrestrained awe and regarded them as sort of supermen.

"On the material side, the Braves have more power than the Yankees. I know all about Mickey Mantle and Yogi Berra and nobody respects their hitting ability any more than I do. But Mantle is hurting and Berra has not had one of his good years.

Terp Tickets On Sale Now

Ticket sales to students for the Maryland game, Oct. 19 in College Park, are lagging behind expectations, Vernon Crook, business manager of athletics, said yesterday.

Mr. Crook said he was surprised that less than one-fourth of the 1,000 tickets allotted for students have been sold. He said after this week the tickets remaining will be on sale to the general public.

Chancellor Aycock has designated the game as the annual football holiday, and classes will be suspended that Saturday. No definite plans for a train or bus caravan have been made as yet, but officials hope arrangements can be made by the end of this week.

Queen Elizabeth will be present at the game, and it has been announced she will sit in a special box on the Carolina side of the field.

Eisele, Cheshire Added To Staff Of Tar Heel; Will Fill Key Posts

By DALE WHITFIELD

Concerning the appointments, Editor Bass said: "I am extremely gratified to have these two responsible men on my staff. It is assuredly a valuable addition. Last spring, I promised the campus the best student publication possible. Now I sincerely feel we are well on the way to achievement of this promise. I look forward to significant contributions from Doug and Bill, as well as an entire, larger and more efficient staff."

Eisele is a sophomore from Statesville. He is a 1954 graduate of the Statesville Senior High School.

While on that paper he did reportorial and photographic work. He was also a "stringer" for the Charlotte Observer, The Greensboro Daily News and The Winston-Salem Journal.

His past newspaper work includes being the representative for the United Press in and around the Statesville area. During the past school year he worked as a reporter and feature writer for the UNC News Bureau.

As managing editor, Eisele will be responsible for the make-up of the front and runover pages. He will write heads for the same and will be in overall charge of the news staff.

Eisele said that in his new job he will "aim for more consistency in The Daily Tar Heel make-up with an eye to increased readability and appeal to the paper's numerous subscribers."

Bill Cheshire is a senior at the University hailing from Hillsboro. He graduated from the Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Va., in 1950. He entered UNC in the fall of the same year. He left the campus in '52 to serve a four-year hitch in the Coast Guard. In 1956 he returned to the University. Last summer Cheshire was managing editor of the Summer School Weekly, the official UNC summer publication. He is majoring in Journalism and plans to work on a newspaper upon graduating.

Cheshire stated that he "will endeavor to provide more efficient coverage of the campus scene, to present this news in both an interesting and objective manner, and to strive for greater unity of purpose among the reportorial staff." Both Cheshire and Eisele are members of the Zeta Psi fraternity.

GMAB Begins Reorganization; Chairmen Seek New Members

By MARY MOORE MASON

Excitement reigns supreme at Graham Memorial now as the GM Activities Board begins its committee reorganization and its choosing of this year's committee members.

Each of the fourteen committee chairmen who make up the Activities Board are already looking over student interest cards and scouting the Information Office for applications.

However, there are still so many places to be filled, for GMAB is looking for enthusiastic, original people who are interested in thinking up ideas for the Student Union and leading in carrying them out.

The "Sound and Fury" committee is scouting for people who are interested in writing, acting in, doing publicity for, painting scenery, or working on any other phase of the student-written and produced musicals.

Phi Defeats Bill Giving Schools To Religious Units

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Philanthropic Literary Society defeated a bill to turn the public schools over to the various religious denominations by a vote of 33-2 Tuesday.

Introducing the bill, Representative Jess Stribbling said that the modern American "knows no moral code save expediency." He blamed this ill and others on the lack of religious training in the American public schools.

By encouraging the Church, he felt, "we can restore purpose and dignity to life."

Representative David Matthews claimed that religious ideals have perverted mind and morals, giving as an example the Israeli-Arab conflict.

He believed that strong religious faiths would cause dissention in the United States and that religion was best in the background.

Guest Clarence Simpson said that the bill was contradictory and was impractical as there are 189 different denominations. He suggested students be given religious training starting in the first grade.

Claiming this bill would put the public schools under federal control, Representative Don Jacobs thought it would be a better alternative, though not the best, for the government to give scholarships to train more top quality leaders.

He felt that religion could take care of itself and that the religions could not work out a plan suitable to all of them. This speech was deemed the best of the evening by the official critic.

Guest Theodore Quast suggested years of study and work to find the appropriate religion and that one should not be forced to accept the religion of his parents.

He proposed this alternative "to do justly and walk humbly with thy God."

Representative Don Gray explained that this bill would present grave distribution difficulties making some people go great distances to find their church's school.

Guest Bobby Scott questioned the ability of the government to run the churches' educational programs as well as the churches are doing.

Treasurer Don Jacobs said the Phi had $37.29 in the bank.

There were people in the hall; many were freshmen who had had debating experience in high school and had been expressly invited by the Phi.

Redding Will Preside Over 8 P.M. Event

Final plans were made here yesterday for a required fraternity rushee meeting set for 8 o'clock tonight in Memorial Hall.

IFC President Bill Redding reminded all potential rushees that failure to attend the meeting would make them ineligible to join any Carolina fraternity this year.

Redding will preside over the Thursday night session which is expected to draw some 600 prospective rushees to Memorial Hall.

Roy Armstrong, director of admissions for the University, will be keynote speaker at the meeting. He is expected to comment on the fraternity's role in University life.

Rush Week, which begins Sunday at 2:30 p.m., along with the fraternity system are expected to be explained. The floor later will be open for discussion.

Jerry Oppenheimer, chairman of the Interfraternity Court, echoed Redding's reminder that all potential rushees are required to be present at tonight's meeting.

"Let me emphasize the fact that this meeting is mandatory for all rushees," Oppenheimer said.

He said anyone unable to attend the meeting should contact either Redding (8-9033), Tom Rand (8-9027), or himself (6031).

Governors Ask Troop Removal

By The Associated Press

Southern governors, worried over states rights because of federal troop intervention at Little Rock, Ark., have voted to send a committee to Washington seeking withdrawal of the soldiers "at the earliest possible moment."

The resolution, adopted at the Southern Governors Conference at Sea Island, Ga., grew out of a suggestion by Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee.

A five-man committee headed by Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina was named to seek a conference or conferences with President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas as soon as they can be arranged.

The resolution was adopted by an 11-1 vote with Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, a Republican, casting the lone dissenting vote.

World In Brief

Queen Threatened

LONDON (AP)—The London Evening Standard says Scotland Yard security officers are investigating a report that an attempt may be made to assassinate Queen Elizabeth II during her American visit next month.

Officials at the Yard declined comment on the story. "We never discuss matters of security," a spokesman said.

The newspaper sadi a titled British tourist told Scotland Yard of the plot after overhearing a conversation in Barcelona, Spain.

Witness Testifies

SOMAGAHARA, Japan (AP)—A Japanese scrap collector said a brass cartridge case from William S. Girard's rifle whistled by his leg moments before a second shot killed Mrs. Naka Sakai on the U. S. firing range here last Jan. 30.

Hidetsugu Onozeki, testifying in a rain-drenched outdoor session of Girard's Japanese manslaughter trial, said he saw the Illinois soldier stuff a cartridge case in the grenade launcher on his rifle. Onozeki said he ran away thinking he would be shot.

Unions Must Clean Up

NEW YORK (AP)—The AFL-CIO has ordered two more unions—the teamsters and the bakery workers—to eliminate "corrupt influences" and the officers responsible for them.

The ultimatum gave the unions 30 days to report back to the big labor federation on the clean-up.

Its 29-member executive council, top governing body of the merged labor groups, already has issued the same order for reform in the textile workers union.

The AFL-CIO has indicated it stands ready, if necessary, to oust the three groups with more than 1,500,000 members f they fail to take steps to wipe out alleged malpractices.

Four Planes Vanish

LONDON (AP)—Four U. S. Navy planes carrying a total of 10 men have disappeared during giant NATO sea exercises.

Admirals in the giant carriers and cruisers immediately suspended the exercises, which are being carried out with war-like realism, and organized a massive sea and air search for the missing planes and any survivors.

Names of the missing men have not yet been announced.

Dialectic Senate Downs Bill Commending Faubus' Action

By DAVIS YOUNG

Tuesday night the Dialectic Senate, by the narrow margin of seven to six, defeated a bill commending Governor Faubus of Arkansas on his recent actions.

The bill in effect stated: It is the duty of a governor of a state to use his discretion in dealing with impending violence.

He is to be commended for his foresight and fine leadership.

The floor was filled with excitement as this highly publicized subject was introduced by Senator William Sabiston, author of the resolution.

Sabiston contended that sending of federal troops into a state was an unprecedented move. He maintained that Faubus had the situation under control and was capable of handling any violence which might occur.

Senator David Mundy immediately took the floor to digress with the first speaker. He cut loose with a sizzling verbal blast at Faubus.

Senator Gary Greer indicated that the Civil War was fought on the issue of civil rights vs. states rights. He went on to closely parallel the existing situation in Little Rock to the eve of the Civil War.

Senator Pat Adams, former Dialectic prexy, summarized the first three speeches in a burst of satire and sarcasm, directing most of his remarks to Senator Sabiston.

With the questions and answers exhausted, the previously mentioned vote was recorded. At the conclusion of the meeting, President Gerry Boudreau asked that all people interested in joining the Dialectic Society attend the next meeting.

District Chairman Of Committee Named

Mrs. Charles H. Crutchfield of Charlotte was appointed today to be a district chairman of the UNC School of Nursing Committee of the Medical Foundation of North Carolina.

Dr. Paul Whitaker of Kinston, president of the Foundation, stated that Mrs. Crutchfield will be in charge of educational programs for nurses activities in five counties: Mecklenburg, Anson, Union, Stanly and Cabarrus.

Mrs. George Carrington of Burlington is statewide chairman of the School of Nursing Committee.

Mrs. Crutchfield, the wife of the president and general manager of the Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Co., is a native of South Carolina, and is active in community affairs in Charlotte, including the United Appeal, Heart Service, Charlotte Symphony, and Women's Auxiliary of the Mint Museum.

'Maid Of Cotton' Search Begins

Any woman between the ages of 19 and 25, who is at least 5 feet 5 inches tall, and who comes from one of the cotton-producing states may compete for the Maid of Cotton title.

The winner of the contest must have poise, personality, background and intelligence in addition to appearance, as she will represent some 13 million Americans.

She will be good will and fashion ambassador of the American cotton industry and as such she will make a 30,000-mile international tour. This is part of a program sponsored by the National Cotton Council, the Cotton Exchanges of Memphis, New Orleans and New York and the Memphis Cotton Carnival Association.

About December 15, a judging board will select 20 finalists from the submitted material. These finalists will be notified by wire to appear in Memphis for personal judging on January 2 and 2, 1958.

All candidates in the Maid of Cotton contest must:

1. Never have been married and be between the ages of 19 and 25, inclusive.
2. Have been born in one of the following cotton-producing states: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia; or have been born in a cotton-producing county in Illinois (Alexander, Jefferson, Massac, Pulaske, Williamson, Madison); or Nevada (Clark, Nye).
3. Be photogenic.
4. Be at least 5 feet, 5 inches tall.
5. Be in excellent health.
6. Be willing and able to meet people.
7. Realize that background, personality and appearance are of equal importance in the selection of the Maid of Cotton.
8. Be willing and able to make an international tour beginning early in January and lasting until August. If employed, the winner necessarily would have to obtain leave of absence, or, if in school would have to suspend her studies for the duration of the tour.
9. Be willing to travel by air on regular commercial airlines.
10. Agree to travel with a chaperon designated by the National Cotton Council of America.
11. Understand that there will be no financial remuneration except as follows: all candidates chosen as contest finalists will receive $100 toward defraying expenses in connection with competing in the finals; the first and second alternate winners will each receive in addition a $100 Savings Bond; all expenses of the winner of the 1958 Maid of Cotton contest will be paid for the duration of the tour.
12. Understand that she must pay all other expenses incidental to her appearance in Memphis for the finals of the contest.
13. Agree to appear before the audience at the contest finals in cotton apparel; agree to appear before the judging committee (not before the audience) in a bathing suit.
14. Agree, if selected to appear in the finals of the contest, to be in Memphis on January 2 and 3, 1958.
15. Realize that the purpose of the entire program is to stimulate interest in cotton.

Adlai's Trip Can Flip.. Phooey, We'll Take Dewey

On the University campus, he has now lost some of his most loyal supporters.

Why? Simple. The Carolina Forum, speaker procuring agency, has diligently attempted for many, many disgusting moons to procure the fluent oratorical services of Aspiring Adlai—but to no avail.

Now still Aspiring Adlai has decided to visit the campus to speak, supposedly to assist in the efforts of the N. C. Citizens' Committee for Better Schools. We submit it's for the benefit and forwarding of Oratorical Adlai's third shot at the presidency—a Southern feather in his political cap.

Did Esoteric Adlai notify frustrated Carolina Forumers he'd be knocking around for a few days. Nope, to be blunt, he did not.

And furthermore, former "I Idolize Adlai" men won't even get a chance to listen to the gentleman from Illinois due to a scheduled speaking engagement while classes are in session Saturday morning. On behalf of the former Adlai Idolizers, we submit this bit of typewriter tomfoolery:

We liked Adlai's esoteric oratory,

Even when condemned to presidential mortuary.

But now his campus trip for reasons political,

Our faith in him is shook,

We feel like we've been took,
So to him we say big "phooey,"
Over him we'll even take Tom Dewey.

Still Aspiring Adlai may gain political support by his obviously political trip to the University.

But he'd metter appreciate that grandson, for his friends among frustrated Carolina Forum'ers and interested students who'd like to hear him speak are numbered.

His trip can go flip.

J-School's Material: How About Bottles?

We would like to suggest that the School of Journalism furnish a bottle of fresh milk, appropriately nippled, to each student taking journalism courses.

And we suggest that in lieu of titles like dean, associate professor, et cetera, titles like Associate Diaper Dispenser, Supreme Safety Pin Procurer and so forth be substituted.

The reason is, of course, the maternalistic attitude which the school has taken regarding class attendance regulations.

We hailed the institution of a new cut system last year which allowed each school, department and instructor to regulate attendance according to individual discretion.

We felt at this time that student with acceptable averages would be allowed cuts up to 25 per cent.

But Journalism School officials and certain other instructors apparently still feel they must play the old school marm and rap mature college students' knuckles unless they attend every class meeting except three.

We feel the school is being unjustly dictatorial and maternalistic.

Along this line, we reprint an editorial from the Furman Hornet:

The new regulation allowing unlimited cuts to those persons attaining an acceptable average on all their work at Furman prior to their junior year is perhaps one of the more progressive steps taken by the University in some time.

To some members of the administration, it is a stepping stone to relaxing an undesired paternal hold over the student body. For years students have cried longingly for more responsibility. This is the most advanced movement in that direction yet.

Responsibility is a term often misused. To some it means work, hard work, making of decisions, and lack of security. To others it means freedom from restraint, a challenge, a chance to use imagination. Whatever it means, the new system is good—good in the respect that it means responsibility, the function of a student to do what is best for him.

To have the ability to recognize and accept responsibility is a trait unfamiliar to many college students. Many abuse such freedom . . . others enjoy it.

Although the new regulation will affect only a small portion of the student body, it is hoped that those affected will not abuse the privilege, and thus allow a more relaxed system in the future.

The addition of responsibility to the Furman curriculum is welcomed.

Vets Spared, Many 'Fanks

It has been clarified that veterans with valid excuses are not required to take physical education.

We have long felt that mature men returning to the campus from military service—many with familial responsibilities — should be spared the ignominious chore of physical education.

Now, through the combined efforts of the Physical Education Department and the General College, veterans may be spared this chore.

Thus they should take full advantage of the opportunity.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Rogue's Gallery Of The Ingrate Americana . . .

By Whit Whitfield

Only once in a generation do truly great men like John Kasper and Governor Orval Faubus arise in American history. How fortunate can one country be?

To start our comments, let us take John Kasper, self-styled Yankee rabble-rouser, and giant among men. He is destined to go down in history as one of the truly great men of all time. There can be no doubt about this. Words do not come well enough to describe this staunch defender of "White Supremacy," and demagogue of a thousand southern idiots who follow him. (And there must be at least a thousand people in the South who are that stupid, although Kasper and I both wonder if there are really that many).

Just take a look at what he is doing for the South. Not since the days of the Civil War has the South received so much publicity, both nationally and internationally. This is great for southern business. His tireless efforts in forming White Citizens Councils and in bringing back the spirit of the Ku Klux Klan are a source of wonder. Where does a man get such strength? He is truly without peer in his realm of endeavor.

Word has it that he is being considered for a Nobel Prize, but we are inclined to believe that a new category would have to be added to include his kind.

Now let us praise another great —Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas. Few men have risen from the oblivion of the executive mansion of the State of Arkansas to national prominence so rapidly and with so much publicity. As a matter of fact, no one has.

His grandstand play was no doubt used to garner him some voters in the next gubernatorial race. Little did he know that he would almost have to get his state to secede from the union and declare war on the United States to get out of this pinch. Now, what will he do without his troops? Capital publicity stunt I would say, and darn good politics too. He did manage to save the True South a bit of trouble however. Now that he has lost out, our sister southern states will be very hesitant about seceding again. He has probably helped us avert another Civil War.

That he has made the South look more backward than ever is only too evident. That he has given Soviet Russia a wealth of propoganda to use against us is also too evident. We do hope that he wins back the voters which he previously alienated, for it would be ridiculous for him to lose the next election after getting in all of this mess, just to protect the people of his state from "violence." And now the brave fool is fighting for the rights of the governor of a sovereign state and states rights, neither of which have existed since 1865. What a brave man he is! How can we help but admire him?

Much more could be said about these two gentlemen, but space will hardly permit. For that matter, neither will the laws of propriety-or the courts.

"Oh, Say, Can You See?"

FROM THE DAILY TEXAN:

Academic Freedom Is Stiffled? Reverberrations From Texas

And so the Texas Tech incident moves into another round—with blow-by-blow exchanges becoming more and more heated.

Among the latest developments are resolutions from the Tech faculty charging that the Tech Board of Directors violated principles of academic freedom and accreditation standards on faculty tenure in July when they ousted three Tech professors—Drs. Abernethy, Greenberg, and Stensland—in secret session without hearing.

Southern Association of College and Secondary Schools has said it will begin an investigation September 23, and the American Association of University Professors has indicated it also may make a probe.

Earlier, the Tech Board meeting August 17—a month after the trouble first started, voting 8-1 again denied the professors an open hearing.

No matter who is to blame, it is gratifying to see the concern and sincere interest which has been expressed from all parts of the country—from fellow professors and educators and students, from politicians and farmers and businessmen—all concerned when violations of academic freedom supposedly occur.

It would have been a sad day, indeed, had their dismissal for reasons unstated been met with a passive resistance from fear of endangering job or position.

As from the start, there are still too many unanswered questions.

Why weren't reasons given for the ouster? The professors have requested a public hearing, and it would seem if only the trio's teaching were involved and reasons for dismissals were well founded, that only the professors would stand to lose from such a hearing.

The Lubbock newspaper openly said that the removals resulted from political and social pressure—Abernethy was a leader in the Democrats of Texas, the liberal wing of the Democratic Party, and Greenberg had publicly stated he favored integration.

Other unofficial reasons have come to the fore following an informal meeting between the three professors and two Board officers:

1) Charges that Abernethy, former regional director of the Wage Stabilization Board, receives a large outside income from work as a mediator in labor-management disputes.

2) Two petitions (signed by about five Tech students) asking for the removal of Dr. Greenberg.

3) Letters from students, alumni and others critical of the professor.

4) Abolution of the Adult Education Program (and thus the job of Dr. Per Stensland) as an economy measure.

Influence of some of these reasons may be discredited—and attributed to disgruntled students; almost every professor has his share.

Others have speculated, in the case of Stensland, that the adult program (sponsored by funds from the Ford Foundation) was entirely too liberal for the Conservative Board.

A less widely circulated reason has been advanced that the case in some way involves the Tech administration and the Board wishes to save Tech's face.

Even then, it is hard to see how a group of reasonable men, fully aware of the consequences of their action (possible loss of accreditation), could repeatedly deny the right to public hearing—if their decision was made without haste or prejudice and based on adequate information.

Surely the name of Texas Tech could not have had to suffer any more in light of all the facts than it has in the light of no facts.

We await the probe of the AAUP and Association, and hope that they may make headway toward a workable solution to the tangle which has been produced.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

Summerism And WC Tee-Heeism

One of the more colorful expressions which I've heard around this campus is usually said by "students" just before and just after a holiday, weekend or summer. The punctuation at the end depends on whether it's before or after a lay-off from "studies." Here it is:

"Have a good summer?"—said at the beginning of the fall semester with a rising inflection and a question mark at the end.

"Have a good summer."—Said at the end of school in May as you drive off in a convertible headed for home with a descending note at the end of the sentence and a period to denote either a command or just a statement. I've never been able to figure out if it is mandatory to have a good summer or not.

"Have a good holiday," "Have a good weekend," with either question marks or periods after them are both equally colorful and quite useful at their appropriate times. It saves much thinking on the part of the greeter to have a ready-made greeting to blurt out at the slightest provocation. None of those old saying like, "Hi, how's it going?" for a Carolina man.

I have a friend who frowns on these greetings about as much as I do, and so whenever we meet we generally try to make up original and colorful salutations such as "Hot enough for you?" if it's hot, and "Wet enough for you?" if it's wet, and other silly things like that. Anything to amuse ourselves.

My case rests as far as that is concerned.

There certainly were a flock of girls over from Greensboro for the game. About five minutes before game time, upwards to 20 busses come rollin' through the gates by Woollen and parked down on the intramural field and the women started pourin' out of them like crazy. I was selling programs rather I was standing there with programs for sale, when they came bounding off the busses, and I ain't never seen such a crop in my life. Big ones, fat ones, pretty ones, and some other kinds.

Most of them were having a little trouble with their heels and everything, but on the whole, I was duly impressed by the way they handled themselves

One of the things I overheard:

"Which way is the woods?" one giggling lady said to her five young women companions, all of whom were walking fast towards it.

"Oh, I mean which way to the stadium?"

"Tee, hee, tee, hee."

"Up in the woods, silly."

"Tee, hee, tee hee."

The football game didn't impress me too much and neither did the cheerleaders, although one thing I did notice; all the Carolina fans seem to be a lot more willing and eager to cheer in the last quarter, and by this time the cheerleaders are all worn out and so is the team. Of course, all we have to do is sit up in the stands and drink, whereas both the cheerleaders and the team have to exercise more than their elbow. If there was some way we could all get together in the fourth quarter, the games certainly would be more enjoyable.

The Card Section did its usual fine job except for that one purple on row K which always kept popping up.

DAVID LAWRENCE:

Self-Styled Libs Are Inconsistent

WASHINGTON — "Book burning," interference with free speech, censorship of radio and television so that American history and old folksongs are inaccurately presented to the people—all this goes on in freedom-loving America nowadays without much protest from the so-called "liberals" or their "civil liberties" organizations.

Strange inconsistencies emerge. Thus, Senators Humphrey of Minnesota and Douglas of Illinois, Democrats, have joined in suggesting that President Eisenhower should "personally take those colored children by the hand and lead them into school" at Little Rock, Ark.

But did any of the so-called "liberals" ever suggest or would they venture to recommend that the President of the United States take workingmen by the hand and lead them into plants and factories where their right to work—a basic constitutional right—is denied them?

* * *

NOR HAS THE governor of any state come forth with such a solution for the problem created when labor unionism does what Congress is forbidden to do—abridge the freedom of the press under the color of law. "Collective bargaining" rights and picketing powers are, of course, derived from federal law. Yet none of the so-called "liberals" has risen to protest the closing down of newspaper plants in many cities through the establishing of picket lines which labor unions that are not themselves parties to the dispute refuse to cross. This is a concerted action that deprives many thousands of workers of their opportunity and right to work and just as effectually denies freedom of the press as if Congress had ordered it.

The California Federation of Labor is so stirred up over the Little Rock situation that it has just urged impeachment of President Eisenhower for not taking forceful action of some kind to get the colored children into the high school in Little Rock. But that same organization would hardly favor any forceful measures to enable honest, law-abiding white or colored workingmen to enter a plant when there's a strike.

* * *

FOR MANY YEARS now, the unions have denounced any use of the National Guard to protect citizens in labor dispute. Yet today there are calls for the government here to "federalize" the National Guard and use such troops to "enforce" desegregation.

SMITH-EVERGREEN COTTAGE—This is the home of 17 Carolina coeds this year. Located behind Smith Dormitory, the cottage will house 19 girls and has been used as a sorority, fraternity and men's dorm in the past.—Photo by Norman Kantor.

Smith-Evergreen Cottage Is Home For 17 Carolina Coeds This Year

By PATSY MILLER

No. 3 Fraternity Row. Smith-Evergreen Cottage—is the official residence of 17 Carolina coeds this year, according to Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

The little cottage, previously known as The Evergreen Cottage, has been transformed from a sorority house to a fraternity house and finally to an annex of Smith dormitory. A long time ago it even housed men graduate students.

It will accommodate a total of 19 women students.

The new annex is under the supervision of the Smith dormitory house mother, Mrs. Sedalia Gold.

Mrs. Mabel Brittain, director of the Red Cross in Chapel Hill, is part time counsellor for Smith-Evergreen. She serves as the house hostess and spends her nights there while working with the Red Cross during the day.

The building was given by the University for the use of women students for an academic year of nine months in order to comply with two new programs offered by the University.

The programs, one in medical technology and one in physical therapy, are of interest to women students. However, because of crowded conditions in the women's dorms, there was no room in the residence program for additional women students, according to Dean Carmichael.

Hence the reason for Smith-Evergreen!

The cottage was annexed to Smith dormitory for financial reasons, Dean Carmichael explained. All dormitories must be self-supporting, and since the Evergreen Cottage would not have paid for itself, it was attached to Smith.

The women living in the annex have full social privileges in Smith dormitory. They are free to use the parlors for dating and to use the washing machine and other facilities.

Serving as house president of Smith-Evergreen is Susan Riley from Woodstock, Va.

Other house officers are: Laurie Gard, vice president; Jean Hall, secretary; Jo Britton and Connie Von Bramer, house council representatives.

General College Dean Calls Attention To Cut Regulations

Dr. Cecil Johnson, dean of the general college, has called attention to absence regulations as they relate to general college courses.

The regulations provide that a student whose unexcused absences equal the number of regularly scheduled class meetings in a normal week shall automatically be on attendance probation. Any additional unexcused absence will cause the student to be dropped with a grade of "F" unless one or more of the absences is excused.

Dean Johnson further commented that a student who uses his quota of unexcused absences goes on probation automatically and immediately without the formality of notification by the dean's office.

Dean Johnson said that the regulations do not indicate any tightening of the rules but is an effort to simplify procedure. The regulations are based on the assumption that a student who is mature enough to attend the University is capable of presenting to his instructors excuses for absences and of keeping account of his unexcused absences.

General college students whose average for the preceding semester is of Honor Roll caliber have optional attendance up to the limit of 25 per cent of the total class meetings.

GMAB

You will find the recreation committee chairman working with the chairman of the dance committee on a dance to be held in October and also making plans for a campus talent show, and bridge, dance and billiard lessons.

The chairman of the reception and decoration committee helped plan the reception last week after the football game, and is now waiting to help the dance and recreation committees on their next venture.

"No Exit," a symbolic drama about Hell, is planned for the first presentation of the Petite Dramatiques, which comes under the film series and drama committee.

Numerous free films are being brought to the campus by the free film committee, and if you arrive in the lounge of GM some evening and find a classical musical program, folk singing or a barber shop quartet, chances are that it is sponsored by the music committee.

The forum committee will be working with the faculty, administration, and townspeople in presenting discussion groups and forums.

Every student election will be greatly aided by the work of the UNC officials, students, and townspeople who work on the polls committee.

All during the year bridge, ping pong, billiards, chess, and checkers matches and tournaments will be held at UNC and with other schools, all sponsored by the tournaments committee.

The calendar committee is the committee which will send you a calendar for each semester with all scheduled campus events on it.

Of course none of these committees could function well without the aid of the office committee and the publicity committee.

Benny Thomas, president of GMAB, says, "We need and want all interested students to come by the Information Office at Graham Memorial and fill out an application for one or more of the GMAB committees. If anyone has any questions about GM, come by and see me at my office on the second floor of Graham Memorial."

Law And Grad School Test Dates Announced By Service

The Law School Admission Tests and the Graduate Record Examinations, required of applicants for admission to a number of law and graduate schools, will be administered at examination centers throughout the country four times in the coming year, Educational Testing Service has announced.

During 1956-57 more than 24,000 applicants took these tests and their results were sent to law and graduate schools all over the country.

The Law School Admission Tests will be given on the mornings of Nov. 9 and Feb. 15, April 19, and Aug. 2, of 1958. The fall candidates may take the Graduate Record Examinations on Saturday, Nov. 16. In 1958, the dates are Jan. 18, April 26 and July 12. Applicants for next year's classes ordinarily are advised to take either the November or the February test, if possible.

The Law School Admission Test, prepared and administered by Educational Testing Service, features objective questions measuring verbal aptitudes and reasoning ability rather than acquired information. It cannot be "crammed" for.

Sample questions and information regarding registration for and administration of the test are given in a Bulletin of Information.

This Bulletin (in which an application for the test is inserted) should be obtained four to six weeks in advance of the desired testing date from Law School Admission Test, Educational Testing Service, 20 Nassau Street, Princeton, New Jersey.

The Graduate Record Examinations offered in these nationwide programs include a test of general scholastic ability and advance level tests of achievement in sixteen different subject matter fields. According to ETS, candidates are permitted to take the Aptitude Test and/or one of the Advanced Tests.

A similar bulletin for the Graduate Record Examinations may be obtained from college advisers or directly from P.O. Box 27896, Los Angeles 27, Calif.

Completed applications must be received at least two weeks before the desired testing date in order to allow ETS time to complete the necessary testing arrangements for each candidate.

Elections which resulted in a tie will be run off on Friday.

President Walters issued this statement to The Daily Tar Heel following the elections: "Our plans are to bring I.D.C. government to the level of the dormitories. We will try to impress the dorm officers with the responsibility their positions hold."

"This should be the best year in the history of the I.D.C. Some of our plans include the tapping of new members for the I.D.C. Honorary Society, more telephones in dorms, and general improvements as we see fit."

"We will place a great deal of emphasis on the I.D.C. Court. I have the utmost confidence in Chairman Frank Brown and Clerk Pat Leonard. The Court will continue to demand the respect of students living in the dorms. We look for better things in the future through the cooperation of all dormitory residents."

Late Permission Given To Sorority Girls

Dean Katherine Carmichael announced yesterday that late permission until midnight has been granted for all sorority girls who live in dormitories on Monday and Tuesday.

This permission was granted by joint action of the Women's Residence Council and the office of the dean of women in order that sorority girls can participate in lengthy sorority meetings on those nights.

Cagers Work Out—What About A Pep Rally?

Sports notes from here and there. The nation's number one basketball team can currently be seen in Woollen Gym about everyday, but not as a unit. Most of the fellows have been going down during their spare time and working out in pick-up games. Coach Frank McGuire isn't around to watch though, because the Tar Heel coach can't get close to the practice courts until the ACC gives the word. This, of course, applies to all the ACC coaches.

Just wondering if there are any plans for another pep rally Friday night. Last week's session was a good one and it seems a shame not to give it another go tomorrow night. We haven't heard of any plans but we hope there are some.

Speaking of college spirit, it looks like we've got a fine group of cheerleaders this fall. The guys and gals seem to be right in there pitching—the gals are not hard on the eyes either.

Ed Sutton Now With Washington Redskins

Looks like there might be some relief in sight for the Carolina-Clemson game this weekend. Last Saturday the heat was a demoralizer for the fans and the players, but the weatherman says it should be cooler this Saturday.

Carolina coed's definition of a halfback: "Twice as much as a quarterback." That's a new one on us.

Remember Ed Sutton? He was Carolina's fine halfback of a year ago. Now he's with the Washington Redskins and doing very well. We got to see Ed a lot while the Redskins were training in Winston-Salem the last of August and first of September and he's real happy with the 'Skins. Everybody connected with Washington is confident Ed will make the grade in the pro ranks and many predict he'll be one of the outstanding rookies in the NFL. He'll be going to med school at Tennessee when the season ends.

World Series Should Be One Of Best

Who're you picking to take the World Series? We'll take the Yankees (but we're partial). It should be a great series. The people of Milwaukee are so happy about winning the pennant that they probably won't be crying in their beer if the Braves lose. Wouldn't be surprised, however, if they're not favored by the time the first game starts Oct. 2 in Yankee Stadium.

While we're talking about baseball, look for Casey Stengel and Fred Haney to win the "Manager of the Year" awards. Fred Hutchinson might upset Haney in the NL though.

Interesting ancedote: North Carolina State is way behind Carolina in the won-lost book overall, but the Wolfpack has a 3-0 mark against Jim Tatum. State beat Carolina in 1942 when Tatum was here then again in '56 and '57.

Gamecocks Sweating Wofford Game

Look for Wake Forest to be better this season. The Deacs will miss Bill Barnes and Charlie Carpenter, but have more experience than a year ago. Wake opens its 1957 schedule against the University of Florida in Gainesville Saturday.

The University of Virginia will invade the Tar Heel State three times this season. The Cavaliers play Duke in Durham Saturday, Wake Forest in Winston-Salem next Saturday and close the season against Carolina here November 30.

Tickets Still On Sale For Terps

In Clemson's 66-0 rout of Presbyterian Saturday, sophomores scored six Tiger touchdowns. The Tigers are reported loaded with second-year talent.

Our prediction for the game of the week in the Atlantic Coast Conference: State vs. Maryland. The teams seem to be about evenly matched.

A reminder that tickets to the Carolina-Maryland game are still on sale. It's Caravan weekend and should be lots of fun. Incidentally, a committee will meet tomorrow to discuss plans for the Caravan.

Frat, Grad Tag Teams Enter Murals Program

By ED ROWLAND

Four graduate schools and 27 fraternities entered teams in the 1957 intramural tag football competition at a meeting Tuesday night in the gym.

Play in the graduate division begins Monday. Entering teams were the dental, medical and law schools, and the Peacocks (physical education graduate students). Intramural department official Tommy Johnson said after the meeting that he hoped even more teams will be entered in the division.

Johnson said 27 fraternities have entered the Blue division, explaining that Blue teams are composed of the best players in the fraternity. Due to fraternity rush, play in that division will not begin until Oct. 7.

Johnson also announced that the first meeting of dormitory intramural managers will be held Tuesday night. Play will begin Oct. 7.

Bill Mason, ATO, and Richie Smith, law school, were appointed chairmen of committees for nominating officers in the fraternity and graduate division. Each heads a three-man group.

In other action, the intramural department announced that instead of individual trophies given to team members of the winning football team, this year plaques will be awarded. The department said in this action it is following the requests of participants in the intramural program.

The managers are:

Pi Lambda Phi, Stan Greenspoon; SAE, Ed Kelly; Sigma Nu, Al Mustian; Dental School, June H. Stallings; Law School, Ritchie Smith; Medical School, W. H. Morris; Peacocks, Jack McGinley.

Jim Tatum Surprised By Award

Head football coach Jim Tatum was the surprised winner of the University Club's service award, which was presented to him in the form of a trophy and plaque during a pep rally held Friday.

Just what does the service award mean?

University Club president Frank Inman of Sanford, in his presentation speech said that the service award may be given to "any person connected with the University of North Carolina in any way. The recipient may keep the trophy for one school year, and the plaque forever."

"The award is to be made," Inman said, "to someone who has rendered some type of outstanding service to the University. The major merits considered are effort and participation."

Inman said that Tatum had been decided upon as the winner last year, "but the presentation was delayed for various reasons."

He said that Tatum received the award "in recognition of his outstanding work in developing Carolina's football team, student and team spirit and morals, and for his cooperation with the student body."

In his acceptance, Tatum said "it's the biggest trophy I ever received and the nicest, because it came as a complete surprise."

UNC Soccer Team Undergoing Many Experiments This Season

By JIM PURKS

A fullback or right inside last year, a goalie or halfback this year.

That's the general picture of the varsity soccer squad this year as Coach Marvin Allen is conducting several "experiments" with the players in a search to find a winning eleven.

Quite a number of players, who originally played one particular position, now find themselves in a new position . . . and, they are doing a good job in their new tryout positions.

Then, there's another Ted; this time Ted Smith. Smith was a halfback last year—this year he's on the forward line. The tall, blond-haired senior from Sea Cliff, New York, has been the most impressive player during the team's five spirited scrimmages. And what encourages Coach Allen even more is the fact that Smith kicks equally hard and accurate with his left and right foot.

These three men, combined with two new faces on the forward line, sophomores John Ghnanin and Mike Thompson, promise to shape into a formidable offense.

Defensively, Coach Allen is giving Dave Corkey, a stalwart at center fullback last year, a tryout at a halfback position, hoping that the powerful boots of Corkey and Captain Bill Blair may be able to feed the forward line.

In the vital goalie position, which was vacated by graduating star Chuck Hartman, former fullbacks Jim Rattay and Nick Zlotnicki are trying out along with two other candidates.

Judo Anyone?

Judo, anyone?

A group of students, organized by Buddy Shepard, is interested in holding judo classes and meetings during the year. All students who know the fundamentals of judo plus those who would like to learn are invited to attend an introductory meeting in the wrestling room of Woollen Gym at 3:30 p.m. Thursday.

Fundamentals Stressed By Rabb In Baseball Sessions

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Despite the fact that all of the baseball players out for fall workouts have had experience, Coach Walter Rabb is devoting this first week to fundamentals and conditioning. Infield and outfield practice is being held in addition to a review of pitching and catching techniques.

Another purpose of this fall practice is to screen the forty freshmen who want to tryout for the freshman team. Speaking on this subject Coach Rabb said, "We want to screen anyone who is interested and has a baseball background during this fall practice." Among the hopefuls for Freshman Coach Pat Earley's spring squad are several freshmen on partial scholarships.

The roll for fall practice includes sixty men, forty of whom were out yesterday. Due to the varying lab schedules it has been impossible to get all the boys out on any given day. Next week the squad will begin scrimmaging.

There are a number of men back from last year's team. Graduation, however, cut heavily into the team as it took away the entire outfield and several members of the pitching staff. In an attempt to remedy this pitching weakness, Rabb is working hard with his young hurlers. Junior Ben Harding, a left-hander, and classmate Doug Stimson saw limited action last year but are expected to pitch regularly this season. Up from last years freshman team is another pitcher, Wayne Young. These three plus Senior Charles Aycock are slated to carry most of the pitching burden.

Gridders Prep; DeCantis Back; Lowe Still Out

The once-beaten, but still confident Tar Heel gridders went through another closed practice session yesterday under the watchful eye of Head Coach Jim Tatum. Passing, both offensive and defensive, was the main item on the agenda.

All the quarterbacks and halfbacks limbered their arms while running the Carolina pass patterns. Although passing was reported a Big Blue strong point, the air attack was ragged against the Wolfpack Saturday.

Also sharing much of the spotlight was a drill against Clemson passing. The Tigers displayed a strong aerial game against little Presbyterian College while humbling PC 66-0 this past weekend.

The injury list improved 50 per cent with Emil DeCantis's return to practice. He suffered a bruised chest in Saturday's State encounter. Nelson Lowe, sophomore quarterback, is still out due to a pulled ligament.

The squad has shown good spirit in drills and nothing would please them more than upsetting the applecart for defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion, Clemson, in Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon.

GOVERNORS

into Central High School yesterday and then stood guard over their classrooms, integrating the school with United States arms.

The regular army troopers, in battle dress, bayonetted one man and clubbed a second with a rifle butt in a show of force that kept the white crowd moving and well away.

Paratroopers stood outside classes the six Negro girls and three boys attended and escorted them from one classroom to another.

It was impossible to estimate the crowd because it was scattered on three streets bordering the school. People stood in lawns, on porches and inside houses and buildings near the scene. The only congregation permitted was more than a block away from the perimeter of soldiers and this crowd made no move to cause trouble.

About 350 rifle-armed troops formed the first "line of defense" and later another 100 were thrown into the line to lengthen the perimeter beyond which no outsider could pass.

The scene was completely calm when the Negroes arrived in an army station wagon driven by an officer. They filed out and were immediately ringed by paratroopers with lowered bayonets who escorted them across the campus into the school.

Inside, a student who called the Associated Press office, said the Negroes were not mistreated but guards accompanied them to classrooms and then stood outside the doors.

A flurry of excitement was caused about mid-morning when a fire drill was called and the students poured out onto the campus. Rumors spread that a bomb scare caused the drill. Another report said the students' lockers were searched for weapons. School officials called it a routine fire drill.

After lunch few spectators remained. And they were quiet.

Officers had warned them repeatedly that "we're going to begin making arrests if more than two people are standing together."

The troops were told to "arrest them if they give you any lip."

No one did.

Just A Word Can Make A Hitter

MILWAUKEE, Wis. — (AP)— —Wes Covington, who got a second chance in the big time when the Braves traded Bobby Thompson, looked at his .292 batting average today and recalled a casuel conversation that helped him become a dangerous hitter.

One day, shortly after Covington's recall from the Wichita farm club, Red Schoendienst and Paul Waner, the Braves' batting coach, were talking about the importance of wrist action to hitters. As the two talked, Schoendienst demonstrated the points by gripping a bat.

"Any time anybody talks about hitting," Covington said today, "I listen. I just happened to overhear them. They weren't talking about me, but as I listened I realized that with my grip, my wrists were locked. I wasn't getting that little roll of the wrists that gives the bat that final flick and adds the power.

Just shows you what you can learn by listening.

Afterwards Schoendienst spent more time with Covington, one of the most powerful hitters in the game, and Wes' batting average started to climb. The big left fielder was hitting .125 when he rejoined the Braves. Before today's game with St. Louis, he was hitting .292.

In less than three months Covington has become one of the most feared hitters in the line-up of the newly crowned National League champions. This left handed power hitter with less than two seasons of major league experience already has hit some of the longest drives on record. He could cause the Yankees sleepless nights.

Covington's hitting was one of the highlights of the Braves' 10-game winning streak in mid-August. During that stretch, which propelled Milwaukee to an 8 and one-half game lead, this 6-0, 205-pound Negro from North Carolina batted .379 and drove in 13 runs, tops on the club. Before today's game his RBI total was 65.

Covington, an outspoken ballplayer who says what he thinks regardless of whose toe he might be stepping on, nearly went to the Giants in the 3 for 1 trade for Red Schoendienst June 15.

Armstrong Speaks At Meeting

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Inter-Fraternity Council sponsored a meeting last night in Memorial Hall for all freshman planning to go through rush.

The purpose of this event was to acquaint all prospective rushees with the rules of rush and the advantages of fraternity life. Main speaker for the evening was Roy Armstrong, Director of Admissions.

Bill Redding, IFC president, gave a brief explanation of the function of the group that he heads. He said, "we will try and avoid any dirty rush. We feel that it has been clean up to this point."

"We are looking forward to a better rushing program than ever before. I sincerely hope that all of those who will be visiting fraternities next week will enjoy themselves tremendously."

At this point Redding brought Mr. Armstrong to the rostrum for his speech. Armstrong stated: "Rush week will be one of the greatest experiences of your college life. Fraternities have been an integral part of UNC life for 100 years."

"Fraternities are highly respected organizations on this campus. They are sound, sensible, and sane. These groups of men are brought together with a desire for lasting friendship."

"There has been no distinction at UNC between a fraternity man and a non fraternity man for over 50 years. Joining one of these organizations is an individual matter."

"I want those of you that join fraternities to carry yourself with dignity at all times. You are to point for positions of leadership in the higher things in life."

"I would like to take this opportunity to wish you all the very best of luck in the adventure you are about to undertake."

After the meeting, Jerry Oppenheimer, Chairman of the IFC Court gave the Daily Tar Heel this statement: "My advice to rushees is to act yourself, be yourself and enjoy yourself."

"I am confident that through the effective leadership of the IFC that this will be an effectively-conducted rush week. In touring the houses, look beyond the physical plans. Seek those things which are of real meaning."

SP Plans Meeting For Monday Night

The Student Party will hold its first regular meeting next Monday evening in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial at 7:30 p.m.

Besides a speaker, who will be introduced by President of the Student Body Sonny Evans, there will be a few matters of business to be dealt with.

Announcements of vacancies of legislature seats in the men's dorm districts will be made at this time.

All old party members are encouraged to be present to welcome the new. A special invitation is extended to all new students who are interested in campus politics.

Fraternity Bids Will Be Given Before Noon

Men going through fraternity rush will be able to pick up their initial invitations between the hours of 9-12 noon today in front of Gerard Hall.

Inter-Fraternity Council heard Jerry Oppenheimer yesterday issued a warning to men going through rush that they must visit all houses to which they receive invitations during the first two days of rush. After that they may accept or refuse invitations without endangering their chances of pledging.

Oppenheimer's statement is as follows:

"We are very fortunate here at Carolina to be intrusted with the privileges of self-government. Such rules that are made are made by the fraternities' representatives, and not by the University; hence, they are the fraternities rules, not the University's. They cover all facets of fraternity life, but you, the rushee, will be primarily concerned with the rush rules.

"I would suggest that you study them carefully; many of them were made for your benefit and protection. If you are in doubt as to what is and what is not a violation, have the point clarified by some responsible individual before you innocently violate them; for remember that by violating these rules, you jeopardize yourself and the fraternity, but more importantly, you betray a sacred trust which we have placed in you.

"Speaking for myself and all the fraternity men at Carolina, I wish you the very best of luck during your rush week and your college career."

Initial rush parties will be held Sunday from 2:30-5:30 Sunday and Monday night from 7-11 p.m.

Books On N.C. Displayed

BOOKS ON N. C.—24 front Mac

Eighty-nine "Outstanding Books about North Carolina" are on display now in the University of North Carolina's Wilson Library, arranged in four large cases on the main floor.

The books were drawn from a list of 100 recommended books about the State compiled by Richard Walser, professor of English at North Carolina State College, and Hugh T. Lefler, professor of history at the University here, and published by the University of North Carolina Press.

This list was prepared primarily for North Carolinians to encourage reading about the State and to act as a guide for the building of a good North Carolina shelf in personal home libraries.

The exhibition is arranged, for the most part, in the categories provided by the book list: History, Biography and Letters, General, Places, Folklore, Fiction and Short Stories, Drama and Poetry. In every instance the exact edition recommended by the compilers for each title has been chosen for the exhibit and each book is described with a label taken from the annotated list.

Gov. Appoints Two Local Men

Governor Luther Hodges has appointed 30 persons as members of the North Carolina Recreation Advisory Committee. This committee meets annually with the North Carolina Recreation Commission, to which it makes reports and recommendations.

Charles Milner of Chapel Hill was appointed as Chairman. Samuel Selden, also of Chapel Hill, was appointed to the committee as dramatics advisor.

The appointees represent many of the varied aspects of recreation interest in North Carolina. The committee also includes members from many of the geographic areas of the state.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Tension Eases At Little Rock

By The Associated Press

Nine Negro students moved smoothly through a second day of integrated classes at Central High School Thursday. They were protected every step of the way by Army paratroopers but tension at the buff brick institution seemed to be easing.

There was no blood-letting and no skirmishes outside the big school, ringed today as it was yesterday with steel-helmeted, bayonet-ready Army regulars. Students coming out of classes reported no disturbances inside.

Gov. Orval Faubus was scheduled to address the nation last night. It was to be his first formal pronouncement since President Eisenhower took away his control of the Arkansas National Guard and put regular Army troops around the beleaguered high school.

The governor's office said many Arkansas legislators have suggested an emergency session to legislate against state financial aid to integrated schools. It was not indicated in advance whether Faubus would touch on this subject in his televised address.

Faubus' only comment on the takeover of Central High by United States troops came yesterday when he spoke of "the naked force being employed by the Federal Government against the people of by state."

At Tallahassee, Fla., Florida's Gov. Leroy Collins wired President Eisenhower that Southern governors who will meet with him next Tuesday would be free to discuss as individual governors any phase of the integration problems.

However, he said that the five-man committee, of which he is a member, was restricted by the Southern Governor's Conference "to seeking the withdrawal of federal troops from Arkansas at the earliest possible moment."

Legislature Minus Quorum

Whitfield, Brown, Ray Resign

PRINGLE PIPKIN

With only twenty representatives present the Student Legislature was short of the quorum by six and so did not meet last night.

Although all members were sent notices of the meeting through the campus mail service, only three fifths of the representatives at the meeting had received any notice.

Nine of the women representatives at the meeting had received any notice.

Nine of the women representatives were detained by sorority rush.

Three representatives have given their resignations to Speaker Don Furtado. They are Student Party members, Frank Brown, Whit Whitfield, and John Ray.

Tom Long will replace Whitfield as the floorleader of the SP. Whitfield moved from his district and had to resign.

In both the University Party and the Student Party more resignations are expected to be submitted as several representatives have changed their residence from their district.

Speaker Furtado charged Al Goldsmith, acting floorleader for the UP, and Long with the responsibility of getting written resignations from the members of their respective parties.

The vacated seats will be filled by the party which was holding the seat when the representative resigns.

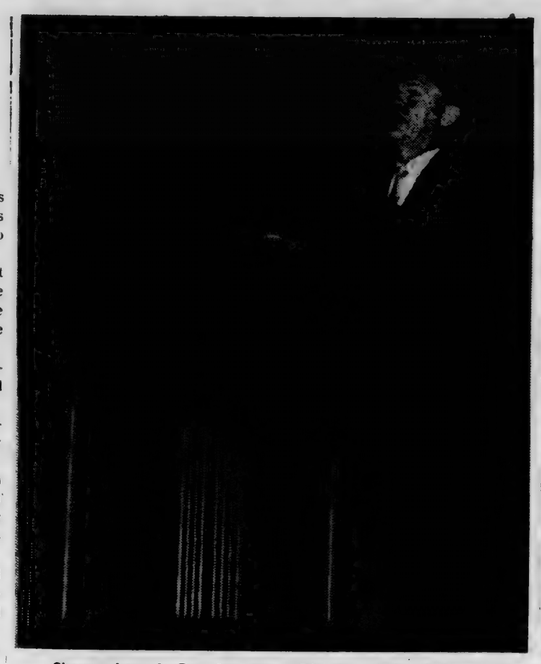
No meeting will be held next week during fraternity rushing .The omission of this meeting is provided for in the by-laws. The next meeting will be Oct. 10.

There were several representatives with bills for introduction, but the nature of the measures was not disclosed at this time.

Members who missed the meeting of May 9 will have to have excuses by the next meeting.

CAR PAINT

The University Club will have a representative at Y Court today from 1-2 p.m. who will be giving away water soluble paint.



The paint is to be collected in small containers by students who wish to paint their cars for tonight's pep rally.

Solar System Is Theme For Show

A program about the well-known elements that make up our solar system opened at the Morehead Planetarium Tuesday night. The title of the program is "Children of the Sun." It will run through Oct. 21.

In both the school and public programs, our sun and its family of planets are colorfully explained as to their origin, characteristics and composition.

The public programs will be presented nightly at 8:30 o'clock and at matinees Saturdays at 11 a.m. and 5 p.m., and Sundays at 3 and 4 p.m.

Overall Enrollment Up; Freshmen Decline 241

By ANN FRYE

Overall enrollment at the University has increased by 67 students over the fall semester of 1956 despite a noticeable decrease of 87 in the freshman class.

In a statistical report issued by the UNC Records Office, 7,038 is listed as the total enrollment in the 14 schools and colleges for the current semester. This is an increase of 67 over last fall's enrollment of 6,971.

Significant in the report is the declining enrollment in General College, which handles the majority of incoming freshmen in the University. (This year 1,090 freshmen are enrolled in the General College, while 149 freshmen are enrolled in the Schools of Dentistry, Nursing and Pharmacy.)

Roy Armstrong, director of admissions, was contacted by the Daily Tar Heel to issue a statement as to why the freshman enrollment at the University has declined.

Armstrong said that while the decrease in the General College cannot be attributed to one or two major factors, it could partially be explained by the increase in the cost of living, increase of interest in technicological training and the eligibility rules.

Concerning the higher cost of living, Armstrong said that a partial failure of tobacco crops in the eastern part of North Carolina might have accounted for the absence of some students who might otherwise be here. The statistical report indicates that of the total enrollment at UNC this semester, 5,444 come from North Carolina.

Armstrong added that the total freshman enrollment is down 87.

The total enrollment, shown to be considerably higher than it has been for the past five years, has not reached the highest enrollment recorded here, which was 7,600 after World War II.

To accommodate an ever increasing enrollment, building projects are underway either in actuality or on paper. Notable among the projects now underway are three new boys dormitories and the addition to Spencer dormitory at a cost of two million dollars.

These are expected to be ready by next September for 652 boys in the three new dorms, and 75 girls in the Spencer addition.

Aycock Hosts New Faculty

One hundred new members of the UNC faculty were guests of Chancellor William B. Aycock last night at a reception in the Morehead Building.

Former Chancellor Robert B. House, present at the reception, spoke on the history of the University.

Chancellor Aycock expects to hold additional meetings of the kind last night to help new faculty members in making their orientation to the University.

Faculty members were accompanied to last night's reception by their deans and department heads.

Refreshments were served in the Morehead dining room.

Officials today announced a new program exempting veterans from physical education if they have valid reasons for not taking the course.

Such veterans could, under application to and subsequent approval of the Dept. of Physical Education, be excused from all physical education courses.

The change—approved by Dean Johnson and the General College Administrative Board — grew out of a petition submitted to General College authorities last spring.

The petition asked that physical education requirements for veterans be placed on a "voluntary" basis, and resulted in following changes in the administration's requirements:

1. Any veteran who feels that he has a valid reason for not taking physical education may submit a request for exemption to the Dept. of Physical Education.

2. Valid reasons will include such things as excessive age and family responsibilities.

3. Every such request will be considered on its own merits.

Commenting on the action taken on the petition, Student Body President Sonny Evans expressed his appreciation for the "clarification and understanding of the veterans' problems" demonstrated by Dean Johnson and the Administrative Board of the General College.

"There are reasons which have been outlined by the Administrative Board which are considered valid," Evans said, "and individuals who qualify should take advantage of the opportunity if they so desire."

Pep Rally Set At 7 Tonight

"Your spirit is the team's spirit" is the motto for the 1957 football season. Head Cheerleader Frank Black reminded Thursday as he announced a big pep rally tonight at Woollen Gym.

The rally will begin at 7 p.m. and will consist of an automobile parade starting at the gym. The caravan will move on to the Chi Phi house, past the Carolina Inn, along Raleigh St. to Raleigh Rd. and return to the gym.

Coach Tatum and his team, cheerleaders and the university band will participate in the rally.

"The team will be there, so let's show them that we are all behind them by being at the pep rally at 7 o'clock, for the student body's spirit at these rallies and at the games affect, to a great extent, the spirit and calibre of ball the team shows on Saturday afternoons," Black said.

Black said that the "first pep rally was good! It showed a re-awakening of the old Carolina spirit. I hope it will continue to grow throughout the season."

YACK PICTURES

Dead Sea Scrolls Will Be Basis For Talk Here

Effects of the Dead Sea Scrolls discovery upon the foundations of Christian faith will be discussed in a public lecture here Sunday night by Princeton Theologian Charles T. Fritsch.

Professor Fritsch will speak at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall on the University of North Carolina campus, under auspices of the Department of Religion. He is among the world's foremost authorities on the scrolls, having published last year a work on this subject, "The Qumran Community, Its History and Scrolls."

A member of the Princeton Theological Seminary faculty for 20 years, Dr. Fritsch teaches Old Testament. He is a member of the American Oriental Society, American Archaeological Society, and Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis.

During 1954 he spent six months in the Holy Land as visiting lecturer at the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem. While there he carried out archaeological work dealing with the Qumran Community.

Cast Chosen For 1st Playmakers Production

By ANTHONY WOLFF

The Carolina Playmaker's 1957-58 season began officially late Tuesday evening when Director Kai Jurgenson announced his selections for the cast of the first Playmaker production, The Lark.

The play, adapted by Lillian Hollman from the French play by Jean Anouilh, began rehearsal last night in preparation for its opening on October 16.

Amanda Meiggs is cast as Joan of Arc, the French maid whose "voices" compelled her to lead France against the English.

Those who attended last spring's "Peer Gynt" saw her perform as Amitra, The Greenclad; Miss Meiggs was reviewed at the time as "thoroughly exciting, . . . exhuberant."

Also from the cast of "Peer Gynt" is Al Gordon, who played the "Button-Moulder" in that play. In "The Lark," he takes the role of Captain La Hire, a French soldier who rises and follows Joan against the English.

Ken Callender, best remembered for his work with Pee Wee Batten in last year's "Sound and Fury," will play Robert de Beaudricourt, the knight from whom Joan secures her first assistance toward her goal.

As Warwick, Peter Sinclair will appear as the cynical Englishman who wishes the burning of Joan as a political expedient.

John Sneden, who appeared as Nero in "Androcles and the Lion" last year, is cast as the Dauphin, Charles the Seventh.

The main ecclesiastic at Joan's trial is the Inquisitor, who will be played by Taylor Williams last appeared in the Petites Dramatiques production of Caligula, in which he was very well received.

Betty Rhodes, a newcomer to Carolina, will play Agnes Sorel, the mistress of the Dauphin; Meagan Stuart will play the little queen and Carolyn March will play the Queen Mother.

Others in the cast include Bob Clymer, as Cauchon; James Potter as Joan's father; Bill Larsen as the Archbishop; Carl Hinrichs as Ladvenu; Jack Jackson as Tremouville; Bob Aldrich as the Executioner; Dan Linney as an English soldier; and Darwin Solomon as Joan's brother.

Halitosis And Non-Greeks: Myths Of Ostracism . . .

The University campus is currently undergoing the madcap of sorority rushing and pre-fraternity rushing.

It is, of course, during this period that all manner of propaganda is disseminated concerning the necessity of Greek affiliation to insure social acceptance among the younger set of University-ites.

May we be iconoclastic for a moment? This is a myth—an icon which should be shattered.

The facts:

(1) An exceedingly large number of prominent student government officials and leaders in all phases of campus life are independent.

(2) Independence may have its definite advantages. Ex. The student body president two years ago was elected, for all practical reasons, because he proudly sported the label:

"Independent of all parties, factions, and sects." This is not to say that the myriad of functions appurtenant to Greek life are not advantageous.

But we would like to impress the fact upon freshmen and transfers that independent campus life does not lead to social ostracism.

There is a valuable communion among fraternity brotherhoods and sorority sisterhoods.

But independent campus life affords its advantages also.

Arrive at your own decision without being afraid that non-Greek affiliation will make you a walking halitosis about which:

"Even your best friends won't tell you."

'Tain't so, McGee!

Opportunity To Serve: Moppet Needs Help . . .

Graham Memorial Student Union has been called the campus ragged moppet.

Assuredly it is inadequate to fill the needs—recreational and extra-curricular—of a 7,000-plus student body.

GMAB is currently waging a campaign to fill various chairmenships—Film Committee, Calendar Committee, Reception Committee and so forth.

It affords enterprising students an excellent opportunity to serve the overall campus community.

Gut-Shaker Of The Year: Enrollment Tailspins . . .

"The very spring and root of honesty and virtue lie in the felicity of lighting on good education." —Plutarch.

And we just won't buy the platitudes handed out by Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong as excuses for the decline.

Director Armstrong attributed the startling decline in freshman enrollment to:

(1) Increased interest in technological studies.

(2) Rise in the cost of living.

(3) Poor crops in North Carolina.

It seems obvious to us that — since freshman enrollment is inundating the campi of other liberal arts institutions—there must be another more subtle reason behind the tail-spinning decline.

This reason, we contend, is over-emphasis on restrictive entrance examinations and requirements.

America, as we know and love it—without waving the bloody American Legion flag of patriotism—has prospered primarily due to the American educational system—education for the many at public expense.

Here at the University, stiffling entrance requirements and examinations were instituted to prevent, we contend, the entrance of Negroes.

Now the noose of restriction has been tightened around the necks of whites as well. And the University's primary force—its student enrollment—is gasping and rasping for breath.

Facilities should be increased to accomodate the rising enrollment.

North Carolina and the nation's youth should not be denied educational opportunity.

Sea Islanders Deplore Feds

From Sea Island in the heart of Talmadgeland comes an announcement by Southern governors that they "deplore" the use of federal troops to handle the Little Rocky fiasco.

We, like many others, deplore having to witness the federal handling of what we feel is states' business.

But we feel, in light of the absolute necessity to prevent sacking of federal laws, Goofer, pardon, Golfer Ike's action was justified.

ODES ON MUSIC:

Is Jazz The Unknown Soldier?

By Grayson Mills

It was bizarre atmosphere, but then you hear Dixieland in unique places these days.

A bunch of boozed big wigs from Occidental Life Insurance were throwing their annual dance, and had chosen the luxurious confines of the Disneyland Hotel in Anaheim, California for their revelry. In addition, the Oxidentals pulled an unprecedented move in the area by hiring the world famous Firehouse Five Plus Two to provide their music. The smoke-eating crew, it was unanimously decided, was doing a great job and, as one guy punned, "Were alarmingly good."

I was in this crowd, sneaking in univited, and playing the role of an aspiring insurance salesman, while attempting to corner the group's highest-class musician, soprano saxist George Probert and interrogate him for opinions on where Dixieland is heading.

Today, Dixie is better than ever. It, like everything else, has felt the pangs of progress and has been fortified by improved modern technique and more thorough knowledge of the oduminous possible chord combinations unknown in the time of Baby Dodd and Bix Beiderbeck. Yet in spite of this, Dixieland goes over wth the public like John Dillinger at Fort Knox, and things are getting worse.

Puffing pensively on his Marlboro, George listened intently as I asked, "Why does Dixie go over like a lead balloon with the masses?" Probert replied, "Poor distribution for one thing," he said, "and not enough disc jockey play for another. Dixieland is the unknown soldier of the music world!"

For this horrendous negligence makes it conceivable that wthin our lifetime, Dixieland could very easily slip gradually away, and all that will remain will be records, great memories and regret that something wasn't done.

I have heard young supporters ridiculed and made subject to hideous laughter, becausee their taste in jazz wasn't "up-to-date." And often the weaker of these non-conformists tragically forsakes his principles to join the pack and root for the music of Antarctica. Those who refuse to be swayed by vogues remain in silence, listening, buying, enjoying their kind of music.

I wastold by Kid Ory, the father of jazz trombone, and still swinging at 70, that a love of Dixie is something that takes years to develop. "Often," he said, "they don't join us 'till they're 25 or 30." He made the point that he, Louie, Turk Murphy, Bob Scobey, and Wilbur Debaris, are still packing them in, and I pointed out that they ought to be since you can count the number of dixie spots on three or four hands, and there are still enough die-hards and curious souls to fill them. Even in New Orleans, Dixie joints are folding like a skeleton.

"Who's On First?"

FROM THE CONNECTICUT DAILY CAMPUS:

Asiatic Influenza Takes Wild-Fire Toll: No Cause For Mass Hysteria

The university's decision to offer free influenza vaccine inoculations to students is an excellent move, particularly considering the rapidly mounting number of Americans coming down with the disease. Just Friday the United Press reported that over 100,000 Americans had contracted the flu. Up to Saturday 15 deaths had been reported from the disease in this country. The University of Colorado admitted that at least 550 students there had "acute respiratory infections."

* * *

England has already been hit hard by the flu, with hundreds of thousands of Britons stricken. Many schools and industries have been forced to close. Mississippi so far has reported over 20,000 cases of the disease.

It is evident that the disease is going to hit the United States very badly, and it is encouraging to see that the University of Connecticut is going to do something before it hits Storrs.

Up until Friday there had been 86 cases of influenza reported in Connecticut. The state Department of Health admits that the disease will hit Connecticut—that it is just a question of when it will hit with full force.

Certainly the university would be an easy target normally. Students come from all over the state, with many from other states and some even from other countries. The students live in dormitories, where they are in constant contact with many other students, and they attend class, where they are near more potential "carriers." The influenza could rapidly reach epidemic proportions at the school, and the infirmary could not begin to take care of the number of students that undoubtedly would come down with the disease.

One shot provides immunization in 70 per cent of the cases, but persons allergic to eggs, or persons with asthma or hay fever will be ineligible. Key personnel will be inoculated when the vaccine arrives, and then students will be treated. The Connecticut Department of Health is supplying the vaccine at cost, according to Dr. Franklin M. Goodchild, the university's Director of Division of Health Service and the University Physician, but when the vaccine will arrive is not known yet. Dr. Goodchild expects the vaccine within the next few days.

* * *

After the excitement over influenza has quieted down, a subject equally worthy of consideration by the infirmary and the administration would be polio shots. For something as valuable as these vaccinations it would be a shame if nothing could be worked out so that Uconn students could be inoculated against this always-threatening disease. Campus service groups said last year that they would be willing to help adminster the shots, and the infirmary's facilities could be used. Can't red tape be cut for something as important as this?

The university will be perform ing a fine service when it inoculates students against the Asian flu. Why not expand this service later to include student's inoculations, at cost, against crippling polio?

NOTE ON US HISTORY

It is a mistake for the US to pretend, as we sometimes do, that we have never aimed at "territorial aggrandizement" or encroached on the property of our neighbors. There are people who do believe this, but anyone who has read our history knows that it is not true, and that our acts of intervention and aggression have invariably provoked bitter protests from Americans who believed in our declared ideal. The fact, of course, is that the US—like any expanding political organism—has taken what was useful to it by such means as came to hand. —Edmund Wilson.

Sundry Remarks Upon A Myriad

INTEGRATION OR VICE VERSA:

Editor:

No one in the South with access to a medium of mass communication has been spared the details of the ugly mess in Little Rock. Once again the Southern States and the Federal Government have met head-on, this time in the most dangerous clash since the War Between the States. States' Rights controversy has ceased to be a contest of oratory and legislation and has become a battle of bayonets, clubs and rifles.

Not only has President Eisenhower set a dangerous precedent by stripping Arkansas of its authority and its militia, he has created a situation in which every state in the South is forced to take action in order to maintain its soverignty and dignity.

Nine Negroes attended classes at Central High School Wednesday. The immediate cost was a bayonet nicked arm and a clubbing. What will be the eventual cost? How many more "Little Rocks" will there be before the South is reduced to a voiceless occupied territory by the bloody iron fist of the Federal Government or another disasterous War Between the States breaks out?

Is there another answer to the problem? Is there a peaceful means by which advocates of integration can be convinced that the greatest majority of Southern people hold no malice for the Negro wish to see him obtain a fair and equal education, but do not desire to mingle with him? Most integrationists seem to hold the opinion that if the Federal Government shows its power in a few places and Negroes are forced into white schools, that whites will accept this and all troubles will end. This is erroneous and no amount of wishing will make it so.

Unless the Federal Government and supporters of immediate integration accept this third alternative, and in the near future, the United States will be split asunder by a calamity greater than any the Communist World could produce.

It is time for the soldiers at Little Rock to return to their camps, the Negro students to return to their former school, and the angry mobs to return to their homes. The attendance of nine Negroes at Central High School is not worth sacrificing a peaceful United States, a United States made strong and kept strong by state and federal cooperation.

Call off your dogs Mr. Eisenhower and the NAACP, before your kennel burns down around you!

MORE VICE VERSA:

Editor:

Integration, what is it? What does it mean?

For some little time now I've heard integration, segregation, rights, Civil Rights, etc. until it's running out of my ears.

I haven't made a detailed study of the situation, nor am I completely sold one way or the other. The main thing I see, and the thing that keeps popping into my mind, is that the very point is being missed by everyone, or at least the people in control of the rules.

Let's see, what is it? Oh, yes, this thing of RIGHTS: I keep hearing that all men are created equal, well maybe so, if this could be proved it might simplify things. Well, back to rights, whose rights? This is what I want to know: it seems to me that while one group is being given so many rights, others are being deprived of them. If everybody is so damn equal, then let everybody have a say. I seem to remember reading about a little incident a few years back concerning a tea party, let's see, Oh! yeah, something about representation.

Where is all this voting power? Why, all at once is a complete people forced to abide by some ruling that most of the people passing the rules don't understand.

I have a small sister and I've noticed that when she is given small amounts of money relative to her increasing age she learns to spend it fairly sensibly, but I'm pretty darn sure if my mother gave her a large amount all at once she would have sugar-diabetes or something worse by the time she is twelve.

I keep hearing some junk about the tolerance and integrated social life in the North, Boy! I've lived in and around Philadelphia a large part of my life and everywhere I've been there is about twice as much prejudice as here in the South. Of course they have learned a lot of tricks to cover up that we don't know, but they've had a hell of a lot more time. Personally I can't see what they are crying so much for anyway, they fought and won a pretty big war for the Negroes, and since they won them, why don't they just take them all and then there wouldn't be any dispute.

Now I seem to be straying from the point. I bet if all the Whites started trying to get into the Colored schools some "History-making Commander-in-Chief" would really have to bring out the National Guard. This tea party I read about seems to have led to some kind of National Guard incident and I think the two situations are quite similar.

Really and truly, I don't believe the people of the South want to hurt or persecute the Colored People, it just takes a little time. Perhaps a little compromising and a little arbitration might help. Also I think some of these "big wheels" might shop and try listening to someone who knows what he is talking about. After all this little deal of rights should work more than one way. There's a little paper I always kind of looked up to and I think some of these rule passers and so called big wheels should take off a little time and read it. It's called "The Constitution of The United States."

World In Brief

May Keep Passports

BALTIMORE (AP)—A top State Department official hinted today that 42 young Americans who violated a ban on travel to Red China may be allowed to keep their passports if they promise not to do it again.

Roderic L. O'Connor, department security and consular affairs chief, said decisions will be made "fairly and expeditiously" on the cases of the travelers, 37 of whom are still in Red China.

The State Department already has decided to pick up passports of all 42 once they reach American territory. Each of them then can appeal to the Department's passport office within 60 days. After that the courts are open to any of them who do not like the decision.

Hoffa Indicted

NEW YORK (AP)—James R. Hoffa, vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, has been indicted on five counts of perjury by a federal rackets grand jury.

The indictment charged that the 44-year-old union leader, a candidate for the presidency of the teamsters to succeed Dave Beck, lied to the grand jury, during its probe into alleged wiretapping of teamster union headquarters in Detroit.

The grand jury also indicted Benjamin Franklin Collins, secretary-treasurer of Local 299, which is headed by Hoffa. It accused him of 12 counts of perjury in connection with the same investigation.

Trial Resumeded

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The jury in the Confidential magazine criminal libel conspiracy case has gone back to work with the condition of its ailing member improved.

Dr. Marcus Crahan reported to Superior Judge Herbert V. Walker that juror Carl Rush was capable of continuing deliberations.

Rush complained yesterday that he was suffering from a cold. The jury's deliberations were interrupted so Rush could be examined by Dr. Crahan, medical director of the sheriff's department.

The jury entered its eighth day of deliberations today.

Originally there were three jury alternates but there is only one left. Two previously replaced regular jurors who became ill during the six-week trial.

STUDENT ENTERTAINMENT COMMITTEE

The Student Entertainment Committee will meet in the Woodhouse Conference Room from 5-6 p.m.

The N. C. State Fair Arena will seat up to 10,000 people, each with an unobstructed view.

Winner Named Of $800 Grant

An $800 creative writing scholarship has been awarded to Harry Durham, UNC graduate student in the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

Earl Wynn, department chairman, announced the selection of Durham, an Alabama native and Auburn graduate, who entered UNC in February, 1957. The scholarship period is September, 1957, through August, 1958.

A grant of $2,500 was provided in the spring of 1956 by Screen Gems, Inc. to encourage creative talent and to get student-written scripts usable on network television.

"Until this year we have not felt that we had anyone qualified to receive one of these scholarships," Wynn said. The first recipient, Durham, is working toward an M. A. degree in Communications to prepare hm for a career in the production of moton pictures for TV use, and in motion picture writing.

A native of Fort Payne, Ala., Durham received his B. A. degree in English from Alabama Polytechnic Institute in 1954. He gained his first experience with films and TV while serving in the U.S. Army Signal Corps in Germany. For two years he directed production of newsreels and film for Army TV use.

GMAB Group Forming

The tournament committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board is currently in the process of organizing for the present school year, Benny Thomas, president of GMAB, announced yesterday.

Chairman of the committee is Betty York Reece, a senior from Lincolnton and a history major. This is a new committee organized to sponsor various tournaments throughout the year with a competitive spirit in mind.

Some of the tentative tournaments on the agenda include ping pong, billiards, bridge, chess, checkers and horseshoes. The tournament committee is one of fourteen committees of the Graham Memorial Activities Board, the programming phase of our student union, Graham Memorial.

"Miss Reece has some grand plans for the tournament committee and is in need of some very interested students to work with her," Thomas said.

Any student from a freshman to a senior, both men and women, may apply for this committee. Applications are available at the Graham Memorial information desk.

Interested students should come by GM and fill out an application before Monday if possible.

Dr. Boyd: He Holds His Class 'Spellbound'

By CHERRY PARKER

One hour spent in any of Dr. Bernard Boyd's religion classes, and it's easy to see why Bible study has caught on with students on the University of North Carolina campus.

Dr. Boyd strides into the classroom just as the bell sounds. He starts lecturing immediately, and though he never consults a note, his words flow—smooth and rich as Jersey cream. Even remote Bible characters take on meaning and life as Dr. Boyd plucks them out of books like Job or Ruth and sets them down in 20th century settings.

Dr. Boyd speaks of the "Robin Hood" career of David, which trained David to live as a leader for the future. He calls the story of David a parable of human nature. Labels Solomon "the harem-jaded king."

Of Absalom, Dr. Boyd says, "Absalom declared to himself, 'I think I'll take over. Daddy is falling to pieces.' Absalom engaged in a whispering campaign against his Dad. He got in the headlines—he even rode to the post office in a chariot. And Absalom had a way with people comparable to FDR's. FDR could feed the king and queen wieners in the backyard and get away with it—or share a cheeseburger with a deckhand equally well. So could Absalom.

"When God told Jonah to go to Ninevah," Dr. Boyd says, "Jonah was afraid God might save a Ninevite, and then Heaven wouldn't be any fun. So instead, Jonah heads due West—he takes a Mediterranean cruise from Joppa—there was a terrible storm." Dr. Boyd pauses. "Can't you just see Jonah—A prophet doing the breast stroke in the Mediterranean?"

One student states, "Before Boyd, I associated the Bible with Sunday School and Noah and the Ark. Dr. Boyd has pieced the threads of the Bible together for me, and interpreted it into a meaningful plot."

Many notables have sat in on his classroom lectures. Both Ex-Chancellor Robert B. House (famous in his own right for his Sunday School teaching) and Mrs. House have attended them, as has Kay Kyser. Kay Kyser says, "Dr. Boyd is one of the finest communicators I've ever known. Not many can talk for fifty minutes at a time, day-in and day-out, and really be saying something."

Dr. Boyd's reputation has spread as the man to call upon for the Bible hour when big religious conventions are being planned. He just spent a week lecturing at Princeton, and is slated to speak, along with Billy Graham and President Eisenhower, at the Presbyterian Men's Convention to be held in October in Miami, Fla.

In light of the department chairman's increased responsibility and of the increased interest and enrollment in religion classes at Chapel Hill, it is pertinent to consider the activities of the entire department during the decade of its existence.

The department was set up 10 years ago with one instructor paid from state funds. The department got under way in temporary quarters loaned to it by the Department of Political Science in Caldwell Hall.

What is the picture today? Today, there is no doubt that the department's work has caught on fire with students on the campus, or that it is a respected and admired "institution" by people of North Carolina.

Yet the department still has needs, the first of which is a home of its own. "Right on the campus," says Dr. Boyd, "where it can be in the middle of things." Currently, the department is still in temporary quarters at Gardner Hall, and because of limitations of space, many students who want to take the courses must be excluded. Today, there is still only one instructor who is on state funds, and department members would like to offer a graduate program.

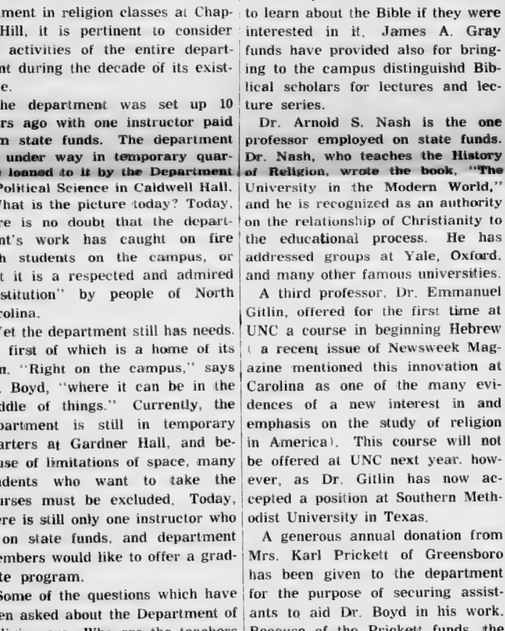
Some of the questions which have been asked about the Department of Religion are: Who are the teachers now in the department? How are they financed? How do they cooperate with other departments at the University? And, do they teach ministerial students?

Dr. Boyd himself came to the department in 1950 as the James A. Gray Professor of Biblical Literature. James A. Gray, a former Chairman of the Board of R. J. Reynolds Company, established the "chair" because he had had several sons at UNC, and he wanted to make it possible for UNC students to learn about the Bible if they were interested in it. James A. Gray funds have provided also for bringing to the campus distinguishd Biblical scholars for lectures and lecture series.

Dr. Arnold S. Nash is the one professor employed on state funds. Dr. Nash, who teaches the History of Religion, wrote the book, "The University in the Modern World," and he is recognized as an authority on the relationship of Christianity to the educational process. He has addressed groups at Yale, Oxford, and many other famous universities.

A third professor, Dr. Emmanuel Gitlin, offered for the first time at UNC a course in beginning Hebrew (a recent issue of Newsweek Magazine mentioned this innovation at Carolina as one of the many evidences of a new interest in and emphasis on the study of religion in America). This course will not be offered at UNC next year, however, as Dr. Gitlin has now accepted a position at Southern Methodist University in Texas.

A generous annual donation from Mrs. Karl Prickett of Greensboro has been given to the department for the purpose of securing assistants to aid Dr. Boyd in his work. Because of the Prickett funds, the department will be able to have Marvin Berry of Asheville as an instructor, and Joe Walser of High Point as a full-time assistant in 1957-58.



The UNC department is unique in that it is the only department of religion in a State University that is truly integrated into the University curriculum. Theoretically, it occupies the same status as 'English' or any other department within the College of Arts and Sciences, and instruction is non-sectarian. Recently a Moslem has been taking the course in New Testament. "We use," Dr. Boyd says, "the Revised Standard version of the Bible because it is the most readable and the most accurate. It came out of the finest Biblical scholarship."

Although preachers are not trained at Carolina, a religion major is offered. Many majors are pre-ministerial students. "Many boys," Dr. Boyd says, "come here with no idea of becoming ministers, but decide here."

The Department of Religion works closely with other departments on the campus. Dr. J. P. Harland's course in Biblical Archaeology is cross-listed with the religion courses. Dr. P. H. Epp's Greek New Testament (Classics), Dr. A. C. Howell's Literary Aspects of the Bible (English), and Dr. W. H. Poteat's Philosophy of Religion are all courses recommended to the religion major.

The Department of Religion has made an impact on the state of North Carolina in an extension way also. The correspondence course, Origin and Significance of the Bible, is offered. Dr. Boyd speaks all over the state. His Sunday night TV program (WUNC-TV) has attracted wide attention, and his recent credit course on television was taken by more than 300 persons for non-credit, while other thousands listened to it. "This turn to the Bible is the most heartening development of the post-war era," Dr. Boyd says.

CAROLINA CARAVAN

First Game Since 1915; Fetzer To Get Award

By JAKE WADE

When Clemson meets Carolina in Kenan Stadium here Saturday, it will be the first football game between the two schools since 1915. . . . The contest was played at Greenville, S. C., and the Tar Heels won by 9-7 . . . "Doggie" Trenchard of Princeton was Carolina coach then and Dave Tayloe, later to become a distinguished physician, was captain.

The two teams had met four times previously, with the first game played in 1897 with 200 in attendance . . . Carolina won by 28-0 . . . In 1901 Clemson beat Carolina at Charlotte, 22-10, before 1,000 . . . In 1903 it was a Carolina triumph at Chapel Hill . . . And then, in 1907, Clemson won by 15-6 before a whopping crowd of 5,000 at Columbia.

Examining the archives about these ancient games, one always finds some interesting information, dear to the hearts of those still with us who happened to be there. . . . No records have been located here of Carolina's 24-0 victory over Vanderbilt, but recently some details came to light . . . Judge W. A. Devin of Oxford, a retired Chief Justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court, played for Carolina in that game and ran 95 yards from the T formation for a touchdown. . . . Judge Devin tells intimates he was able to do it only because of "beautiful interference."

BULLETIN BOARD!—Holders of those coveted tickets to the Queen's game between Maryland and Carolina at College Park on Oct. 19 should get the kickoff time straight. . . . This has been changed to fit into Her Majesty's (hope that's correct) schedule . . . The kickoff now is slated for 2:15 p.m., Maryland time, which is 1:15 p.m., North Carolina or Eastern Standard time. . . . Maryland will still be on Daylight.

One Tar Heel player who may have been missed by the Tar Heels against N. C. State was sophomore quarterback Nelson Lowe . . . Lowe, who is a splendid passer, did not dress that day because of an injury . . . The Tar Heels could have used sharper passing . . . Some observers are convinced that one reason passing was not better was because of the muggy weather, making the ball hard to handle.

THIS AND THAT!—With veteran announcer Dick Jamerson taking it easy these days on account of a heart attack earlier in the year (although he is well and back on the job in the classroom), two newcomers are handling the P.A. at Carolina's football games . . . The silver voices, inaugurated last week, belong to Joe Murnick of Charlotte, one time boxing star and coach here, and Pat Earey, the new Tar Heel swimming coach . . . Both have had previous experience.

Soccer coach Marvin Allen and cross country coach Dale Ranson are working out their men daily for the fall campaign . . . Tar Heel athletes on training table soon will have a brand new private room in which to eat . . . It's being added to the Monogram Club, the University's popular dining room which is taking care of the athletes now in the main area.

CLEMSON GAME!—Clemson is sending a large following of alumni and patrons to its game here Saturday with the Tar Heels and Joe Sherman, head of Clemson's public relations, has arranged picnic grounds . . . Both Clemson and North Carolina will have a Goff in Saturday's game, the former a quarterback and the latter a halfback . . . Four Smiths are on Carolina's squad this year, two of them ends . . . Halfback Wade turned in a fine performance last week.

Governor Adlai Stevenson of Illinois will be a guest at the game, and also a ceremonial feature will be the presentation of the first "Service to Sports" award from the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association to Robert A. (Coach Bob) Fetzer, long time beloved athletic director at the University, who retired several years ago to become executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation.

. . . . Fetzer . . . .

BIG RUGGED TACKLES

Carolina tackles Stu Pell (left) and Leo Russavage will be ready to try to "hold that Tiger" Saturday afternoon in Kenan Stadium. Both boys are veterans and should see a lot of action as the Tar Heels meet Clemson in their second straight conference game.

Tar Heel Gridders Looking Forward To Clemson Game

If you think last Saturday's loss to N. C. State was a disparaging blow to the morale of the Carolina Tar Heels, you're wrong.

Likewise, if you think the Tar Heel players are nursing deflated egos this week, you're also wrong.

On the contrary, the Tar Heel players are looking to this Saturday's Clemson Tiger game with keen anticipation—eager to break into the win column.

Coach Jim Tatum has repeatedly emphasized to his team the importance of not making mistakes. In fact, he has stated simply, "Football is a game of mistakes. The team making the fewest is the winner every time." That was the case last Saturday against State. In a game of frequent and obvious goofs by both teams, State reigned supreme.

The Tar Heels didn't live up to their potential last week and that's all the more reason why they're pointing to the Clemson game. It's a challenge, but even more than that, it serves as a kind of proving ground. The 100 yards of Kenan Stadium soil will be used again this week to show all the skeptics among the Tar Heel rooters that the 1957 grid machine is not another flash-in-the-pan.

The Tar Heels have not played the Clemson Tigers since 1915 and, furthermore, there have been only five games played in a series that started in 1896. UNC holds a 3-2 margin thus far.

The Tar Heels are expected to be ruled at least two touchdown underdogs this week based on last Saturday's results. Clemson's 66-0 frolic over outclassed Presbyterian showed only one thing—Coach Frank Howard has not been loafing this fall in pre-season drills.

According to the UNC scout report, prepared by Coaches Emmett Cheek and Fred Tullai, the Tigers have a strong and experienced line this year with only one sophomore starter. The backfield, for the most part, is inexperienced, but is loaded with talent.

Harvey White, a 6-2, 200-pound former All-South Carolina player out of Greenwood, is the starting quarterback and despite his bulk, is considered very swift. A good passer, White, as a sophomore, appears to be a real comer for Coach Howard. He is backed up by some more bulk in Bill Barbary, a 6-3, 220-pounder, while Johnny Mac Goff, a slender passing wizard, is also a brilliant sophomore quarterback prospect.

The Tar Heels will depend on the same personnel, of course, that fell before State, but adjustments are being made this week and they are hopeful they have learned a few lessons. Practice has been hard in ironing out the kinks. Players, themselves, express confidence that they will be ready for the strong Orange Bowl team.

By ERWIN FULLER

Coach Bud Carson is happy.

The sincere, hard-working freshman mentor has just reason to be pleased; for under his supervision, he has about 70 of the finest football prospects in the nation. The former UNC tailback (during the Snaveley era) is pleased to note that of his candidates, more than half are native Tar Heels.

Carson feels that his group is making "satisfactory progress" in their preparation for the season's first contest with Maryland's Baby Terps on October 4 in College Park, Md. "Of course", he continued, "it's a tremendous jump from high school and prep school football to our system here at UNC, and we can't expect our boys to make the change overnight."

The Maryland game, Carson feels, will be the toughest affair of the five-game slate for his squad. Carson describes the Maryland unit as a "very good freshman team, supposedly one of the top groups in the country. Its recruiting staff did an excellent job, especially in the Pennsylvania region, and from what we can hear, they've landed some very promising boys." Last year the Tar Babies handed the College Park Frosh eleven a 21-7 thrashing.

Carson, however, is far from quaking at the thought of meeting the Maryland group and those opponents who will follow. "After all, our fellows did a very fine recruiting job too. We've got some boys who should be a big help to the varsity with a little experience." Carson is particularly pleased with the group of backfield and end prospects, though he feels he has good material to draw from in filling each position. "We have a terrific crop of halfbacks, particularly, and for every backfield slot, we are three or four deep, with almost no difference in playing ability.

Carson is reluctant to single out any of his performers for special praise, but he does note that several boys have impressed him and his coaching staff very much. Among them is a Durham lad, Russ Hollers, at present Carson's top QB. Termed "a real good boy", this converted fullback has looked very sharp in recent practices. At fullback Francis Riggs, 6-1, 200 pounds of potential dynamite whom Carson terms "one of the most improved players on the squad", has looked very good, as have halfbacks Beck, Welch, and Folckomer. Tackles Joe Kulpa and Bill Crabtree, guard Jim Shumate, a converted tackle, and center Larry Robers are among those who shone in the rugged line.

After the Maryland encounter, the Tar Babies face N.C. State, Wake Forest, and Virginia, in that order. They close the season with the Thanksgiving Thursday afternoon battle with Duke's Blue Imps in Kenan Stadium.

Coach Carson has announced that a full scrimmage this afternoon on Navy Field will end heavy contact work for the Maryland game. The scrimmage session will be open to the student body.

UNC Officials Named To Attend Meetings

Two UNC officials and an officer of the Consolidated University will attend meetings this month in North Carolina and Georgia.

Vice president W. H. Whyburn and Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, will attend the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities in Athens, Ga., Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

N. C. State Prepares For Terps

RALEIGH, Sept. 27 — (AP) — There was no contact work today as North Carolina State College reviewed all phases of offensive and defensive play in preparation for Saturday's game with Maryland.

Coach Earle Edwards and his assistants placed much emphasis on punting with backs Dick Hunter, Ken Trowbridge and Dick Christy doing the booting.

The team will leave Raleigh by train tomorrow morning and is due to arrive in Washington tomorrow afternoon.

Lennie Rosenbluth Inks Contract With Warriors

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 26—(AP)—Lennie Rosenbluth, All-America basketball forward at the University of North Carolina last season, signed a contract today with the Philadelphia Warriors of the National Basketball Assn.

Rosenbluth, who led the Tar Heels to a 32-0 record and the NCAA basketball championship, scored 2,045 points during his three-year varsity career.

The 6-5, 185-pounder was the Warrior's first choice in the NBA draft last spring.

Sooners Take Week Off; Four Big Games On Tap

The Associated Press

Since Oklahoma won't be monopolizing football attention this week end, fans can turn their attention to three or four games which may have far-reaching effects. Or they can loll in front of their TV sets and watch Stanford and Northwestern in a contest which likely will be interesting but inconclusive.

The big ones, from a national viewpoint, at this early stage of the season are Auburn at Tennessee, Southern Methodist at Georgia Tech, Houston at Baylor and Washington at Minnesota. On a slightly lesser scale there's Virgina Tech at West Vrginia — a game that could decide the Southern Conference championship almost before the race starts.

Top-rated Oklahoma, after rushing the season wth an impressive 26-0 victory over Pittsburgh, takes a week off. But Saturday marks the opening of the season for the Big Ten teams, including a couple of contenders for Oklahoma's No. 1 spot; the Ivy League and a couple of other biggies like Notre Dame and Tennessee.

Northwestern, which could head the second division in the Big Ten, sends tiny but tough Bob McKeiver against Stanford, which lists 5-10, 178-pound Jack Douglas as a "little" quarterback. This is the week's national television game and the lads who figure point spreads rate it as a "pick 'em" affair.

Tigers Picked Over Carolina On 'Dad's Day'

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels, smarting from a 7-0 beating last week and holding an unenvious 11-game losing skein, will be out to wring the tail of the Clemson Tiger at 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium today. A crowd of about 25,000 is expected.

If the aforementioned ' is not enough to permeate desire among Jim Tatum's gridiron clan, the fact that today is Dad's Day should. Many of the Tar Heels will be performing before their fathers and its a cinch they'd like nothing better than to show their pops a few tricks with a football.

The big question this afternoon is, will Carolina be able to unload the offensive punch it lacked so badly one week ago against North Carolina State? Tatum will once again use his "first 22" most frequently in an attempt to halt a losing streak that to him must seem astronomical.

Clemson, the defending Atlantic Coast Conference champs, and a favorite today, will bring a highly regarded assemblage of power youth and experience into beautiful Kenan Stadium to renew a rivalry which resumes after 42 years. The wo clubs haven't met since 1915.

There's a good chance that Frank Howard will start an all-sophomore backfield against the Tar Heels. Last week in Clemson's 66-0 rout of Presbyterian, sophomores did the brunt of the scoring and Carolina can count on seeing a lot of sophomores on the other side of the line today.

Top man among the Clemson second year men is a 200 pound 6-2 quarterback named Harvey White. White is being tabbed "great" in some quarters for his fine all-round handling of the club. Behind White is another capable sophomore named Bill Barbary.

Tatum, as mentioned before, will count heavily on his top 22 men. Quarterback Dave Reed will probably get the starting nod from the Tar Heel coach but look for Curt Hathaway and Jack Cummings to see some action.

Jim Schuler and Daley Goff will probably start at the halfback slots but reserves like Wade Smith, Emil DeGantis, Jim Varnum, Ron Marquette and Don Coker could hold the key to the Tar Heel's fortunes.

Tatum will probably go with Bob Shupin at fullback but Giles

UNC Gets $41,000, No Strings

A sum of $41,000 has been allocated by alumni of the University to be used for special and unrestricted purposes for faculty and students at Chapel Hill this school year. The funds will be used to supplement state appropriations or to fill gaps not covered by tax dollars.

James W. Poole of Greensboro, Chairman of the Alumni Annual Giving program, presided over a meeting here of a Council which earmarked the several funds and the uses they will serve in the University.

Chief benefits will go for faculty research, graduate fellowships, for faculty travel to professional meetings, for a Chancellor's emergency fund, and like purposes.

Since the Alumni Annual Giving program began four years ago, a total of $132,429 has been turned over to the University by the alumni for unrestricted purposes, approved by an alumni and faculty committee. The amount given has grown each year; the total raised in 1956-57 was $64,045.22, Mr. Bost said.

Student Bound To High Court

Harry Grasser, UNC freshman from Southern Pines, Wednesday was bound over to Orange County Superior Court on charge of first degree burglary after an alleged break-in at the home of a Chapel Hill woman and her daughter.

Grasser entered a plea of not guilty to the charge. He was placed under $1,300 bond by Judge William S. Stewart of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

The charge will be taken before the grand jury for an indictment at the December criminal term of Orange County Superior Court.

The defendant was charged in a warrant sworn out by Patrolman Charles Lee Byrd with feloniously breaking into the apartment of Mrs. Jean Smith here last Staurday night "with intent to commit a felony therein while he said Mrs. Smith and her daughter were sleeping."

Mrs. Smith told the court that she was asleep in her bed on Saturday night when she was awakened by a noise in the kitchen, which she thought at first to be a mouse. She said she then saw a shadow in her high school-age daughter's room and thought she might be up. She stated that she then raised up in bed and called to her daughter but got no response.

Bonds Offered For Jobs Here

The Consolidated University of North Carolina office yesterday announced that in today's edition of the Raleigh News and Observer appears an advertisement for the sale of $2,000,000 revenue bonds to pay for the construction of three new boys' dormitories and an addition to Spencer women's dormitory here.

The advertisement also includes a notice of the sale of $2,000,000 revenue bonds to finance the construction of a dormitory at State College.

Bids will be received in the Consolidated University office until 11 a.m., October 5, at which time the Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees will meet in the Morehead Building for the purpose of opening bids and awarding contracts.

Security for the revenue bonds will come from rental fees after the dormitories are occupied. The bonds were approved earlier by the State Advisory Budget Commission.

World Affairs Plans Mapped

Last week a planning committee, called by Charles F. Milner, acting director of the UNC Extension Division, mapped the plans for the eighth annual Conference on World Affairs. The Conference will be held next February on the UNC campus.

The committee meeting was attended by representatives of the more than 20 statewide groups which compose the N. C. Council of Women's Organizations. Mrs. E. P. Gibson, chairman of the planning committee, presided at the Chapel Hill gathering, at which a theme was chosen and committees were named.

The main topic for the 1958 conference will be "Mutual Understanding as a Necessity for the Nations in a Nuclear Age." A complete program will be released next month, officials said.

The conference is set for February 13, 1958, and will be open to the public as well as to members of the participating organizations.

Sporty Stevenson Prepares For Talk

DTH EDITOR NEIL BASS

It is 5:07 EST.

Stevenson and aides are introduced to:

University Chancellor William Aycock, Board of Higher Education Chairman Dallas Herring, Summer School Dean Guy Phillips, assistant director of Development Roy Holsten, assistant director of Stores and Purchasing Everett Wilkinson, student body President Sonny Evans, Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass.

The '56 Democratic presidential choice then was escorted to a black University sedan and seated in the back seat between Chancellor Aycock and President Friday.

The three-car procession, bearing Stevenson and aides, University officials and student leaders then wound into Chapel Hill to the Carolina Inn under patrol escort.

Stevenson was whisked into the Inn, less than a half hour after his arrival. He smiled familiarly at several lawyers standing in the Inn lobby. He chatted momentarily with a Southern Pines attorney, attending—along with other lawyers—an institute on the state's Business Corporation Act.

After posing for Daily Tar Heel Photographer Buddy Spoon Jr., Stevenson was escorted to his upstairs quarters by President Friday and Chancellor Aycock.

Stevenson will deliver an address in Memorial Hall this morning at 10:30.

At 11:45, he will be interviewed at a Gerrard Hall press conference. Directly following, he will eat lunch at a Morehead Planetarium luncheon. He will attend the Carolina-Clemson game and will spend the night as a household guest of Gov. Luther Hodges in the Raleigh executive mansion.

Gov. Hodges did not greet Stevenson upon arrival. But he is expected to join his itinerary this morning. Hodges just returned from Sea Island, Ga., where he attended the Southern Governors' Conference.

His trip here is under the auspices of the North Carolina Council for Better Education. Stevenson is currently serving as chairman of the advisory board of Encyclopedia Britannica Films, Inc.

Stevenson has expressed his growing concern over the deficiencies in the American educational system. His trip is reportedly to further the cause of education in North Carolina and the South.

World In Brief

Gov. Hodges Denounces "Strong-Arm Tactics"

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina has denounced as "strong-armed tactics" a Defense Department order for a "riot alert" for Army forces in the South.

Hodges, who will head a group of Southern chief executives conferring with President Eisenhower next Tuesday, said he hoped the order "is not indicative of the attitude and conditions" the committee will face in Washington.

The governor's bristling statement, released by his office late yesterday afternoon, referred to an order cancelled yesterday by Army Secretary Bruckner.

However, Hodges said, "I want the people of North Carolina and the South and of the entire nation to know that as far as I am concerned, I will go to Washington to seek removal of federal troops from Little Rock, Arkansas. This is a mission on which we are being sent by authority and vote of the Southern Governors' Conference."

"As governor of North Carolina, a sovereign state, I denounce such strong-armed tactics. These tactics are unnecessary, undemocratic and unworthy of America," Hodges asserted.

His statement, counched in some of the strongest language he has used to date on the federal versus state issue, echoed reaction of other Southern spokesmen to the Army order.

Little Rock Quiet

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Central High School settled into a familiar autumn scholastic routine yesterday as nine Negro students put in a third full day in integrated classrooms.

White hostility to the city's first integration program was not erased, it was more relaxed, and the campus and classrooms were the calmest they have been all week.

The nine students were escorted into the big, handsome school through the usual mass of white students who gathered on the wide entrance before classes. There was laughter and shrill shrieks but no audible taunts or remarks.

Calls For Impeachment

DAWSON, Ga. (AP)—Sen. Herman Talmadge (D-Ga) spoke of President Eisenhower yesterday as the "conqueror of Little Rock" and told a local audience he wished he could cast a vote for "impeachment right now."

"It is tragic that one of America's greatest military heroes

Student Party Drops Meeting

The Student Party will not meet as originally announced this Monday evening.

Party Chairman Whit Whitfield said fraternity rushing which begins Sunday has delayed the first meeting until September 30.

"There will, however, definitely be a meeting at 7:30 p.m. on that day," Whitfield said.

Keynote speaker for the SP's initial meeting of the current year will be introduced by Student Body President Sonny Evans, who will also make remarks.

Whitfield said announcement of vacancies in the dormtiory districts of the Student Legislature will be made at the meeting.

He urged all old party members, as well as new ones, to be present. An invitation was extended to all persons interested in campus politics.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Miss Dorothy Pittman, Miss Elizabeth Bullard, Miss Elizabeth Howell, Malcolm McLean, William Lytle, York Larese, John McAllister, William Corbet, Stewart Golann, David Corey, William Savage, Samuel Gaillard, Sydney Bradfield, Henry Simpson, John Brooks, Frank Crowther, Jessie Casten, Bill Jones, Jerome Brown, Randolf Morrissett, James Gardner, Samuel Hollingsworth, Thomas Vost, Alvin Seerest.

Students Will Get Flu Shots

Asiatic flu vaccine free for all students at UNC has been on order since summer, according to a statement from Dr. Edward Hedgpeth, University physician.

Dr. Hedgpeth said that the vaccine has not arrived at the Infirmary nor does he know when it will be available.

So far the Infirmary has not had a single case of Asiatic flu reported. Reports from several states and schools in the United States indicate that Asiatic flu cases have reached epidemic proportions.

Dr. Hedgpeth said he will issue a statement when the flu vaccine arrives as to the times and days the vaccine will be available.

He said that the Infirmary hopes to get 5,000 to 6,000 doses of the vaccine.

Russell Calls For Army Plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Russell (D-Ga), as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, called today for the text of the now-revoked Army plan to step up riot training of troops stationed in the South.

"I want to find out if the Army has formulated plans for the occupation of the entire South," Russell said in an interview.

The Senator, leader of the southern bloc in the Senate, said he has asked Secretary of the Army Brucker for a copy of the order, which Brucker said he revoked last night as soon as he heard of its existence.

Russell said he has asked, too, for copies of all Defense Department orders relating to the use of troops in the Little Rock integration trouble, or any similar use of troops that may be contemplated.

"Certainly they ought to have a little more notice than they got in Little Rock," Russell said. He observed that Eisenhower ordered troops there one day after issuing a proclamation urging citizens not to interfere with integration at Central High School.

Applications For Rhodes Scholarships Now Available

The opportunity to study at the University of Oxford, England, is now available to male students through the Rhodes Scholarships. Elections to the scholarships will be held in all states in December, 1957.

To be eligible a candidate must be a male citizen of the United States for at least five years and be unmarried; be between the ages of nineteen and twenty-five on October 1, 1958; by the time of application have at least junior standing at some recognized degree-granting college or university in the U.S.A.; receive official endorsement of his college or university.

A candidate who would otherwise be over the age limit but who has had at least 90 days of active service in the armed forces of the U.S.A. since June 27, 1950, may deduct the period of his actual age if by so doing he will qualify under the regulations.

Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson is the chairman of the faculty committee to select nominees from this university. Interested students may contact Dr. S. Shepard Jones, 102 A in Caldwell Hall or Professor Corydon Spruill in Hanes 206.

A candidate may apply either in the state in which he resides or in the state in which he may have received at least two years of his college education.

Applications must be in the hands of the secretary of the state committee not later than November 6, 1957.

Selection of candidates is based on the qualities laid down by Cecil Rhodes in that section of the will in which he defined the type of scholar he desired.

Those qualities include: literary and scholastic ability and attainments; qualities of manhood, truthfulness, courage, devotion to duty, symptahy, kindliness, unselfishness and fellowship; exhibition of moral force of character and of instincts to lead and to take an interest in his fellows; physical vigor, as shown by fondness for and success in sports.

The most important requirement for a Rhodes Scholarship is some definite quality of distinction, whether in intellect or character. The Rhodes Scholar should not be a one-sided man.

Thirty-two scholarships are assigned annually to the United States, which are grouped into eight districts of six states each for the purpose of making these appointments.

There is competition every year in each state where a committee of selection may nominate two candidates to appear before the district committee. Each district committee then selects from the twelve candidates so nominated not more than four men who will represent their states as Rhodes Scholars at Oxford.

A candidate should send his application to the secretary of the committee of selection for the state in which he wishes to compete as early as possible in October, and in any case not later than November 6.

Scholars-elect will enter the University of Oxford in October 1958.

A candidate must in the first instance obtain a written indorsement from his college or university to the effect that he is a suitable applicant for a Rhodes Scholarship.

Each candidate who has been selected by his college or university should then make application to the secretary of the committee of selection of the state committee of wishes to compete, using an application form.

DR. BOYD TO SPEAK

Dr. Bernard Boyd, Chairman of the Dept. of Religion, will speak during the program at Westminster Fellowship this Sunday, Sept. 29, on the topic: "Should a Christian Doubt." All students are cordially invited to attend. The program begins with supper in the side yard of the Presbyterian Church at 6 p.m.

Tragic, Vacant Chairs & The Nauseating Odor Of Irresponsibility

There is something extraordinarily tragic about a vacant chair.

And it is all the more tragic when the chairs are supposed to be filled by representatives of the student body — supposedly representing and fighting for the rights of their constituents.

The current twenty-third legislative assembly was branded "gutless" by one of its own members last spring when it failed to speak out concerning the exclusion of a University student from Umstead Park due to his race.

This semester, we had hoped student lawmakers would demonstrate a little more responsibility and obliterate the ignominious label and stigma which was attached last year.

Yet the legislature has begun this assembly with the faintly unpleasant odor of irresponsibility floating about the legislature hall.

Thursday night's session — or non-session — was cancelled due to a strikingly tragic two-fifths attendance — twenty legislators out of a total fifty were present.

Lawmakers blamed the distressingly nauseating lack of attendance on the lack of pre-session notification — a miserably platitudinous excuse.

If legislators are anything more than Thursday night-nodders, if they properly investigate the needs of their constituents and prepare bills and resolutions as they should, if they expressed enough interest in legislative gatherings to make a simple phone call to determine if the assembly was meeting, they will attend meetings and actively participate without having to be notified.

The student legislature is charged with the responsibility of appropriating an approximate $115,000 budget — a budget which is ever-increasing. Resolutions passed by this body can have state and even national repercussions.

Thus there are limitless opportunities for enterprising student legislators to accomplish tremendous actions—actions which will benefit the entire campus community.

It would be a nauseating thing to witness an entire legislative assembly pass, stigmatized by the label:

"Gutless."

Diaper-Tainted Cuts Rule: No Change In Sight . . .

It has oft been said (Thus it's trite) that:

'Misery loves comfort.'

But we could hardly wish the kind of maternal brand of class attendance regulations which we must endure on any of our sister institutions of higher learning.

Yet Louisana State University seems to be plagued by the same kind of monistic diaper-tainted class cuts rule propounded here by the School of Journalism and other departments. And it is some brand of consolation.

Student government negotiated long and hard with the Faculty Committee on Class Attendance to break the old 'three-cuts and then pack your rags' barrier. The barrier was broken. And student suggestions about "unlimited if acceptable average is maintained" cuts were seemingly incorporated.

But schools like the maternalistic School of Journalism took a student-made suggestion about discretion, remade it to read: "Our discretion dictates only three cuts," and shoved it down the students' throats.

The widely publicized, long anticipated new cut system is in force this semester, but is it really a new system?

Under the old regime a student could accumulate three unexcused absences in each course after which he was placed on "cut probation." He had three smackeroos in the bank, so to speak, upon which he could draw, without interest, three cuts.

Now it is different, we are told.

Instead of knowing where he stands, the student is now in doubt. There is no longer the comfortable feeling that he has three cuts coming in each course. All that has changed.

Now the student is faced with the dilemma of dealing with each instructor individually. In some cases this may require a lot of patient research on the student's part. In the case of other instructors, the information may be forthrightly given.

The desision as to how many cuts, if any, permitted each student will be decided, in individual cases, by each instructor. Some instructors put their cards on the table early.

Some have specific instructions, others are more vague, still others barely mention the subject.

Adlai's Belt Has Slipped

Observers at Raleigh-Durham Airport yesterday were treated to a protocol at its best.

Consolidated University President Bill Friday was field general for the show and handled the laborious task of introductions and hard-pumping remarkably well.

The welcoming entourage, rather small, but energetic, must have agreed that chairmanship of Encyclopedia Films has agreed with Mr. Adlai. He has gained much weight.

But he was brisk and Ivy League as ever.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Cricketleg & Silly Games:

Before I came to Carolina, my mother (a former coed) told me two things to guide me about the Carolina Way of Life. First, she said, I should definitely take a course entitled Arboretum 41 with lab at night to make up for my natural science deficiency. She also said not to be alarmed when I first walked by Silent Sam and he fired his rifle as she knew he would. Oh, Mamma!

However, she did not tell me that the size of the place would terrify a poor little girl from the country who had never even gone to school with boys. And now I know why the shoe stores in this section of the country are prosper-

. . . One may feel insignificant at first . . .

ing. Students buy walking shoes around here as often as they buy meal tickets.

The classroom buildings seem to be interspersed at least a mile apart, and it takes a while for one of us greenies to bravely throw away our maps and whoosh down a shortcut like the old hands can do. The first week it was no strange sight to see a new coed hobbling around with bandaids on her feet and the brand new Capezios tearing away the flesh as she walked. Speaking of the bigness of the place I lost my roommate during orientation and haven't yet found her. Any informtaion would be appreciated.

Where are you from? What are you majoring in? And people down here play this game: first they ask where you are from and then they start DO YOU KNOW . . . It's like winning points. The more people you know, the better off you are. So when a friendly senior says, "Oh, you're from Cricketleg Creek! Do you know Beowulf Brown?" I say, "Of course, he's one of my dearest friends." The senior looks downcast at me and says, "Oh, but Beowulf Brown is a girl." One cute little freshman nursing student going through rush told a sister: "I don't know anyone from anywhere and I can't play your game." She was remembered.

There are lots of things to sign up for around here. One of my girl friends signed up for intramural sports, The Daily Tar Heel, The Yack, debating societies, the cardboard, the men's glee club and a pre-med fraternity. However she decided wisely that she had too many things to do, so she dropped two of her courses.

I noticed that there are still a few signs in secluded spots around town reading "STOMP STATE" with next year printed insignificantly underneath. But I think we will really Clobber Clemson because they don't have Don King anymore and besides, everyone knows the reason we didn't stomp State was because it was so hot and OUR boys were wearing their "winter cotton outfits."

Fan Mail For Magill & Auto Suggestions

Editor:

I am writing with regard to the present parking problem faced by all students who own automobiles. Since I am not sure to whom complaints and suggestions, concerning this problem, should be made, I am writing to you in hopes that you can be of assistance to the students, or channel this letter to the proper authorities.

Although the University has made commendable steps toward partially relieving the above mentioned problem, there is one suggestion which I would like to offer, which I feel would also be of great assistance to each student car owner, as well as the Chapel Hill treasury.

I propose: (1) that off-campus parking along streets such as Raleigh Street (between Franklin St. and Raleigh Rd.), Cameron Ave. (east of Raleigh St., extending along Country Club Rd. to Raleigh Rd.), Battle Lane, South Boundary Street (from Cameron Ave. to E. Franklin St.) Senlac Road, Hooper Lane, and Raleigh Road (extending from the Pittsboro Rd. - Columbia St. junction to Country Club Road) be marked for parallel parking, and (2) that any motorist not observing the parking markers be given parking violation tickets. I feel that this project would drastically cut the amount of parking space that is now being wasted by thoughtless students.

To prove my point, by actual measurement of wasted space on Raleigh Street (between E. Franklin St. and Cameron Ave.) I found six parking spaces which might not seem too great, but when you multiply this figure by the additional blocks in the above mentioned streets, you will come up with a rather astounding number (as far as parking spaces go around Chapel Hill).

Hoping that you can be of assistance in this project, I am,

A student car owner

Editor:

Sam Magill is one of the finest human beings I have ever known. A vast majority of the student officials who have worked with him during the past several years have gratefully realized how fortunate they—and all the students of this University—are, that he is in a responsible position in the University Administration.

I suppose it is conceivable that someone could fill Sam Magill's position more effectively than he has been filling it, but I have never met such a person, if he exists. Be that as it may, it simply is not possible that anyone could be more honorable, more devoted to the best in the University's great traditions, or more genuine in his concern for the well-being of students and of all the people of this community.

We are lucky to have Sam Magill here, and I hope neither his modesty nor an offhand comment in The Daily Tar Heel have confused him about the affection and appreciation felt so widely for him on this campus.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

Perpetual Search For Alcoretums

I have been trying to decide which I should write about—the football game today, or the hotbed in Arkansas. These two topics seem to be the main conversation pieces these days, and most of the Carolina "students" seem to place them on the same plane of importance. I 'don't. I think I will write a bit about both.

First, the football game. The 'Tar Heels play Clemson this afternoon at two o'clcok in Kenan Stadium. Clemson won the title in the conference which we're in last year, and have a pretty good ball team. We lost last week to N. C. State, 7-0. We showed spasmodic signs of sparkle in that game, and it looks like today's game will be fairly good. Why don't you all get a bottle and buy a program and go drink in Kenan this afternoon. After all, life is but a constant search for a place to drink.

Second, Little Rock, Arkansas This summer I hitch-hiked to Texas to find some new places to drink, and later went to Mexico. One of the towns I went through on my way was Little Rock. My ride went only to the city limits, so I walked to the nearest bar, had a sandwich and four beers and decided on how I would spend the night. I walked to the bus stop, and got bit by a lot of mosquitoes as I waited for the bus. When it came, I got on, and asked the driver how much it would cost to go to the Little Rock YMCA and put the appropriate amount in the pot. Apparently we were at the end of the line, because the driver stayed there for about ten minutes waiting for his next scheduled run.

We talked in this delightful little interlude, about the weather and the mosquitoes and about my trip to Texas and other stuff. I had become pretty good at this kind of talk after three days on the road, talking, and sometimes lying when the truth got too boring, to all kinds of folk. The driver talked about Little Rock and how it was growing and the highways they were building around it for the last ten years that he didn't think they would ever get finished because of "politics."

Pretty soon he said he guessed he'd better get going so I leaned back and didn't talk to the operator while the vehicle was in motion. Not too many people got on the bus. In fact after the first five stops, only five people besides me and the bus driver were on the bus. Then the sixth stop got us two more. By the seventh stop people were starting to get off the bus and so I think by the time we got to the YMCA which is pretty near the middle of Little Rock, there were no more than ten people on the bus.

I lugged my bag into the YMCA and asked if I could have a room for the night. The man behind the desk asked me if I was a Young Man Christian, and I said almost and so he said yes you can have a room. I thanked him and paid him two dollars and he gave me the key and I lugged my bag to the elevator and up to my room and then I took a hot shower and went to bed.

And this week I read accounts of women screaming in Little Rock, Arkansas, "Oh, God, the niggers are in the school."

I think I'll go vomit

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

D-Day, Johnson's Chest-Pounding

While we were attempting to put our heads on the other morning, previous to coming to class, we were listening to Cecil Brown with his news and commentares. As we had not read the newspaper yet, we though that possibly he had made a mistake when he quoted Senator Olin Johnson (D-SC).

According to Brown, Senator Johnson had this to say concerning the federalization of the Arkansas National Guard by President Eisenhower. "If I were the governor, and he (Eisenhower) came in, I'd give him a fight such as he's never seen before. I'd proclaim a state of emergency and I'd call out the National Guard and then we'd see who's going to run things in my state." Since the morning papers also quoted him, and we've seen nothing refuting the statements attributed to him, we can only assume that he was not misquoted

Johnson's words bring two important questions to mind. First of all, was he alseep during World War II, and if so, has he been asleep for these many years since?

There is absolutely nothing logical in his statements. Everyone but Johnson knows that Ike was Supreme Allied Commander at D-Day, and the papers carried the full accounts of the federalization of the Arkansas National Guard as well as the text of Eisenhower's speech defending his move.

If Johnson were going to organize a "fight such as he's never seen before," he would need armed forces (which would be mobilized by the federal make government against him) and he would have to outshine D-Day. The whole idea is so illogical and ridiculous that it is difficult to find words to write about it.

We are exceedingly fortunate that Johnson is not now governor of South Carolina, for if he was, and similar difficulties arose there, as they doubtless will, we could very well have another war, and with the determination of a man like him, it is doubtful whether the rest of the states would have a chance.

We are inclined to wonder whether he was embarrassed after someone read the newspaper accounts to him and he reconsidered his advice to Governor Faubus. At any rate we're sure that Faubus appreciated the attempt on Johnson's part to provide him with wise counsel. We only hope that Governor Fabus will listen to wiser counsel.

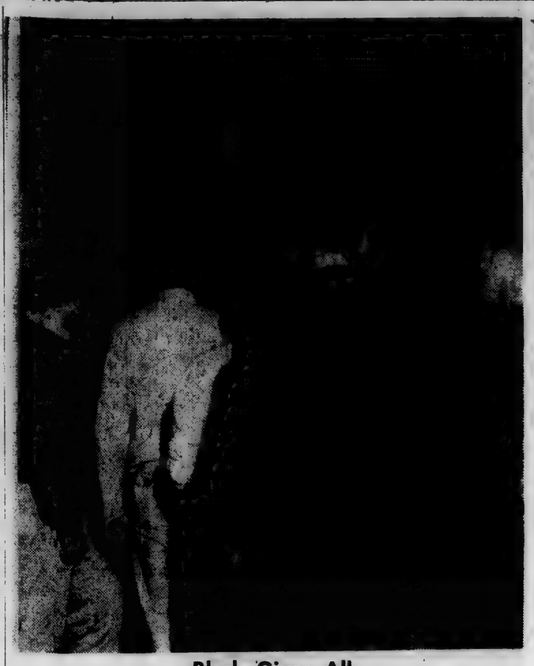
Arsonist Hits Negro College

ALBANY, Ga., —AP— A $300,000, pre-dawn fire was set deliberately at the Albany Sttae College for Negroes Friday, but whether the arsonists were white or negro, investigators did not agree.

Varying reports placed a blond white man in a red-checked shirt and three 17 or 18-year-old white youths—all unidentified — suspiciously at the scene between 3 and 4 A.M. But a city fireman declared that three men whom he saw running from a flaming building were negroes.

Wiped out was the $250,000 brick, one-story hazard training school, attended by some 250 elementary pupils and used by the college to train young negro teachers. Arrangements were made to continue the practice school at other buildings of the two million dollar college plant.

While the training school burned down, flames spewed up at nearby Caroline Hall, Combination Auditorium and Administration Building. Damage there was placed at between $25,000 and $50,000 by W. H. Dennis, Negro President of the State - supported Co - Educational School of some 450 enrollment.



City Detective W. M. Harris said the auditorium stage directly underneath the curtains had been doused with an inflammable liquid, probably gasoline, and that the fire obviously was icendiary.

"There was no question about that," said Harris. "It definitely was set."

Harris quoted Fireman E. W. Peterson as saying three slicker-clad men he saw hurriedly leaving flaming Caroline Hall definitely were negroes.

Another fireman, who asked that he not be identified, was quoted as saying three white youths talked with him soon after the firemen arrived about 3:15 A.M. They left, he added, and he saw them going toward Caroline Hall a few minutes before it flamed up.

Dennis emphasized that he regarded the fire as an act of vandalism and was unwilling to attach any racial significance to it.

Brevard Girl Is Head Of Office Committee

Chairman of the office committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board for this year is Martha Fortune, senior from Brevard. As secretary of GMAB, the chairmanship of the office committee automatically falls as one of her responsibilities.

The office committee, composed of 10 to 15 coeds who work in the GMAB office at various times during the week, is one of the most important of the 14 committees which comprise GMAB because of its unique position in the organization.

The committee's main responsibility is the co-ordintaion of the entire GMAB program.

In meeting this large responsibility, the girls' duties include typing, sending out notices, filing records and reports, selecting meeting places for the committees to meet, organizing and keeping up to date the bulletin board an office calendar maintaining a GMAB scrap book and many other regular office details.

"I can promise each girl who works on this committee that the work will be most interesting and that there are very few dull minutes around the office," stated Benny Thomas, president of GMAB.

"Miss Fortune is in the process of setting up the office committee for this year and wants any interested girl to come to the information desk in Graham Memorial or to the GMAB office and fill out an application before Monday if possible." Thomas said.

Cardboard Gives Preview

An exploding rocket,a clobbered tiger, and the Carolina Call—this is a brief preview of the UNC Cardboard's program for the Carolina-Clemson game today. The staff has cretaed many new and original stunts for the coming halftime show.

A new "spectacular" in the color and motion series is a rocket that travels across the section to a colorful explosion. The Clemson tiger fades from his tiger colors into Carolina blue, then is vanquished.

In conjunction with the Cheerleaders, the Cardboard has designed a Carolina Call stunt in which the letters appear as Carolina is spelled by the cheering section. In another season-long series, a flip stunt of Clobber Clemson is planned.

President, Pete Evens, urges anyone interested in working with any aspect of the organization to come by the Cardboard offices in east Emerson Stadium Monday through Friday from 2:00 t o 5:00. He further urges students to sit in the Cardboard section at games and listen carefully to instructions.

A selected group of films from a physics series will be shown at UNC in Carroll Hall at 9 a.m. today. The films were produced by the Fund For the Advancement of Eductaion in cooperation with Encyclopaedia Britannica Films.

There are one hundred and sixty-two films in the series which make up a complete course in physics. The film course in physics is taught by Dr. Harvey E. White, professor of physics at the University of California.

The film series has been tried in two areas—Pittsburgh and Chicago —through educational television. Teachers found the films so graphic that even those schools with a physics faculty and full laboratory equipment have decided to use them.

Dr. White, who has taught physics for twenty years gazes directly into the camera as he teaches. This gives the impresison on the film that he is talking to each student individually. He said he believes he gets more attention in the film lectures than on the live platform.

There is a continuity to the films and each day's work is reviewed the following day. The series is arranged so that the lecture and laboratory periods cover five main physics units, any one of which may be used at the start of the course. This arrangement provides flexibility in the use of the film series for a number of schools.

Mechanics, 44 periods; special lessons (slide rule, algebra, trigonometry), 3 periods; light (optics), 18 periods; electricity and magnetism, 24 periods; atomic physics, 9 periods; electronics, 8 periods; quantaum optics, 3 periods; nuclear physics, 7 periods.

Public educators and science teachers throughout North Carolina have been invited to this film screening which will be held prior to and just after the talk on education, presented by Adlai Stevenson, who is the key-note speaker for the Citizen's Committee For Better Schools. A second opportunity to screen the films for those visitors who may be interested will be held in Carroll Hall immediately following Mr. Stevenson's address at 10:30 a.m.

Tar Heels-Tigers Renew Rivalry

It's that time again.

Football Saturday in Chapel Hill and this afternoon about one p.m. the fans will begin their infiltration en masse into Thomas Wolf's "Southern part of Heaven" to watch the Carolina Tar Heels battle the Clemson Tigers in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

By two p.m., about 25,000 fans are expected to be in beautiful Kenan Stadium to watch a couple of Southern and Atlantic Coast Conference cohorts renew a rivalry that has been inactive since way back in 1915.

This, of course, is the first year of "round-robin" play in the ACC for the two clubs. By this is meant that each will play every other team in the conference. The Carolina-Clemson pact, it is hoped, will become an annual thing because of the tradition of the two schools, athletically and academically.

Air Should Be Filled With Passes

What should the fans look for this afternoon?

Rest assured that you'll see the air filled with passes as two outstanding quarterbacks, Clemson's Harvey White and Carolina's Dave Reed attempt to strike for the long gains. Both are capable slingers and each club has an adequate replacement to keep the passes sailing.

Both should demonstrate a good running game, as both have a backfield which is capable of striking viciously along the terra firma.

Last week against State, Carolina displayed a pretty good defense. The Tigers will have their hands full—This will be no breeze for Frank Howard's club as was last week's fiasco with Presbyterian.

Clemson's defense has not had the true test since PC was the opening game for the Tigers but much has been written about the Clemson defense and from reports, it looks pretty good.

No Multiple Offense Today

One thing which should make the Tar Heels happy about today's game is that they will not be up against another multiple offense like last Saturday. The Wolfpack used it frequently and it was tough on Carolina.

Jim Tatum said in hs press conference Tuesday that his club had not been too well prepared to defend against such a formation because the freshman squad had arrived here after the varsity and had not been able to give the upperclassmen the practice it needed against the multiple offense.

Clemson Coach Is One Of Most Popular

Frank Howard, the Clemson coach, is one of the most popular fellows in the game. Many fans will recall the friendly feud between ex-Wake Forest mentor Peahead Walker and Howard before Peahead went to Canada to coach.

The two were always telling jokes on one another. One that we recall was the time Howard told a newspaperman that his buddy Peahead had the perfect method of forming a team. "He takes all his boys into the woods," Howard quipped, "and runs them through." Those that run over the trees he puts in the line and those that run around he puts in the backfield."

Peahead, upon hearing this, retaliated: You know why Howard's wife goes on all the Clemson trips? It's because he's so ugly that she'd rather go along than have to kiss him hello when he gets back."

Pigskin Predictions—Duke To Win Easily

Since it has been the forte of our predecessor to play pigskin prognosticator each weekend, we thought we'd give it a twirl.

Each week, we'll try to foresee the outcomes of all Atlantic Atlantic Coast Conference games with the exception of Carolina. Why, you ask, not the Tar Heels? The reason is simple. Carolina is playing some of the nation's best and this writer knows that we can't win them all. However, the writer also knows that optimism would always outweigh realism, thus, he will refrain from picking Carolina to win every Saturday.

Might as well get things started with Duke vs. Virginia. Our Durham rivals blasted South Carolina a week ago. Virginia is an improved ball team. But the fact remains that the Blue Devils are much the superior team. We look for the Devils to ride to an easy victory . . . Let's say about 34-14.

Florida, Terps And Gamecocks Too

Little is known about Wake Forest since the Deacs will be opening in Gainesville against the University of Florida. The Floridians will be tough. We'll play a stab in the dark and take Florida, 14-7.

Carolina's conqueror of a week ago, N. C. State, travels up to College Park, Md. to meet the Maryland Terps. Last week the Terps gave Texas A&M a rough battle. State has power, but so, evidently, do the Terps. This should be the conference game of the week. Our prediction: Maryland 20, State 14.

That leaves only South Carolina. The Gamecocks are still, in our opinion, the second best team in the conference. They play Wofford today and much has been written about the possibility of an upset. We can't go along with such a conjecture . . . South Carolina 40, Wofford 14.

Turley Stops Boston, 10-2

BOSTON, Sept. 27 —(AP)—Rifle armed Bob Turley surrendered two hits in seven innings and Harry Simpson drove in four runs today as the New York Yankees flexed their World Series muscles in a 10-2 victory over Boston.

Turley appeared sharp in his tuneup for the Milwaukee Braves despite chill winds. He struck out eight and walked four. He allowed Billy Consolo's fourth home run in the second inning and Marty Keough's first major league hit—a sixth inning single.

Bullet Bob was replaced by Bob Grim to start the eighth line with Manager Casey Stengel's plans to use two pitchers in each of the season's final three games at Fenway Park. Grim allowed one hit and one run.

In his manipulations to rest key players and experiment prior to the series, Stengel gave Elston Howard his first major league shot at first base in the third inning-moving Simpson from first to left field.

Howard handled himself well at the bag where he had some work in the minor leagues but it was Simpson who did the heavy stick work.

Tar Heels

It'll probably be up to the offensive ability of the Tar Heels this afternoon. Clemson is suppose to have a vaunted passing attack and with this knowledge, Tatum spent a lot of time week working on pass defense.

The Tar Heels will need a more powerful air attack to thwart the high-flying Tigers. Last week Carolina was able to connect only four times in 17 tries.

The feeling in most quarters is that the Tatummen will demonstrate a better running attack this afternoon. The Tar Heels have the horses to move the pigskin up and down the field.

On hand for today's affair will be ex-presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson. Halftime activities will include the presentation of the first Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Association's "Service to Sports Award" to R. W. (Bob) Fetzer, the long-time Athletic Director at Carolina. The presentation will be made by ACSA President, Frank Spencer of the Winston-Salem Journal.

Only Tar Heel expected to watch from the sidelines is sophomore quarterback Nelson Lowe. Lowe missed the State game and still hasn't completely recovered from a torn knee ligament.

The probable starting lineup:

UNC	POS.	CLEM.
Payne	LE	Masneri
Russavage	LT	Padgett
Furjanic	LG	Kaltenbach
Koes	C	Bunton
Lineberger	RG	Grdijan
Blazer	RT	Olson
Jones	RE	Few
Reed	QB	White
Schuler	LH	Usry
Goff	RH	Quesenberry
Shupin	FB	Spooner

THREE YEARS OF ELIGIBILITY

University of North Carolina halfback Jim Schuler, who has been the rave of early fall practices here thus far, is actually a junior in school, although he has three years of eligibility left. Schuler, a resident of High Point, N. C., transferred to UNC last year from the University of Washington when his family moved to North Carolina.

Turley: 'Better In October'

BOSTON, —(AP)— The Yankees' Bob Turley, who likely will start the third World Series game against Milwaukee, says he's a better pitcher in October than in June because he doesn't sweat as much.

"That's a fact," the 215-pound speedballer said today before defeating the Boston Red Sox. "I'm much faster in the fall than I am in the summer, and I've just discovered the reason.

"I'm a big man and when the weather is hot I perspire and the water just runs off me. When my body temperature is too high, I just can't put that extra juice on the high, hard one."

Turley is not the only one who believes he will be tough on the Braves in the World Series. Turley's record is 13 wins, six losses.

Stevenson Blames Ike Indecision For Crisis

By DOUGLAS EISELE

Adlai Stevenson yesterday indirectly blamed President Eisenhower for the Little Rock crisis and said a Governor's conference as set next week could have avoided the fiasco.

He told a press conference here that "it is time to sew up our wounds" and withdraw federal troops from the Arkansas Capitol "so that this will never happen again."

"If his (Eisenhower's) position had been made clear we wouldn't have suffered this national misfortune which has been so exploited by our enemies," Stevenson said.

Stevenson recalled that "two years ago" he urged such meetings as the Southern Governor's conference set next week with Eisenhower and said it could have been instrumental in avoiding crises like Little Rock.

"I have been deeply grieved by the extent to which this (Little Rock) has been exploited abroad," Stevenson declared.

"This (foreign exploitation) has been one of the sorriest aspects of this sorry affair," he added.

Earlier, Stevenson had read a mimeographed statement of his views on Little Rock crisis and integration because he "anticipated you were going to ask me about" them.

Further in the conference he told reporters that there is a "possibility" of a third party in the south, but added, "I would personally deplore that action"

He said there always is the possibility than a southerner could get the nomination for a top (namely vice presidential) post and spoke out against sectional leadership on the national level.

"If we (all America believe in our system as (devoutly) as I do, we have nothing to be afraid of," Stevenson commented.

He said the U.S. should want its "top" college students to go abroad, "to Russia, to anywhere they want to." And, he added, we should welcome foreign students for tours through the U.S.

Stevenson said he foresees "anti-labor legislation" growing out of current Congressional probes, but said he "can't tell you what."

The former Illinois Governor noted an expansion of the Democratic Party in the far west and said that "the south will return to the fold of its fathers in due course."

Tar Heels Tame Tigers For 26-0 Victory; Superb Offense, Defense Pace UNC's Win

Clemson's Pass Attack Thwarted

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels toned the roar of the Clemson Tigers to a mere burp yesterday by whitewashing the Tigers, 26-0, under dark, chilly skies in Kenan Stadium.

A Dad's Day crowd of about 16,000 watched the Tar Heels put on a beautiful demonstration of offensive and defensive precision as Jim Tatum's charges officially won their first game since 1955.

It was not the same Carolina team which dropped a 7-0 decision to N. C. State in Kenan a week ago. It was obvious from the opening kickoff that the Tar Heels were there to win and they never let up their vicious attack. It was a harmogeneous and concerted effort on the part of the entire ball club which brought Carolina this badly needed moral booster.

Clemson could never get started against a three-deep defense that stayed one step ahead of the Tigers all afternoon. The highly regarded passing game of the Tigers was thwarted time and again as the Tar Heel line charged right through the Clemson front wall unmercifully.

Carolina's first touchdown of the season came with only one minute and ten seconds gone in the second quarter. It was the fine running of halfback Daley Goff which carried the Tar Heels to the Clemson one yard line and set the stage for quarterback Dave [illegible] start of the second period.

The ball exchanged hands twice before the Tar Heels netted their first six points. Clemson could get nowhere in its two tries but the Tar Heels got down to the Tiger 24 on their first attempt.

The Carolina TD drive started when Goff made a fair catch at the Carolina 33. Mainly through the efforts of Goff, the Carolina "second unit" carried the ball deep into enemy territory. Ed Lipski, Emil DeCantis and Curt Hathaway all had a hand in the drive before the "first unit" came in.

The first quarter ended with the Tar Heels in the Clemson 6. Goff then went off tackle to the 3, then went left again to the 1 before Reed sliced across. Phil Blazer kicked the extra point and the Tar Heels led, 7-0.

The Tar Heels wasted little time in showing their superiority. Blazer kicked off and George Usry got the ball on the one and raced back to the 26. There, he was racked up and the ball slip-

Senator Urges Investigation

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28—(AP)—Sen. Olin Johnston, D-SC has urged that Southern states raise several million dollars to investigate what he termed a drive by Communists and fellow travelers to force integration, discredit the South and set up a dictatorship.

In a letter to Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, chairman of the Southern Governors' Conference, Johnston said such subversive elements support the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) "both physically and financially."

"The South needs to show in solid evidence that organizations causing such situations as have occurred at Little Rock, and which will be caused to occur in other places, are subversive in nature and have Communistic backing," Johnston told Collins.

"The South needs such a program to counteract the propaganda of the NAACP and other elements and organizations which are constantly resmirching the people of the South."

Johnston said that deeper than the goal of complete integration, subversives seek "to completely destroy the power of state governments and to establish a dictatorship."

He said that the NAACP operates in a surreptitious manner in Southern states with the encouragement if the Justice Department. He reiterated that it is supported by subversive elements.

Meager 300 At Rally; Players Leave Scene

By DAVIS YOUNG

A disappointing 300 of Carolina's more than 7,000 students turned out for Friday night's pre-UNC-Clemson game pep rally at Woollen Gym.

The rally was initiated on the field adjacent to the gym by the ignition of a bonfire. At the time only 150 students were present causing Head Cheerleader Frank Black to march on the dormitories with his followers in quest of more people.

Marching up Raleigh Street and through the Upper Quad, the group picked up an additional 150 students. The termination of the marching was the steps of South Building.

It must be said of those that did take the time to attend tonight's event, that their spirit was tremendous. The voices of the faithful could be heard ringing across the campus to the tune of "All the Way Blb Blue, All the Way."

Cheerleader Black had this to say at the conclusion of the rally: "I am surprised and disappointed at the apparent lack of spirit and attitude of the students exhibited tonight."

"I certainly hope the spirit of the team for the game will be the opposite of that shown for this rally. It is an honor to have a coach of Jim Tatum's caliber. I am deeply disappointed that he saw fit to remove his boys to a movie.

"I appreciate the spirit of those who did come and I hope that future rallies will be more successful. Let's rectify last night's action with plenty of noise and enthusiasm from the stands today."

Tatum's Supper Better After Saturday's Win

By DAVE WIBLE

The big brown "S" burned in the grass of Kennan last week by mischevious State College fans seemed to gradually fade away yesterday afternoon as the Tar Heels pounded their way out of "always the bridesmaid" predictment they have been faced with for the last three contests.

Several of the Tar Heels said after the game that had they played as well against State as they did yesterday the outcome would have been very different. Co-captain Buddy Payne, speaking of the overall change between the Tar Heels yesterday and those of a week ago, said, "We just decided to play football. Last week we made too many mistakes we could not override. This week we didn't make as many, and when one was made we took it in stride."

Happy Jim Tatum's first remark to the press was, "Well, boys, I'm a lot happier to see you this week and you know, my supper is going to taste a lot better tonight."

"What was the difference in this and the State game?" was the first question. "Thirty degrees temperture," was the quick reply. "Today, "he continued the squad played the type of ball they are capable of playing. It was a team victory. I hate to single anyone out since they all did so well."

Tatum did feel that the defense did a very fine job. He went as far as to say that it was the best defensive game any of his Carolina teams have ever played.

Later on he did single out Dave Reed for his calling of the game. "This was the first game Reed has played with out any unusal situations in the background, and he did do a fine job, Tatum commented, meaning the leg injury that harnessed the quarterback last season. Ed Lipsky, Fred Swearingen, Mack Turlington, and Al Goldstine were all given laurals by their coach for their tremendous efforts. No one was called the "star" of the afternoon. It was a team victory and Tatum wanted it recorded that way.

May Close School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., —(AP)— Gov. Orval Faubus has said he might try to close Central High School, rather than continue its integrated classes at federal bayonet point.

"It would be a very pleasant development," he declared.

Faubus said enactment of new laws at a special session of the state legislature would be a necessary prelude to any such drastic step. Earlier, he had revealed he was considering calling such a session although he hasn't done so.

The Cross Of Sacrifice: Sagging Humanities Or Flourishing Technology ?

Former Illinois Governor Adlai Stevenson hit upon an important problem in the American education system yesterday when he said:

"I once heard it said that Harvard University humanizes the scientist; and that Massachusetts Institute of Technology simonizes the humanist . . . in This nuclear age it is every day more apparent that we must achieve a humanism that is scientific and a science that is truly humane."

It is indeed a basic educational problem that the sciences and the humanities be relegated to an equal position in the American educational pattern.

The current international arms race has made a blatant mockery of the word:

"Disarmament."

All nations are apparently madly rushing to auto-annihilation as they pursue and explore new technological horizons.

Thus it is necessary that we have alert and rapidly working scientists as a deterrent to war rather than as a means to war.

But the role of humanities — the art of statesmanship and diplomacy—the constant prodding of man's imagination — rather than the complete reliance on cold hard technological advances in this impersonal civilization—the study of famous humanitarian arts and the subsequent usage of these studies to advance man's ominous-seeming horizons—must not be forsaken and doomed to an ignominous oblivion.

Mankind must not crucify his imagination on the scientific cross of technology; nor must he crucify technology on a flexible cross of imagination.

The roles of these vital and signal fields must be relative'. . .

Vital Dedication Lost In New 'Civilian War'

Though we Southerners must be ultimately wrong in our support of unlawful—as interpreted by the Nine Tall Men of the Supreme Court—segregated schools, the fire and devotion of some in support of a lost cause must be admired.

To wit, the Associated Press ran this story yesterday:

"Riley L. Shaw, Jacksonville veteran, said today he has wired President Eisenhower he is returning four air medals nad six battle stars in protest against use of army troops in the Arkansas integration crisis.

"His telegram suggested that the president 'give them (the medals) to the members of the 101st Airborne Division for their heroic and courageous action in Little Rock'."

Such dedication — whether the cause is just or unjust, lost or headed for success—must be admired.

If only such strong-willed Southerners would devote their efforts to the forwarding of this country's vital role in the unsettled and wartorn world, then all causes of peace would progress much more rapidly.

It is an incalculable loss . . .

Perhaps yesterday's victory over the Clemson Tigers will again generate a spark of enthusiasm among Universsity student legions.

It was indeed an ignominious thing to witness a meagre 300 students at Friday night's pep rally.

Yet again, it was rather discouraging to witness Sunny Jim Tatum's forces march off to the quiet solitude of a downtown flick.

It seems that a really energetic force of footballers would have remained loyal to the faithful few who did bother to disturb their party hours to spur their athletic forces onward to victory.

It is a rather difficult decision to subordinate in roles of infamy:

(1) The lack of esprit de corps among the student body.

(2) The "quitism" among the forces of Sunny. Smiling, ten-gallon-headed James Tatum.

The Daily Tar Heel offers its most laudetory words to the football team for their actions against Clemson yesterday.

The Daily Tar Heel offers its most derogatory to the football team for the attitude of "quitism" Friday night.

Yet the cheerleaders acted their part in the drama extremely admirably.

THE HILLTOP:

Quarterly Is Out For Local Contributions

By NANCY HILL

The Carolina Quarterly intends to begin its tenth year of publication not with a whimper but a bang. The staff is already at work on material for the Fall 1957 issue scheduled for publication in late October or early November."

Not many decisions as to what will be accepted for publication have been made as yet, according to editor Christian Lefebure, because very little has been submitted from Carolina students.

Lefebure intends to make the students conscious of, in some cases, the very existence ofthe Carolina Quarterly, and in most cases, the fact that it was set up as a vehicle for the literary expressions of students, as well as established writers.

The original policy of the magazine was to maintain 50 per cent student contribution. The policy statement said, "No creative work shall be excluded provided it has literary merit." Lefebure is certain that such literary merit is present among Carolina students, and he intends to discover it.

Lefebure pointed out in a discussion this week that he is particularly interested in contributions from artists. The Quarterly wants to see any work that is suitable in form for publication, including sculpture, he said.

The Carolina Quarterly is the descendant, in a sense, of the Carolina Magazine, first published here in 1844. When the magazine was discontinued in 1948, a move among students brought into being the Carolina Quarterly. Endorsed in its beginning by such people as Charles Eaton, Lyman R. Cotten of the UNC English Dept. and Playwright Paul Green, the Quarterly was established for the publication of critical articles, essays reviews and sketches as well as fiction and poetry.

Paul Green's statement on the initiation of the Quarterly was: "There is a great chance for such a publication here in Chapel Hill, the new literary capital of the South, and I'm sure the students, the faculty and the public will rally to the idea."

Dr. Cotten said, "A literary magazine connected with a university is an indespensible means of encouraging talented writers among the students. The plan for the Carolina Quarterly is an admirable one and deserves wholehearted support. Young writers at the University of North Carolina should be given the opportunity to see their work in print, for only in this way can they receive the necessary stimulus to develop their talent."

Eaton said. "There is a great need for a University publication to provide an outlet for student writing which measures up to a high standard of quality. If the Quarterly is well edited and is supported by writers who are seriously interested in imaginative writing, it should in time, become an outstanding contribution to the life of the University campus."

Lefebure's statement of the policy and intentions of this year's Quarterly reflects and elbaorates the statements made at its founding.

"I believe that the Carolina Quarterly should be a magazine of broad and serious interest with a more-than-local scope which will serve both as an outlet for and a stimulus to creative activity on this campus.

"I would extend the coverage of the Quarterly to include, not only pieces of original fiction and poetry, and essays in literary criticism but also articles of general to a larger audience of broad inhaving weathered this greater interest dealing with any of the humanities. That is not to say, make it into a scholarly journal, but simply give it a sound appeal to a larger audience of broad interest.

"Regarding serious interest, I thiuk that a magazine published as a part of a liberal arts university program to promote serious creative thinking must be kept serious and not "watered down" to a "popular" level, lest it defeat its very purpose for being From the outset, itmust be understood that such a magazine will have a minority appeal This, however, is no argument against it Such efforts have to be supported purely for their own sake

"The value of a magazine of wider scope as opposed to one drawing its material from purely local sources is twofold: First, the wider and hence stiffer competition insures that the material finally printed will carry a greater prestige to the young writer for having weathered this greater the field open for contributions. competition. Moreover by leaving the chance of a young writer's being printed in the same issue along with an established name is increased.

"How Do You Get Him Back In?"

FROM VIRGINIA CAVALIER:

Ike's Vascillating . . . Red Presses Pound . .

What Mr. Eisenhower has done in calling out federal troops to put down Arkansas' budding insurrection, he had to do. It is a shame that he did not act as decisively a few weeks ago when he conducted himself in what we earlier called a "vascillating" manner in dealing with Mr. Faubus. Perhaps the Little Rock situation would not have gone as far as it did if the President had been a bit more stern in his initial encounter with the Arkansas chief executive. But the milk is spilled now, and we say again, with things as they were, Mr. Eisenhower acted rightly and in the best interests of his people.

We wish to criticize Mr. Faubus rather than the President, for it is he who is responsible for this disgraceful incident which couldn't have been more ill-timed. Coming, as it did, at a time when America's good name abroad is the greatest single element in maintaining world peace, the mistake which Mr. Faubus made may have the gravest consequences to the free world. Since the termination of World War II, the United States has stood for all that is desirable and good in the world; the nature of our republic has been the most important anti-Red propaganda instrument imaginable. But now, torn by internal strife, tolerating the abuse of our own people, we do not make such a pretty picture.

But there are those who will say that Mr. Faubus is not to blame for what has happened, and certainly we will agree that he is not entirely so. But what happened need not have, and the Governor could have prevented it.

It is interesting to speculate on the motives which led Mr. Faubus to take the action that he did. The speculations form a continum from base to noble with considerable in-between; if the former end of this continum seems most plausible, then his was the act of a despotic tyrant; if the latter end is selected, then he must be termed at best a sadly misguided individual.

Whether he acted in good faith is a matter known only to himself and to God. But whatever his motives, it is clear that what he did was wrong. Being a less great man than he should have been, Mr. Faubus forgot that as a leader goes, so go his followers; this must be so, or the leader becomes no longer a leader. And by opposing integration with warlike means, he made it clear to his people that he deemed such means the most effective weapon. It was only natural that they should turn out in force, ready to fight. And they did.

We hope now that the pressure of federal troops in Little Rock will alone be sufficient to discourage further violence.

MYRIAD VIEWPOINTS:

The Faubus Issue, The Editor Speaks

From Connecticut Daily Campus:

No matter what may come as the result of the Faubus-Little Rock school battle, people are not likely to change their opinions. Lines of battle are clearly drawn — and have been even before the controversy started.

Conclusions were reached from emotionally charged traditional issues. Few tangible facts come to light: Faubus said he has reason to believe there would be violence and called out the National Guard —that's about all we know.

Since the incident flared early in September, people — on the basis of pre-determined issues — have rabidly debated the Faubus action with arguments of:

- integration versus segregation with many hinting Faubus himself is using the Little Rock incident as an appeal to these emotions for furtherance of his own political ambitions.
- state's rights versus federal supremacy, an issue which has brought the constitutions of the United States and Arkansas into violent disagreement.
- and speculations as to whether citizens would protest integration with violence. In the Little Rock situation, Faubus has said he thought there would be trouble, but has not said what; the mayor of Little Rock and many Little Rock citizens have said otherwise.

Rather than merely arguing legal and moral issues (which do enter in), it is imperative to look at what has happened as a result of Governor Faubus' act:

- it has and will delay smoothness of progress of integration for many years — set back its advances at a time when headway was being made (Faubus has said that the Supreme Court's order must be carried out.)
- it has produced an excellent mass of propaganda for critical newspapers abroad at a time when prestige of the United States is of vital importance.
- it has served to further alienate radical elements in our own country; now, more than ever before, will it be harder for them to be patient.

Because of these results, his action — even if legal — can only be considered dangerous, foolhardy, unwise.

And if the Governor is playng with human dignity and human emotions only to further his own political career, then his action can only be labeled unethical, dishonest, dispicable. —MIMS.

FROM THE DAILY KANSAN:

Progress Or Backslide

The story of integration in the Southern schools is fast becoming a milestone in American history, and the question now is whether the milestone will be a mark of progress or backslide.

No matter how many things are said in favor of the Supreme Court's integration ruling, it is still an unhealthy jab at states' rights and further rulings of this sort can seriously undermine our system of government.

White Eupremacy advocates South of the Mason-Dixon line scream at the Supreme Court and say that it has already ruined the power of individual states by this pro-Negro ruling. This is not true, as long as such last-ditch ruling don't become usual. And if it becomes true, the states will have no one to blame but themselves.

The federal government has a breaking point to its patience, just like everyone else. The Southern states were supposed to have been working on the integration problem for many years now.

In Congress the subject of Negro voting and education has come up many times in the last fifteen years, with the same old stock reply from the South. "Give us time!" said the senators and representatives. "We must go slow!" echoed the Southern governors.

So, Congress went slow—in fact, it didn't go at all. It was content to let "sleeping dogs lie." The only trouble was that this particular dog wasn't sleeping. Foul-smelling poll practices were found all over the South. Negro abuse and discrimination did not show signs of diminishing and, in fact, seemed to be growing.

In the meantime, this country assumed its destined role as a world leader. Hundreds of people from struggling countries watched America for proof of its world leadership. And all the time, our racial situation grew worse.

Propaganda machinery from communist countries thrived on the stormy South, and our prestige and leadership began to shake — yet the South still said, "Give us time!"

There was, in fact, no more time. The Supreme Court was forced to override the southern states. It was not a matter of the Supreme Court's overaggressiveness, it was a case of Southern resistance to demolratic practices.

And so, the Supreme Court has acted.

Whether you, as a voter, agree or disagree with the action, you must, we believe realize that it's the future that needs watching, not the past. If this was a desperation measure by the Supreme Court to provide a solution for an otherwise hopeless situation — and we believe it was — then we shouldn't hear of any more such action for a long time, unless another obviously drastic problem confronts the courts. On the other hand, if the Supreme Court continues to push on into the affairs of individual states' rights, then the states should fight back to preserve their status and stature.

The courts have placed themselves and the states on a limb in their integration rulings. It was a necessary move, but let's make sure we can get back down to the ground. Jacob.

Rushees Take Panhellenic Journey

A Look Inside The Alpha Gam House

Refreshments are always enjoyable after hours of chatting. Following a lively game of "Do you know" the Alpha Gams are seen serving rushees before someone developed laryngitis. Later the Alpha Gams entertained prospective pledges with a history of the UNC basketball team.

The Pi Phi Arrow, hanging in front of the house, points the way to rushees as they stop in for a party. After being welcomed by the sisters, as we see here, the new coeds were taken downstairs for a look at Pi Phi history and entertained with the sorority's songs.

News Roundup, Suggestions And . . .

By WALLY KURALT

An eventful week has just passed.

Student leaders have decided to present awards in the amount of fifteen dollars to victorious visiting teams, in hopes of preventing riots such as the one following the State game. We approve of this move. The time to protect the goalposts, we believe, is during the game.

Word comes that Tar Heel athletes on training table will soon have a brand new private room in which to eat. It will be added on to be Monogram Club. This, we trust, will solve the Lenoir Hall private dining room hassle which blew up last year between the football team and other organizations. Each wanted —and needed—the room. Mr. Tatum and his charges had gotten there first, so they kept it.

Biography Of McIver To Be Released Oct. 5

"McIver of North Carolina," the first full length biography of Charles Duncan McIver, will be released October 5, by the University of North Carolina Press. The book is by Rose Howell Holder, a former feature writer and book reviewer.

Mrs. Holder's book is a carefully prepared and comprehensive account of the life of one of North Carolina's great educational pioneers. The biographical material is based largely upon his letters and papers and upon interviews with people who knew McIver.

McIver, along with such well-known educators as Charles Brantley Aycock and Edwin A. Alderman, set himself against the current of thinking dominant in his times and changed that current. He fought for a state college for women and for public schools to be supported by state and local taxes.

McIver's voice was heard, and in 1891 the Legislature approved an institution to be known as the Normal and Industrial School. He continued to fight against popular opinion and church disapproval for the school's betterment and for public education.

Until his death 14 years later he served as the school's president. A typhoid epidemic and a fire which nearly destroyed the campus failed to discourage McIver. He continued to fight for his dream to establish a college where young women could secure both a liberal and a practical education.

The largest residential woman's college in America stands in Greensboro as the chief monument to the success of his purpose. McIver left his imprint on the educational future and well-being of the State, the region and the nation.

"McIver of North Carolina in all probability will remain the definitive biography of the great educational statesman.

More than McIver's public life is revealed, however; his personal life is also highlighted in the book. Many delightful anecdotes are included which shed light on the irrepressible Scot.

Such an amusing incident occurred when McIver was serving as a one-man lobby for his educational program in the state Legislature. While McIver was making a plea for the woman's college, an opponent urged that the Assembly not be moved to waste the state's money by one who came among them "clothed in purple and fine linen."

Mrs. McIver from her position in the gallery dropped a note to her husband. "Pull up your coattail, Charles," it advised, "and show them your purple and fine linen."

He was wearing a patch on his britches.

CO-DISCOVERER OF ASIAN VIRUS

Dr. Meyer Begins UNC Staff Work

By ROBERT H. BARTHOLOMEW

The situation regarding Asian flu is unique. Epidemic influenza has probably occured since the earliest tmies, yet now for the first time in history it has been possible to predict a world-wide epidemic and thus take steps to combat the disease before it spreads to this country."

The speaker was Dr. Harry M. Meyer Jr. formally chief of the Virus and Rickettsial Diagnostic Laboratory at Walter Reed Army Medical Center and co-discoverer of the new Asian virus. Dr. Meyer is senior author of a scientific paper recently published in the Proceedings of the Society for Experimental Biology and Medicine that served as the original description of the new virus and a warning of its potential threat to the United States.

He recently moved to Chapel Hill with his wife and three children and is now a member of the house staff in Pediatrics at the North Carolina Memorial Hospital, the teaching hospital of the University of North Carolina school of Medicine.

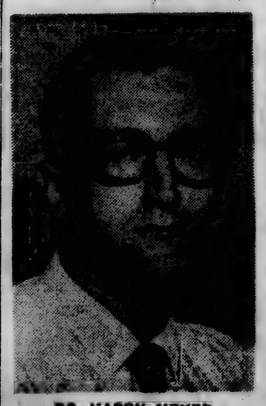
In referring to the discovery of the virus in May of this year, Dr. Meyer was quick to point out that the credit belonged to a dozen or more persons working on research teams at the Army's 406th Medical General Laboratory in Japan and the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington, D. C.

Since the end of World War II, scientists at Walter Reed under the direction of Dr. Joseph Smadel, now associate director of the National Institutes of Health, have maintained a team of virologists prepared to study and quickly diagnose epidemics occurring anywhere in the world. This group has worked on a number of outbreaks of flu and other virus diseases during the past several years but not always as in the case of Asian influenza has it come to the general public attention.

In April of this year Dr. Maurice Hilleman of Walter Reed saw a newspaper article which described a flu-like epidemic in Hong Kong and promptly requested army virologists in Japan to collect and fly frozen specimens of the virus to the diagnoistic team at Walter Reed for analysis.

When the Asian virus was received at Walter Reed in early May work continuing literally "around the clock" quickly showed it to be markedly different from any previously known strains of flu virus. It was soon determined that persons in this country possessed no antibody (a measure of immunity) for the virus thus indictaing the general susceptibility of the population to Asian flu. Further studies suggested that existing vaccines or even natural infection with "ordinary" type A flu viruses conferred no immunity to the new agent.

The rapid spread of the disease from the Far East to other parts of the world coupled with the relatively high attack rates involving all age groups have served to substantiate the prediction of Drs. Meyer, Hilleman, Miesse, Crawford and Bankhead expressed in their article regarding "the potential importance of the new viruses as a major health problem in the U.S.A. and probably much of the world."



Within days after the virus was received at Walter Reed in May, representative samples were sent to the six pharmaceutical firms licensed to make influenza vaccine and work was immediately begun on the development of a satisfactory vaccine to combat the disease. To date about six million doses have been produced and an estimated eighty-five million will be produced by the end of the year.

Dr. Meyer says that the longer it takes the disease to spread, the better prepared the nation will be to meet it because of the constant increase in the supply of vaccine. At the present time the U. S. Public Health Service reports there have been over 100,000 cases of Asian flue in the United States. As cooler weather arrives it is assumed that the disease may reach epidemic proportions. The illnesses described thus far have been no more severe than ordinary flu and it is hoped this will remain the case through the winter months.

At the present time Dr. Meyer is taking pediatric residency training at North Carolina Memorial Hospital. Being a native of Palestine, Texas and a former resident of Conway, Ark., Dr. Meyer is often asked how he happened to come to Chapel Hill to complete his training." I knew Dr. Curnen, not personally but by reputation as a pediatrician and virologist, and felt that studying under him would be an excellent opportunity to obtain pediatric training while at the same time continuing in research work in his laboratory."

Dr. Meyer was speaking of Dr. Edward C. Curnen Jr., Professor and Head of the Department of Pediatrics of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, who is known for his work on Coxsackie and other viruses.

Dr. Meyer is a graduate of Hendrix College of Conway, Ark. and the University of Arkansas School of Medicine.He has spent the past four years in the army and the last three in virus research at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research. He has published nine papers in scientific journals and is currently working on two additional publications.

Yack Publication Poses Problems

By DALE WHITE FIELD

"No Duke students in the Yack this year," promises Yack Editor Gene Whitehead. But actually this is one of Whitehead's lesser problems as work comes into full swing on this year's publication.

Between now and the middle of October all the class pictures must be taken. Then the pictures must be arranged in alphebetical order. Picture numbering and identification lasts up until Christmas time.

In November the beauty contest takes place, at which time 15 girls are chosen to fill the beauty section of the annual. Out of these 15 one girl will be chosen as the Queen. The remaining girls will represent the Queen's court.

After Christmas the final selection of pictures is made. By the middle of January the pace slows down for about two weeks when the proof reading begins.

When the proof reading is all through the book goes to press. The plates are made by the Charlotte Engraving Company and the actual printing is done by the Washburn Printing Company.

The 1957-58 Yackety Yack will be radically different in organization. Classifying the sections of the book by the month will be dropped. This has been incorporated into the Yack for the past two years.

In commenting on the organization of the book, Whitehead said, "We are making an attempt to make a book which will be photographically and artistically up to the high standards to which Yack's in the past have adhered; while at the same time recording for the students a review of their year which they will find enjoyable, and easy to handle and use. In other words, we are trying to organize and index the book as completely as possible."

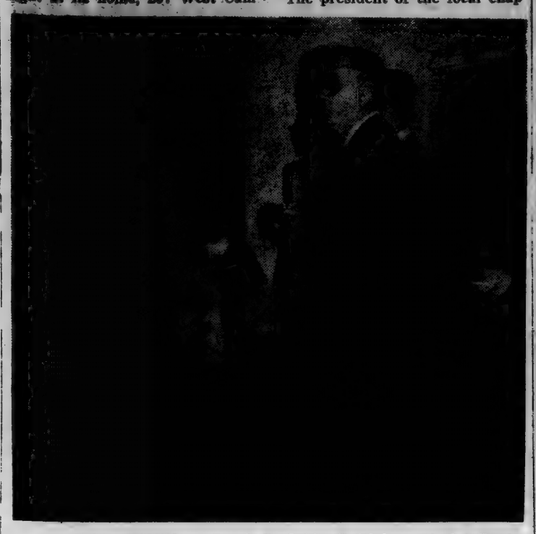
Resigns Commission

COLUMBIA, S. C., —AP— Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. has resigned his commission as a naval reserve officer obviously in protest against the sending of federal troops into Little Rock, Ark., to enforce integration in a high school there.



In a letter this week to Rear Admiral G. C. Crawford, commandant of the Sixth District at Charleston, the Governor said:

" Because of the recent change in official attitude on the federal level toward the personal and property rights of American citizens, I find that my commission as an officer in the U. S. Naval Reserve is no longer compatible with my duties as governor of South Carolina.

The president of the local chapter, Bob Burroughs, said after the open house that the event was a tremendous success. "I'm glad we had this event while the rooms are sparkling new," he added.

Sorority Rush: Pandemonium For UNC Girls Will End On Wednesday

By MARY MOORE MASON

"Hurry, Hurry!"

"Come on, we can't be late!"

What's all the excitement about? Who are these hoards swarming across the Carolina campus, and what's their hurry? Maybe it's the Carolina track team going out for early practice, or maybe its a group getting ready for the annual DUkathon race from here to Durham

But no, it's none of these. It's just a group of young U.N.C. ladies on their way to a rush party.

Pandemonium has reigned in the dorms for the last week as the 268 girls who are going through rush discussed sororities, picked out that special dress to wear to the party, and made frantic last minute checks to be sure that they had on the all important blue name tag and two brown loafers instead of one black and one brown.

The first official meeting of the rushees was the Pan Hellenic tea held Friday before last. At this time all the rushees went to the main lounge of Graham Memorial where they went through a receiving line composed of the officers of Pan Hell and the presidents of each sorority. The rush chairmen and one representative of each sorority were also at the tea.

Then on Monday night the first round of parties began and each rushee visited three sororities. On Tuesday night the same round of parties was continued with the rushees visiting the other three houses.

Ask any rushee what she remembered the most about these parties and she would probably tell you about the ice water. The ice water? There is a Pan Hell rule that says nothing can be served at the first round of rush parties but ice water. After drinking ice water at three parties a night and then running from the Alpha Delta Pi house to the Kappa Delta house to the Tri Delta house, the strain begins to show on the rushees in more ways than one. Of course, each sorority does think up an original way to serve the ice water. one sorority served it from a wooden tub, another had cakes of ice with frozen flowers floating in it, and a third served it in fraternity mugs.

Wednesday, a day of rest for the rushees, was anything but a day of rest for the sorority girls. For, each sorority was working on its next Cecil B. DeMille production to be given Thursday and Friday nights. Elaborate costumes were being finished out of crepe paper and cheese cloth; those final touches were being added to the scenery; and each sorority was having a dress rehersal of what it was sure would be an Oscar winning performance.

The A.D. Pi's came out for the first round with a musical take-off on "My Fair Lady" with Professor Henry Higgins, a Carolina alumnus of the class of 1928, persuading Eliza Domuch, a fair lady in the guise of a London flower girl, to go to U.N.C. For their second party, they had the theme "Castle Beneathe the Sea." In this skit a confused Carolina rushee has a dream that she has been transported beneath the sea where she finds out from the mermaids that they also have sororities. She is confronted with such sororities as Omicron Octi Pi with "the eight-armed grip," and Iota Eta Eel who represents a really "electric" sorority. Finally, of course, she discovers her castle beneath the sea.

The Alpha Gamma Deltas first production had the theme of "Shake, Rattle, and Roll," a musical satire of Carolina life built around a dice game with the girls dressed with dice on their heads. Their second party had as its theme the U.N.C basektball team. In musical form, it told the story of the success of the team.

The Chi Omega's first production was on the idea of the "Lucky Strike Hit Parade," featuring songs, and soft dances. At this party the Chi O's had a surprise guest. Monitor came in and interviewed some of the rushees during the party. They also used the "My Fair Lady" theme in their second party, entitled "My Fair Rushee." In this skit the sorority presented humorously in dream sequence what their impressions of rush were when they came to Carolina.

The Delta Delta Deltas first had an "Artist" party featuring a huge pallette as scenery. As the artist painted he explained the use of color, and the mood of each color was carried out by a dance. Then on Thursday, the Tri Delta house was converted to a graceful southern mansion with a mammy, butler, cast of Southern belles, and mint juleps served as refreshments.

The Kappa Deltas went to the North Pole for an "Eskimo" party, so naturally the ice water that they served that night was in appropriate keeping with the theme. The next night they had "K.D.'S Hades," given in the form of a radio program from station UBKD. In this skit all the K.D.'s are joined in Hades by an angel who decides that it would be much nicer to be here with this group of girls than lonely up in Paradise. The "devils brew" that was served at the party definitely added to the mood of the party.

The Pi Phis started out with the saga of Wild Bill Hiccup and Gopher Annie with all the girls in Western costumes and then the second round had a "Pi Phi Debutante" party. This party told the history of the sorority, Pi Phi was explained to Mert McGoo, a rushee from Dogpatch, N.C. Then she was introduced to some Pi Phis of the past such as Eve, Cleopatra, Scherazade, Scarlet O'Hara, and Barbara Fritchie.

But of course the skits are only part of rush parties. There is the line of singing girls that the rushees have to walk between when they arrive at each party. The same line sometimes gives the impression of a manual paddling machine when the girls go out through it and each sorority girl seems to feel the need to reach out and pat them on the back as a sign of "goodbye. and we hope you come back, etc."

Sunday there will be frantic clean-up efforts in each house, for that afternoon the rushees will be given a tour of each sorority house. Monday there will be a song fest at each party, if, that is, over ten people are still free from laryengitis by then.

On Tuesday evening there will be a series of progressive dinner parties. Wednesday will be the big day. rush will be over, and some 200 sorority girls won't know what to do with all their spare time. Now, alas, they will have time to study. And they will have time to date. Alas again, fraternity rush starts then, so here we go again.

Booters In First Meet Tomorrow

An untried Carolina soccer team will kick off the season Monday afternoon at 3 p.m. when it meets ever-tough Roanoke College on Fetzer Field.

The opening game promises to be one of the toughest matches the Tar Heel booters will face all year as Roanoke has long proven to be a soccer power in the Mid-Dixie conference.

Last year's game with Roanoke was called off, but a talented Roanoke eleven invaded Chapel Hill in 1955 and defeated Coach Marvin Allen's squad by a 3-2 count.

In seeking revenge for the 1955 loss, Coach Allen will be relying heavily on a hustling forward line which has been impresive so far during scrimmages.

Defensively, several players will make their debut in new positions. Jim Rattay, a fullback last year, will play his first game at the vital goalie position.

Using the three fullback defense, Coach Allen will be trying out Pete Killinger at right fullback and Bob Borden at center fullback, both of whom played different positions last year. Ted Youhanna, who has played fullback before, will handle the left fullback position.

The team held a final drill before the game Friday by playing the freshman team in a 20-minute scrimmage and then holding an inter-squad game. The first string beat the freshmen 1-0, and later went on a scoring spree in the squad game to beat the second team by a 4-1 score.

Bob Fetzer Gets Award

Robert A. Fetzer, better known as "Coach Bob" stepped on the field at Kenan Stadium before yesterday's game to receive the first Service to Sports Award presented by the Atlantic Coast Sport Writers Association.

The Award presented by the president of the Association Frank Spencer, was given in recognitation of Coach Bob's long and unselfish service to amature sports.

Coach Bob has coached football at Davidson, N. C. State, and for many years at Carolina. He is called the father of track in the Carolinas, both in the collegiat and amature field. Throughout the South he is known for his promotion of clean and healthful recreation.

Cummings Intercepts

Sohpomore quarterback Jack Cummings leaps high in the air to intercept a pass by Clemson quarterback Bill Barbary in the fourth quarter yesterday. The play led to the last Carolina touch down. Tar Heel players are Ed Lipski (44) and Fred Swearingen (51).

Tar Heels Get First Victory

From there, it took the Tar Heels just ten plays to cross the Clemson goal line again.

This time it was halfbacks Jim Schuler and Ron Marquette who shouldered the burden for Carolina. The two chopped away at the Clemson line and moved the ball to the six-yard line. Reed then went up the middle to the four and Don Coker moved it to the 1. From there, Schuler took a handoff from Reed and dived across. Blazer's try was no good and it was 13-0 for the Tar Heels with 9:26 left in the half.

The Tar Heels carried the two-touchdown advantage off the field at halftime as neither team threatened for the rest of the half.

The final two tallies came in the fourth quarter, one at the beginning and the other at the end.

Number three came on a 13 yard pass play from Reed to end Buddy Payne with 10:50 remaining. The play climaxed a 55 yard drive by Carolina and was the first time Clemson had yielded an aerial touchdown since its final game in 1955.

This time practically all the Tar Heel backs were in on the drive as Tatum substituted frequently with equal effect. Fullback John Haywood, Schuler and DeCantis were the big men in the drive. Fullback Bob Shupin missed the point after attempt.

A 55-yard pass play from sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings to junior end Takey Crist set up the final Carolina score with 2:15 left in the game. Cummings had intercepted a Bill Barbary pass on the Carolina 29 moments earlier. The tremendous pass by the cagey sophomore signal-caller two plays later from the Carolina 34 to the Clemson 13.

Don Coker, quickly coming into his own as a halfback, took just two tries to make the score read 26-0. The big Reidsville halfback went from the 13 to the nine, then skirted left end for the score. Ray Butler missed the extra point.

It would be impossible to single out any individual stars for the Tar Heels. It was a terrific team job from beginning to end with the Carolina line performing nothing short of great.

The Tar Heels were not "scared" yesterday. They were possessed with the desire to prove their ability and that's exactly what they did.

The victory was especially sweet for Tatum because he saw his ball club turn form an unconfident and reserve team to a bold, hard-charging aggregate in a matter of just seven days.

Statistically, the Tar Heels out did Clemson in every department. They picked up 207 yards on the ground and 108 through the air. Clemson was able to amass but 78 and 67 respectively.

Frank Howard Says Tigers Just Got Beat

By BILL KING

Clemson Coach Frank Howard got pushed into a corner by a group of sportswriters who wanted to know "what the heck" after yesterday's 26-0 Carolina victory.

"I'll tell you what the heck," Howard answered. "They just beat us and thas it."

The articulate Tiger mentor, who always sounds like he's got a big plug of tobacco in his mouth and usually does, recapitulated parts of the game quietly and came up with the conclusion that Carolina was the better ball club.

"Jim's (Tatum) got a good bunch of boys," Howard remarked. "Their line was lots better than ours and their backs are big and fast. I don't believe this club is good as the ones he had at Maryland, but they're a good group."

Asked if he would have had his club pass more if the ball had not been wet, Howard replied. "I reckon so, but you can't throw passes when their line is in your face all the time."

Did the 66-0 win over Presbyterian help or hurt the Tigers yesterday? "Shucks," Howard said, "it didn't make any difference one way or the other. The difference was the lines. The Tar Heels came in there with more velocity."

Auburn Nips Vols, 7-0

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 28 —(AP)—Auburn's massive line shackled favored Tennessee on the ground and sprung its own backs loose for repeated gains today as the Tigers defeated the Volunteers 7-0 in a Southeastern Conference football game.

Tennessee, defending conference champion, was one-touchdown favorite. But Auburn, smarting from a humiliating 55-7 lacing by the Vols last season, got revenge convincingly.

Officials Decide On Caravan Trip

By ED ROWLAND

Student and administrative officials decided Friday to provide busses for a caravan to the Maryland game in College Park Oct. 19.

Attending a meeting in the office of the Dean of Student Affairs were Ray Jeffries Sonny Evans, President of the student body; Frankie Black, head cheerleader; Frank Inman and Dave Jones, President and Vice-President of the University Club; and Miss Martha Decker and Miss Lu Ann Thornton, representatives of the Dean of Women.

Plans were made for 10 to 15 busses to carry 300 to 400 students to the game. Queen City Trailways Company of Charlotte will handle transportation arrangements.

The itinerary as outlined to President Evans by Jack Pharr of Queen City and approved is:

Leave Chapel Hill at 3 p.m. Friday, Oct. 13. For the convenience of fraternities or other groups chartering separate busses and those persons having late labs, several busses will not leave until 5 p.m.

Travel to Washington, D. C. via Richmond with supper and rest stops en route. The busses will be at the disposal of their occupants as to stops.

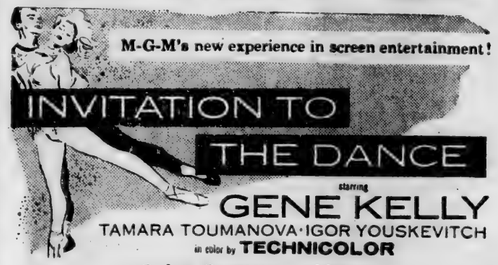
Arrive in Washington about 8 p.m. (9 p.m. Washington time), check into hotel. Hotel arrangements will be made by the transportation company.

Busses will leave hotels about noon for College Park. Game starts at 1 p.m. Busses will remain to furnish transportation back to the hotel after the game, then if the occupants desire, they will be available to go back to College Park for parties that night and return to the hotel.

Some busses will leave Washington by 5 p.m. to return to Chapel Hill for the convenience of those wishing to study and those who don't want to remain over Saturday night.

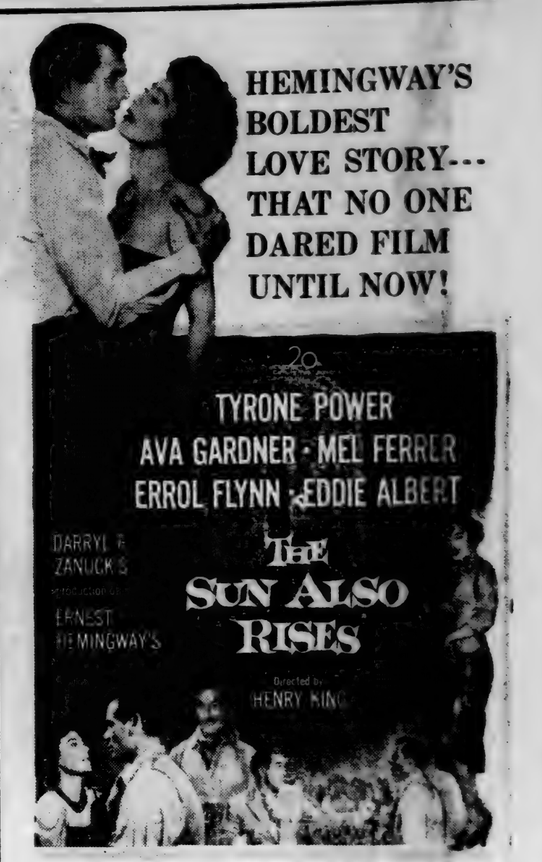
Sunday, busses may leave at any time. But all must be away from Washington by 5 p.m. Washington time. This will give ample time to attend the Washington Redskins game.

500 Tickets to the game remain on sale to students at the athletic ticket office in Woollen Gym. Athletic Business Manager Vernon Crook said yesterday no tickets would be available to students after Wednesday, Oct. 2. They sell for $3.75, Mr. Crook said.



Caravan tickets will go on sale Oct. 7, and will remain on sale through Oct. 16.

Prices, with the exception of transportation costs, are indefinite yet but are expected to be no more than $4.50 per room per night. Bus fare will be $10.50 per person round trip.



The University Club will handle ticket sales and other arrangements.

Leader Warns UNC May Lose NSA Committee

Local National Student Association officials today called for campus-wide interest in keeping the desegregation committee of NSA at the University of North Carolina.

Local NSA Chairman Whit Whitfield said UNC is faced with losing headquarters for the top NSA committee unless "forceful leadership and sincere interest" can be rallied here for the group.

Whitfield said "several" other universities have indicated their interest in sponsoring the committee, which UNC will lose unless "we act immediately to keep it on campus."

Purpose of the committee is to disseminate information and questionaires to schools all over the nation, then compile results for the national office of NSA.

"Rather than do a poor job, we'd prefer that another university get the committee," Whitfield declared. "But with forceful leadership and sincere interest we can keep it on the UNC campus."

Whitfield said any persons interested in working with the committee should contact him through the student government offices.

Hallford Will Index Actions

The student body attorney-general and his staff this year plan to carry out a plan of codifying legislative actions, according to Sonny Hallford, attorney-general.

"We have long felt the need for a compilation of actions taken by the legislative. It will also serve in the capacity of lending continuity to the actions taken over the years," Hallford said.

"It will serve as a reference for actions of the past, present and a place to add future actions. Thus we will be able to see at a glance what has taken place in our legislature," he continued.

The first edition of legislative actions included those acts between May 1946, and May 1954. "We hope to bring up to date the idea begun in 1954 and to keep the codification up to date by inserting future acts in their proper places," Hallford stated .

As was done in the first edition, the legislative acts will be grouped by general subject matter into divisions with appropriate headings.

The divisions will be further divided into chapters, each of which deals with a particular phase of the division subject. Under the chapter headings will appear the titles, each of which is a separate bill or other item.

Hallford Named Symposium Head

Officers Will Name Advisor From Faculty

Sonny Hallford, student government attorney general, was a elected chairman of Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs by acclamation at a meeting of the Symposium general committee yesterday in Graham Memorial Building.

Other officers elected include: Connie Whitaker, vice chairman; Mary Jane Fisher, secretary; and Al Goldsmith, treasurer.

There was no discussion of the program for the spring Symposium, since the newly elected officers will have to meet and appoint a faculty adviser.

Former Chairman Frank Crowther, who presided at the meeting until the new officers were elected, resigned his post during the summer reportedly due to a conflict between Crowther and the general committee.

The nominating committee presented a slate of two candidates per office on which the members of the Symposium voted. The newly elected secretary, Mary Jane Fisher, was nominated from the floor.

Other nominees for the offices include the following: Martha Richardson for chairman, Loyd Dorrity for vice chairman, Jody Albert and Barbara Moore for secretary and Ed Levy for treasurer.

Elected by acclamation were Chairman Hallford, Vice chairman Connie Whitaker and Treasurer Al Goldsmith.

Hodges Is Recognized For Service To N. C.

Governor Luther H. Hodges was honored here Monday at a luncheon at 12:30 p. m. in Lenior Hall on the University campus by the North Carolina Business Foundation.

Governor Hodges' extraordinary services to the state in connection with business expansion and efforts to enhance the economic well-being of North Carolinians were recognized.

Chancellor William B. Aycock today said, "The School of Business Administration and indeed all of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill are pleased to cooperate with the Business Foundation and to have a part in honoring Governor Luther H. Hodges.

"It is proper to do formal honor to Governor Hodges in recognition of his energy and vision in marshalling our state's educational, industrial, financial and research resources and bringing them to bear on building up our state's economy and improving the well-being of all of our people."

The Business Foundation is an agency which financially undergirds the UNC School of Business Administration. Organized after World War II, it has bolstered the financial foundations of teaching and research in business.

Governor Hodges was presented by President William C. Friday. Dean Maurice W. Lee of the School of Business Administration expressed "New Viewpoints on Business Education."

GOV. LUTHER HODGES

Demonstration Set For Today, Kasper Asserts

WASHINGTON — (AP) — John Kasper, self-styled rabble rouser and campaigner against classroom integration, said Monday the Seaboard White Citizens Council will picket the White House today.

Kasper, executive secretary of the council, said pickets will protest against use of federal troops to help enforce integration in Little Rock.

He said the marchers also will protest against today's meeting between President Eisenhower and four southern governers. The governors will discuss with the president the problems of integration.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(AP)— Gov. Faubus said Monday he likely would call a special legislative session to deal with integration at Central High School where nine Negroes began their second week of integrated classes, still under the protection of paratroopers.

"At the moment, it appears very likely there will be a special session of the Legislature," Faubus said, adding that legislative action now appeared to be the only "recourse for a peaceful solution of the problem."

Faubus, walking into his capitol office which he has avoided most of the time since the integration trouble began, was soon surrounded by newsmen. When asked if he thought that there would be no more violent incidents at the school, Faubus replied:

"I hope so, but I don't know."

Kasker said in a statement the White Citizens Council, other unnamed organizations and individuals will begin marching along Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House at noon, EDT, tomorrow.

Meeting with Eisenhower will be Govs. McKeldin of Maryland, Clement of Tennessee, Collins of Florida and Hodges of North Carolina. Gov. Griffin of Georgia also had been named by the recent southern Governors Conference to go to the White House.

However, Griffin announced on Monday he will boycott the meeting because it will take up integration in general and not be limited to the Little Rock situation.

The Governors Conference proposed only that the committee talk about measures to get troops out of Little Rock. Eisenhower in agreeing to the meeting broadened the subject matter.

Kasper said the four southern governors who will meet with Eisenhower "have long ago committed themselves to the same race war against their own white people . . . as Eisenhower and the Supreme Court are spawning on a national basis."

He said the meeting should bring together Eisenhower and Griffin, or the president and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, whom Kasper described as "the greatest states' rights leader of all time."

The Seaboard White Citizens Council has several thousand members in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Florida and Alabama, Kasper said. He declined to give an exact figure.

UNC Physician Lauds Press Responsibility

By Robert H. Bartholomew

"Our great writers have given us much of our finest literary heritage through the seething and hectic crucible of newspaper reporting."

This statement was made by Dr. Warner Wells of the University North Carolina School of Medicine.

Dr. Wells, this year's winner of the O. Max Gardner Award, had been asked for a statement on the American press in connection with the observance of National Newspaper Week, Oct. 1-8.

Perhaps no other physician in North Carolina has had as much dealings with the press as Dr. Wells. In 1950 he became surgical consultant to the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, which immediately brought him in close contact with the American press.

Dr. Wells translated and edited the work and it was published two years ago on the 10th anniversary of the historic bombing. The title of the work was "Hiroshima Dairy" and it immediately became a best seller. As the popularity of the book grew—it was published in numerous foreign language editions —the writers of the fourth estate sought Dr. Wells for interviews.

This spring Dr. Wells was presented the O. Max Gardner Award. This award goes yearly to the faculty member of the Consolidated University of North Carolina who renders the most outstanding service to mankind. "Hiroshima Diary" won the award for Dr. Wells.

"The finest thing in the whole experience of the 'Hiroshima Diary' development," said Dr. Wells "was the concept it gave me of the decency, the quality and the morality of the American press."

Dr. Wells is well known to his colleagues as a medical historian. He talks as easily on such great in men in medicine as Pasteur, Lister, Vasalius, Galen or Hippocrates as he does on the effects of an atomic bomb on the human body.

His frends say that aside from being a scientist and historian, Dr. Wells also is a philosopher. He took a philosophic attitude when he said, "The troubles of this world will ultimately be solved by an enlightened press operating in the field of international comparative journalism. It must be encouraged and supported, for informed peoples is the ultimate answer to all our problems. You can't shut out

Grad Returns As Instructor

Edward Marvin Smith, a University of North Carolina graduate from Matthews, has returned to Chapel Hill as an instructor in the UNC School of Pharmacy.

Dean E. A. Brecht today announced the appointment of Smith as instructor, to teach courses in drug store management, accounting and pharmaceutical jurisprudence.

A 1953 graduate of UNC with a B. S. degree in Pharmacy, Smith recently completed his active duty as a U. S. Navy officer. In his undergraduate days he was a member of Rho Chi, national honorary society in pharmacy, and was president of the Dialectic Senate. He received the Pharmacy Senate Award upon graduation.

Light Storm Damage

By The Associated Press

A coastal North Carolina storm left only light damage and no reported injuries in its wake. It apparently was confined to the Wilmington area of the state's southeastern coast.

Residents checking damage under sullen, threatening skies found the biggest problem was thick slime carried into homes in low areas by tides which are running five to six feet above normal in some places.

Health Policy Date Extended

The deadline for enrolling in the accident and health insurance policy offered Carolina students has been extended to October 15, according to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

Jefferies said both he and student government officers urge Carolina students to take advantage of this policy which offers "terrific coverage for the money."

Jefferies emphasized the policy for married students which can be had for $14 with coverage for husband, wife and dependants.

So far this year, 1,800 have enrolled in the policies for single and married students. Jefferies said this number is below the number enrolled in a less-complete policy last year.

Anyone interested in taking out either of the two policies offered by Chamblee Insurance Agency of Raleigh is asked to go by the dean of students affairs office.

The meeting is open to all persons interested in scientific subjects.

Storm Deaths Climb

NAHA, Okinawa (AP)—Typhoon Faye, the most savage storm in recent Okinawa history, is believed to have killed at least 60 persons and perhaps more than 100.

Twenty are known dead—including one American Marine—from the surprise assault by 146 M.P.H. winds that raked the U. S. fortress island for 10 hours Thursday. The U. S. Army reported 49 other Okinawans missing. Other sources put the figure at 100, mostly fishermen

"Break Arms And Legs"

WASHINGTON (AP)—A former officer of the Michigan Federation of Labor has testified the Teamsters Union used death threats, rigged elections and links with the underworld to build up power in his staff.

Robert Scott also told the Senate Rackets Committee that James R. Hoffa, midwest boss of the teamsters, threatened "to break both my arms and legs" when Scott threatened to resign from the federation in protest against the way Hoffa and others were changing the constitution. Scott said he resigned anyway.

Syria Not Threat—Saud

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP)—Escorted by a squadron of Syria's new Soviet Migs, Arabia's King Saud flew home expressing belief that this country's deals with Moscow are no threat to her neighbors.

In a departing statement, broadcast by Damascus radio, he declared: "I am certain from what I felt during my brief stay in this sister country that Syria poses no threat to any of her neighbors and it is unreasonable that there should be any such inclination."

At the same time he announced, "with complete frankness," that Saudi Arabia would resist aggression from any direction against Syria or any other Arab country.

Morse Attacks Faubus

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen Morse (D-Ore) has described the speech of Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus last night as "intellectually dishonest and deceptive."

In a statement, Morse said of Faubus:

"He forgot to tell the TV audience that he, more than anyone else, is responsible for the necessity of sending federal troops into Little Rock because of his use of National Guard troops to keep nine Negro children from attending school in accordance with a court order.

W. B. Aycock Will Be First Installed Chancellor Of UNC

By ANN FRYE

William Brantley Aycock will become the first UNC chancellor ever to be installed in that administrative post in ceremonies Saturday, Oct. 12, in Kenan Stadium.

North Carolina and University officials will be present for "red letter" day activities honoring the new chancellor.

In addition to installation ceremonies, the University will be celebrating University Day on Oct. 12.

Classes will cease at 9:30 a.m. Oct. 12 and University offices will close at 10 a. m. to enable students and staff members to attend the ceremonies in Kenan Stadium, which will get underway ta 10:30 a. m.

Various receptions, luncheons and exhibits on the Carolina cmapus are scheduled in honor of the chancellor.

Chancellor Aycock was appointed to the top UNC post last February 25 by trustees of the Consolidated University on recommendation of President William Friday and trustee committees.

Aycock was named to replace ofrmer Chancellor Robert House, who retired in June. When House first took office, he was known as Dean House in the capacity he occupied . The title of his office was later changed to chancellor.

When Aycock was appointed in February, University, Vice President William Carmichael said he "has the character and characteristics enabling him to fullfill the promise of the noble name (in education which he bears."

During one summer he was in India and Pakistan as personal assistant to Dr. Frank Graham, United Nations representative to these countries.

Chancellor Aycock is co-author of a book, "Military Law Under the Uniform Code of Military Justice," written in collaboration with Col. Seymour W. Wurfel, judge advocate of the Fifth Corps in Germany.

An outstanding scholar, Aycock received his master's degree from Carolina in 1937 and began teaching history in Greensboro High School that fall. For three years he taught in Greensboro, then took a job with the state headquarters of the National Youth Administration in Raleigh, helping set up vocational projects.

In 1942 he was called into active duty with the Army as a first lieutenant, and achieved an outstanding combat record, winning the Silver Star for bravery in action in Germany and also the Bronze Star Medal and the Legion of Merit.

After the Army, Aycock resumed his studies at Chapel Hill to fulfill an ambition to become a lawyer. He led his class here and was winner of the top job in the Law School, becoming editor in chief of the Law Review.

Aycock remained in the Law School as an assistant professor, later became dean of the Law School and finally chancellor of the University.

No Time For Duplicity, Automotive Labyrinth Should Be Unmangled

The town and campus parking problem is a perpetual spur in the University's side.

But it was the ubiquitous understanding that such a restriction was to be only a temporary arrangement.

Automobile registration monies were to be neatly allocated to a general coffer from which additional parking lots were to be constructed as soon as possible.

Now the University has agreed to build a parking lot without emptying student registration coffers.

What we suggest is that the University use these monies — since students paid them with that understanding—to continue enlarging parking facilities, rather than terminating auto registration fees.

Some contend that freshmen should not be allowed to maintain cars on campus under any circumstances.

There may be some justification for this argument. But it would be the ultimate in duplicity to permanently deny car maintenance privileges to freshmen in light of the original understanding that:

Ownership privileges would be reinstated as soon as additional parking facilities were available.

Along these lines, we republish an editorial from the Louisiana State Reveille simply to highlight the fact that we are not alone in this miserable labyrinth:

If you are a student who drives a car to classes, the chances are good that you get plenty of exercise hiking across the campus anyway.

Parking problems aren't unique at LSU. Almost every large college has its share of them. Increased numbers of students, more money at home to buy Junior and Mary a new car when they go to college, and expansion construction programs combine to tie up administrations in knots and turn campus security officers sour overnight.

When campus buildings begin to bulge at the seams, where do the new buildings arise? In most cases the acquisition of new land is not possible, so there is only one alternative: empty areas that were once covered with green grass or black-topped parking areas are now being excavated for new buildings.

Unfortunately, the worst is yet to come. More students mean more buildings and more buildings mean less spaces for parking. It's as simple as that.

Obviously not all students that want them are going to be able to have cars on campus; the line has to be drawn somewhere. This semester the axe fell on all freshmen who were not physically disabled.

This undoubtedly seems a harsh blow to those freshmen who had planned on bringing a car to college. But the administration has well rationalized their case.

In the first place, they think that freshmen need to spend weekends on campus instead of on wheels. They reason that freshmen are going through an orientation period of adjustment to a new environment, new demands are being made of them, and the changeover from high school to college work may not always be an easy one.

The cultailment in number of automobiles cluttering up the campus may have to be made more drastic in the future. It may eventually boil down to graduate students, or seniors, or those over the ripe old age of twenty-five.

The decision may be made on the basis of grade averages, or perhaps only those who live off-campus will be permitted the luxury of six-cylindered transportation.

If the latter happens we suppose there will be a general exodus out of the dorms.

Even the faculty will not always have it so good. From reliable sources we understand that the convenient parking lot in front of Coates Hall is doomed eventually to make way for future expansion.

There are several possible solutions: the number of cars may be cut down by fair means or foul or a few existing buildings may be torn down for more parking lots.

Anybody want to buy a bicycle?

Vascillating Eisenhower: 'Civilian War' Raves On . . .

Nomination for th most brief, self-explanatory editorial of the year from the Associated Press:

"President Eisenhower ended his 27-day New England vacation today and returned to Washington . . ."

Ailing Ike has been accused of aggravating the Little Rock fiasco due to his "vascillating policy — unstable and failing to instantly assert.

We'd be better satisfied if Ike would merely stop vascillating between Newport and White Sulphur Springs, Ga.

Russo-Deals: Kidney Slash

President Eisenhower's Atoms For Peace program looks more and more ludicrous each hand the Russians double-deal in the lethal game of cold war.

Just yesterday, Russia announced intention to rig its space-flying baby moons with a radio voice no one else can easily hear.

This indicates the turn-coat attitude upon which the Soviet Union bases its diplomatic negotiations—turn-coat and dagger-in-the-back.

A publicity agreement of a year ago was shattered by the Russo-duplicity. A reciprocal agreement stipulated that each nation might follow the paths of so-called satelites.

Ellipsoid . . . Got Kicked First Here?

Whit Whitfield

Something glorious has happened on the campus. We have won another football game. Not merely won, but whitewashed the defending Atlantic Coast Conference champs, a highly touted Clemson team which crushed little Presbyterian last week.

We are inclined to think that Frank Howard overplayed his hand a bit when he ran up such a large score, hoping, no doubt, to impress sportswriters with power which he obviously did not have this year. Another thing which caused Carolina fans to perk up was the miserable beating which State gave the Terrible Terps of Tatums' successor, Tommy Mont.

This, coupled with our win Saturday, forecasts a brighter day for Tar Heel football. It may well be the beginning of a new era.

It might be interesting to note here that Football (yes, capitalized) was invented by none other than two Carolina gentlemen, Charlie Justice and Carl Snavely way back in 1946. Up to this time no one really knew what football was, and the name of the sport was not capitalized.

Justice and Snavely worked with Hosea Rodgers, Walt Pupa, Ted Hazelwood, Ken Powell, Mike Rubish and a host of others to quickly put the capital letter on the front, and "invent" real football. To those unbelievers, two Southern Conference championships and three bowl games (not to mention the victories over Dook) were sufficient to hush the Doubting Thomases. Since the nation's sportswriters felt it unfair to the other teams, all of the squad did not make All-America as it was anticipated. Carolina was allowed four positions on the All-American tears, but graciously decided to take only two, which of course went to the Justice-to-Weiner combination.

In 1950, the team decided to give the rest of the nation a chance, and fall back a bit in the standings. The mistake was that they fell too far behind and kept falling for seven years, gaining momentum as they did. After reaching rock bottom in 1956 they finally decided that it was time to forge ahead again. This was an extremely wise move on their part, for they had no other direction in which to move.

Last Saturday they showed how seriously they were in this respect, so it looks like we will be experiencing another "Golden Era" in Carolina football in as short a time as is reasonably possible. The only suggestion that we have is that the team not get so charitable after a few winning seasons, and stay on top.

We have room for two national championships.

"How Do You Get Him Back In?"

ODES ON MUSIC:

Tonalities From Tankanyika? Or Resolant, Redundant Rhythm

Grayson Mills

The din is overwhelming as you walk down a cluttered lobby, its walls reverberating with the pendantic crash of a drummer's rim shots.

Eagerly you make for the nearest entrance, and as you pass in are smacked by a blast of cigarette smoke. A feeling of exuberant joy or disgust fills you (depending on whichever side you're on) as you behold a scene of frenetic dancing, and a giant Negro standing on a stage, his shoulders bent and his eyes pinched tight, as he swings viciously to and fro, torturing his tenor.

The tune resembles "Turkey in the Straw," but you're not quite sure. A raspy baritone sax rips off series" of pre-arranged chords, creating an hypnotic background for the tenor man as he slips out of his coat and on to the floor without missing a single beat, exhausting himself in saxophonic tones.

This is a rhythm and blues dance and nothing in the entertainment world can match it for sheer excitement.

The scene can be in Richmond, San Francisco, Gotham, Sioux City or Tulsa ,it matters little for the appeal of this music is nationwide.

R & B is by far the biggest single money-maker in music. Yet it is also subject to the most severe criticism of all popular forms.

Captious dissenters, grasp, their hair, give a slight tug and ask themselves, "Why, Oh why, is anything so reduntant, so hackneye and used up so popular!"

The reason is simple: the times are such that it serves as an emotional release. Somehow, the repetitive honking and the jackhammer chords dissolve every care from the minds of its supporters. The beat not only produces a toe-tapping drive, it produces a feeling, though frenzied during a presentation, of complete relaxation.

Contributing also to its prolific popularity are its live presentations where its artists provide

City or Tulsa, it matters little for earth, and a place where you can get your $1.50 worth—a rarity these days.

But foremost, and above all, it is great dancing music, something modern jazz rarely is. Music has to be if it wants to enjoy the mercenary benefits of consummate support from the ones who buy the records.

While it is true, as dissenters maintain, that much of R & B, is pure nothing, it also has its classics which compare with the classics of any musical form. For example "Honky Tonk," "Sixty-Minute Man," "Honey Love" and "Night Train" were not the result of mere trite, they were inspired musical masterpieces the same as Bacchanele's "Samson and Delilah." Only the language is different.

And Rhythm and Blues has artists like Fats Domino, Little Richard, Joe Turner, Tiny Bradshaw, Sam "The Man" Taylor, and Big Jay McNeely. These men have style all their own and the greatness of clever individuality. How can a music miss with such men like these on its roll call?

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Journalism's Doubting Thomas

Gail Goodwin

You know, when I arrived at Carolina, I heard so much about the honor system. In fact, there were several lectures devoted exclusively to the fact that we as mature students were on our honor. It is too bad that one or two individuals have put a clog in the wheel and messed the whole works up.

A bunch of journalism students were running around madly before the game Saturday. Seems as if they had an assignment that went like this: go to Adlai's press conference at 11:45, take notes and then mail the typewritten news story into certain said teacher before the city newspapers came out.

This to insure that no one 'plagarize' by copying verbatim a professional news story. Well, you can imagine the difficulty the frustrated cubs had tearing to hear Adlai, racing to the nearest typewriter to rewrite it and then getting it in the mail. Of course they could have stayed home from the game or cancelled their frivolous plans for the evening to meet the deadline.

What is so absurd about all this is who would plagarize a news story anyway when thousands of copies are in abundance—even for teachers. Besides, what about the newscasts. They forgot about those.

But to get on to happy subjects, the Carolina gentlemen football players went all out to entertain their distinguished guest with a flourish of southern hospitality. Adlai really got to see a ball game. And what's with this bell tower? It went wild about 4 p.m. Saturday!

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

Automation And Aboriginal Caves

Al Walker

Most of you freshman will be writing your first themes along about now, and getting them back all messed up with red marks like "sp?" and "dangling partiples" and "comma errors" and other mistakes which have to do with the "correct" way of constructing a sentence. Most of you will be discouraged because They always mark low on the first two or three themes to show you that you're in college now, and you should know where to put your commas.

When I was a freshman, I got an "F" on my first theme. I wrote in in twenty minutes in class. The title was "What the Negro in the South Means to Me." I was depressed about the whole subject and finally ended up writing that I thought freshman English themes were not the place to discuss what the Negro in the South means to me. I later did better, but I'll never forget that first "F." It depressed me so much, not that "F," but all the red marks on all my themes, that I copied the Declaration Of Independence and marked all the errors in it with a red pencil and slipped it in with some other themes that we had to hand in. I copied the teacher's handwriting and grammar quirks pretty well, because she did not discover the trick until she started looking for Thomas Jefferson in her grade book to enter his "D" minus. Funny thing. She knew who the culprit was.

Just what is an English teacher?

An English teacher is a person who is either cursed by the devil or blessed by the angels, with a mind and two eyes, equipped only for finding fragmentary sentences, comma errors, and dangling participles.

How can one become so mechanical in one's reading and thinking? Is it possible that English teachers are predestined to be automaton copy-readers? I don't think so. It is much more likely that they have developed this uncanny "sense of commas" themselves.

It is a well-known fact that somewhere in the Florida swamps is a school devoted entirely to instructing English teachers on the art of finding trivial errors in grammar. But it is also quite evident that this school could not produce enough of the monsters to answer the queries of the many thousands of English students who are disenchanted each year in freshman English courses.

The main source of English teachers is a closely guarded secret which has been related to me by a friend of mine who used to be one of them, until he saw the light, and crossed over the bridge. It seems that there is a big black book nearly a thousand pages long, with all the grammar rules in it.

Each year all the English teachers in the world rent a large cave in Australia from the aborigines, and take a very tough examination on the book. They must have it memorized from cover to cover. My friend says that this memorization is done for two purposes. The first, to have the rules on the tip of one' tongue in the event an audacious pupil questions the teacher's red markings, and secondly, to make the teacher a babbling idiot whose mind is full of disorganized statements, which when reeled off rapidly sound like the idiot may know something, but when examined closely reveal only the shallow workings of a dictaphone.

After the teachers have passed the exam they may go back to their daily jobs; demoralizing students and thinking that they are brilliant because they have memorized a big black book.

My source says that most of these unfortunates become this way because of sordid childhoods, an inability to place their commas in the proper place, the constant grating of a piece of chalk on the blackboard by the English teacher in the reform school they attended or some other similar discontentment in the impressionable years of their life.

You probably are saying to yourself, "This guy has been marked for life."

Hell yeah, I've been marked. With a Red Pencil.

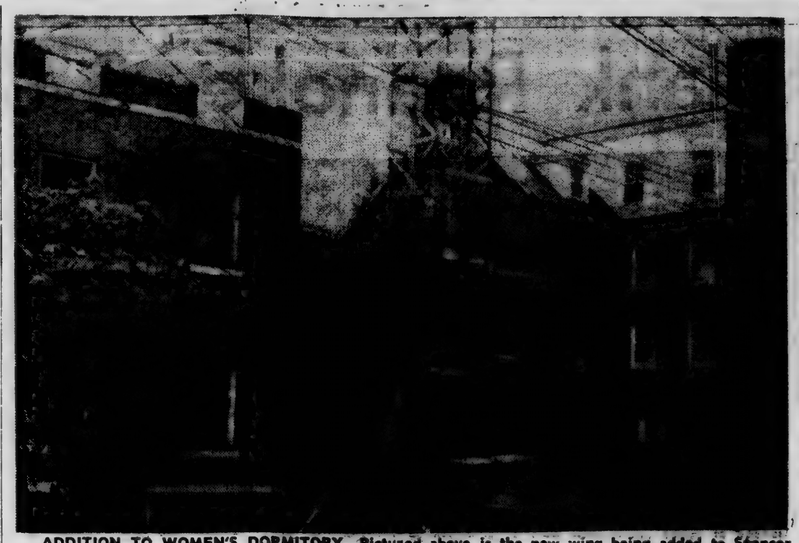
Corporation Act Outlined Here

Liberal provisions and protective features of North Carolina's new Business Corporation Act were outlined by the acting dean of Duke University's law school at closing sessions of a three-day legal institute.

Prof. E. R. Latty, who served as institute planning chairman, discussed the history of the new act, stressing that "a grass roots demand for the new law among the state's lawyers" led to the General Statutes Commission undertaking the project of having the new law drafted.

More than 325 North Carolina lawyers attended the institute, sponsored by the North Carolina Bar Association, and law schools of the University of North Carolina, Duke University and Wake Forest College.

Two Charlotte men also spoke Saturday morning: William F. Mulliss, discussing "Fundamental Changes" and Frank W. Snepp, "Dissolution and Liquidation." Friday night speakers included Dean Carroll W. Weathers of Wake Forest Law School; Oliver Carter of Wilmington; and Prof. Leonard S. Powers of University of Florida Law School, who was visiting lecturer at UNC last year.



One main purpose of the Business Corporation Act, Dean Latty explained, is "to fill gaps that existed in the old Corporation Law of 1901, which was rather skimpy and left many areas uncovered." Latty cited several dozen instances where the old law said "nothing at all."

The spirit and philosophy of the new acts is manifested through two main currents, Dean Latty said, describing the first as "a spirit of liberalism to enable corporations to do many things quickly and without too much red tape, removing many of the old time restrictions that hampered corporations.

"Protective features were enacted," Latty continued, "in those areas where it was felt that either the public or creditors or shareholders or certain kinds of shareholders—such as preferred or minority—needed protection."

Dean Latty concluded that "both in its liberal provisions and in its protective features the new law has a number of aspects which are novel not only to North Carolina but to American corporation law in general."

Among the fundamental changes cited by Mulliss are charter amendments, mergers consolidations and sales of all assets. Except for a few instances, he added these four types of changes "require shareholder approval and can give rise to Dissenters' Rights."

Jones Heads GMAB Committee

The Graham Memorial Activities Board is in the process of organizing its forum committee for another year's activities, according to Benny Thomas, president of GMAB.

Bill Jones, senior from Louisville, Ky., is chairman of the forum committee. Jones is an industrial relations major.

The purpose of the forum committee is to bring together students, members of the faculty and interested townpeople in order to discuss all phases of issues which are prevelent or which might arises on campus.

Topics for discussions, for instance, might relate to clothing prevalent or which might arise on scare.

This committee is not to be confused with the Carolina Forum, as it deals only with local personalities. Local speakers will be on heard at the discussions from time to time.

Jones has asked all interested students to come by the information desk in Graham Memorial and fill out an application for this committee.

BILL JONES

GMAB Committee Seeks Members

If you visit Graham Memorial Monday afternoon at about 4:00 you will probably see a group of students sitting around the table in the Grail Room discussing everything from Freudian movies to reception for the cadets who will be visiting the campus this weekend.

This is the Graham Memorial Activities Board, and they are now in the process of choosing the members of their committees.

Mary Moore Mason, chairman of the recreation committee, is particularly interested in completing the choice of members for that committee because it is one of the committees that is already in the process of sponsoring campus events.

MARY MOORE MASON

The recreation committee, according to Miss Mason, a senior from Roanoke, Va., has as its purpose the offering of entertainment and recreation to the members of GMAB executive and committee members and the campus. Consequently, it offers dance lessons, bridge lessons, and co-sponsors the "Y" Night talent show. It also is in charge of Rod and Gun Field Day and along with the dance and receptions committees is in charge of dances, open houses, and other entertainment.

"One wonderful thing about the recreation committee," says Miss Mason, "is that with it the sky is the limit. It is not a committee that already has its program dictated to it, and consequently it is always open to new ideas for its activities and program."

The committee is anxious to get its committee members lined up completely by Friday afternoon, so interested students tre urged to come to the GMAB office Thursday or Friday afternoons between 3 and 5 for interviews.

peoples with iron curtains, bamboo curtains or any other obstruction to the interflow of dependable information and have them informed."

Dr. Wells skipped back a century into medico-press history and said, "When Florence Nightingale went to Scutari in 1854, it is my belief that she went there because of the British press and had it not been for the continued support of the press, I do not think the complete reform in military and later civilian nursing would have occurred when it did."

Dr. Wells was correct in his belief concerning the Crimean War in 1854-56. In fact, this was the first war in which "war correspondents" were used. W. H. Russell was the correspondent for the London Times, and the Times carried the following story by Russell under the date line: "Constantinople Sept. 30:

"It is with feelings of surprise and anger that the public will learn that no sufficient preparations have been made for the proper care of the wounded. Not only are there not sufficient surgeons-that, it might be urged, was unavoidable; not only are there no dressers and nurses-that might be a defect in the system for which no one is to blame; but what will be said when it is known that there is not even linen bandage for the wounded . . . But why could not this clearly forseen want have been supplied? Had not the expedition to the Crimea been the talk of the last four months? . . . And yet, after the troops have been six months in the country, there is no preparation for the commonest surgical operations." Needless to say military censorship of news had not yet begun.

Within a month after this article appeared in the London Times, Miss Nightingale and 38 nurses were enroute to Turkey to write a new chapter in medical history.

In 1838, before the Crimean War, Bulwer-Lytton said, "The pen is mightier than the sword." Today, over a century later, Dr. Wells says the same thing, but in different words.

"Words are unbelievably powerful tools and when not used properly become the withering weapons of destruction."

The educated toe of the Cleveland Browns' big tackle has been filling sports pages and record books for the last 10 years. By the end of the 1955-56 season, Groza's strong right foot had scored a total of 764 points, kicked 393 out of 403 points after touchdowns, and booted more field goals (92) than any other grid star in history.

A tip from "the toe" —Lou Groza

While Groza is still very much in the football present, he's already well along with his plans for gridiron retirement. And, according to Lou,

"One of the easiest ways I know of to save for retirement is to put part of every pay check into U. S. Savings Bonds."

With a little planning and saving, retirement can be a real reward for your work. And the sooner you get going with these plans, the less you'll need to save each month.

Let's say you're now 45 and start investing $37.50 a month in U. S. Series E Savings Bonds. At 65 you'll have a retirement fund of $12,000. Another man is now 55, but he invests $75 a month in Bonds. At 65 he'll have $10,000. Both of you will have invested the same amount—$9,000; but you, the early starter, will have accumulated 20% more money.

Every day you put off saving is costing you money. So take a tip from the old dependable scorer, Lou Groza, and start scoring where it will count the most—with a regular retirement investment program in U. S. Savings Bonds. DAD'S DAY MUST BE INSPIRING

Let's have Dad's Day every Saturday.

It seems as though Dad, for the last two years anyway, has a tremendous influence upon the exploits of the Carolina football team.

You who were here one year ago remember that, of the two games the Tar Heels won, (later taken away) one of them came against Maryland, 34-7, on Dad's Day. Saturday, in Kenan Stadium, you watched the Tar Heels celebrate Dad's Day with a 26-0 win over the Clemson Tigers.

It's a pretty safe bet that the fathers sitting behind the Carolina bench gave the Tar Heels a badly-needed shot in the arm. It is things of this nature which inspire athletes to exceed themselves in performance.

CLEMSON GAME—A GREAT TEAM EFFORT

Carolina's victory Saturday was of vital importance, not from the won-lost standpoint so much as the tremendous moral boost which it should give the club. After many weekends of frustration the boys simply "found" themselves and went out and played the kind of ball which this club is capable of playing.

It was a team effort from the word go. The powerful esprit de corps seemed to pervade the Carolina team. There was no loafing and no "scared football" as Jim Tatum described the N. C. State game.

It would be impossible to say that the offense or the defense was the instrumental factor in the victory because it was a beautifully-blended mixture of both that gave Carolina its first official victory since 1955.

To this writer, there seemed to be a sudden realization on the part of the players that "maybe we ain't so bad after all." There was certainly no element of the defeatist attitude which seemed prevalant in the State game.

NAVY, ONE OF COUNTRY'S BEST

This Saturday Carolina will face one of the best teams in the country, Navy. The Middies are always strong and this season they supposedly have one of the finest groups ever asembled at Annapolis.

Naturally, Navy will get the favorite nod, but should Carolina perform as it did against Clemson, the Sailors will be in for a long afternoon.

There is no reason why the Tar Heels should not provide Navy with formidable opposition. Navy certainly will not be looking for any easy time for two main reasons. 1—Carolina's trouncing of Clemson and 2, State's almost unbelievable rout of Maryland.

The State-Maryland fiasco, in fact, has made a good many football experts sit up and take notice. It should help Carolina tremendously in the weekly football poll. We could go on all day about State walloping Maryland and Maryland playing great against Texas A&M, etc., etc.

Suffice to say, by now, most of the experts realize that the Tar Heels were playing a pretty good ball club when they met State in the season's opener. The poll boys rely heavily upon such comparisons in making their weekly ratings, if ratings mean anything to you.

COACH BOB FETZER, A GREAT CONTRIBUTOR

Fans who arrived a bit early at the game got to see the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Association's 'Service To Sports Award' presented to one of the finest men who ever had a part in the athletic program at Carolina, Coach Bob Fetzer.

And what an important role Coach Bob played in the building of our fine program. His contributions are too numerous to enumerate. The personable ex-athletic director and track coach was, to say the least, one of the builders of Carolina athletics.

Association President Frank Spencer of the Winston-Salem Journal and a long-time friend of Coach Bob, made the presentation just before the game. Spencer called it his greatest pleasure in his 35 years of covering sports in North Carolina.

"The award," Spencer said, "is presented to you for your many years of unselfish and distinguished service to amateur athletics. It is an award which you richly deserve."

On behalf of the Carolina student body, we salute you Coach Bob Fetzer.

HOW CAROLINA OPPONENTS DID

In the Atlantic Coast Conference, things went about as expected, the exception being State's very impressive 48-13 trouncing of Maryland. South Carolina took an easy 26-0 win over Wofford College and the Gamecocks are now 1-1 for the season.

Duke continued its dominance of the ACC by solidly trouncing the Virginia Cavaliers, 40-0 and the Wake Forest Deacons opened the season by dropping a 27-0 decision to Florida.

Outside the conference, Navy knocked off Southern Conference contingent William and Mary, 33-6, and Auburn pulled a big upset by downing Tennessee, 7-0 and Miami did not play.

CRIST, A HAPPY WARRIOR

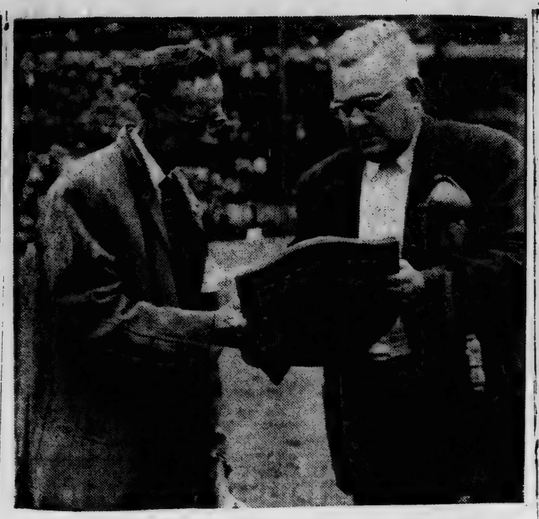
Notes from the Clemson game.

The word is that the happiest fellow around Saturday night was third string end Takey Crist who was on the receiving end of a 55-yard pass play from sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings that led to Carolina's final touchdown. Cummings has seen action in both games and has established himself as a real comer.

Busiest man on the field Saturday was halfback Daley Goff who carried the leather 13 times and gained 48 yards. Goff was instrumental in setting up the Tar Heels' first score.

Co-Captain Buddy Payne said after the game that it was one of the finest team performances he's seen since he's been at Carolina. Payne, incidentally, played one of the finest games of his career.

One interested spectator in the press box was basketball coach Frank McGuire and right beside him was one of the most famous of all basketball experts, Clair Bee.



Carolina used three men in its point after touchdown attempts. Phil Blazer made one of two, Bob Shupin one of one and Ray Butler missed his only attempt.

TATUM'S QBS BEST EVER

University of North Carolina Coach Jim Tatum says his quarterback situation this year is the best he's ever had. The Tar Heel mentor is four deep at the signal calling slot with co-captain and senior letterman Dave Reed leading the way.

SCOUTING FOR UNC COACHES

As far as the University of North Carolina coaching staff is concerned, Friday night at Chapel Hill means a trip to a high school football game in the area. Last Friday night found Coaches Emmett Cheek, Ed Kensler, Jim Hickey, Pat Preston and Fred Tullai on the road.

Big Four Roundup

Carolina Gridders In Spirited Scrimmage

Chapel Hill, N. C., Sept. 30 (AP) —Spirit ran high in the Carolina Football camp today as the tar heels began work for Saturday's game here with Navy.

The squad came out of the 26-0 win over Clemson without injuries. Coach Jim Tatum seemed pleased over the performance of fullback Ed Lipski and the work of the line.

"Our defense was the best it's been since I've been at Carolina," Tatum said.

Quarterback Nelson Lowe worked out in full gear today for the first time since injuring an ankle in the season opener against North Carolina State.

Durham, Sept. 30 (AP) — Coach Bill Murray is proud of the way his Duke Blue Devils have played in racking up lopsided wins over South Carolina and Virginia.

Murray told newsmen at a luncheon today he was "greatly pleased"with the offensive fireworks his Blue Devils have put on. He said, "We've had good blocking and our runners have been just great. The team has given such a good showing only because of hard work and self-discipline."

He Praised Wray Carlton, who scored Duke's first four touchdowns against Virginia as "a most exceptional ball player."

The Blue Devils worked out under the lights tonight to begin preparations for the homecoming game with Maryland Saturday in Duke Stadium. Missing the work because of injuries were halfback Eddie Rushton, nursing a bruised hip; end Bert Lattimore, with a sprained ankle; and halfback Bunny Bell, who suffered a wound on his leg.

Raleigh, Sept. 30 (AP) — North Carolina State's football squad saw movies today of Saturday's 48-13 win over Maryland and reviewed Mistakes.

The Wolfpack, which meets Clemson, worked on new plays, ran pass patterns and brushed up on its kicking. The squad also heard a scouting report on Clemson.

Ford Vs. Spahn In First Game

NEW YORK —(AP)— Manager Casey Stengel of the New York Yankees yesterday named Whitey Ford to face Milwaukee's Warren Spahn in a battle of lefthanders for the opening World Series tilt at Yankee Stadium tomorrow.

Ford won 11 and lost 5 games this year. Spahn won 21 and lost 11 for the Braves. He was named by Manager Fred Haney Sunday.

The Yankees' two question mark cripples, Mickey Mantle and Bill Skowron, were still undecided whether they would be able to play.

Skowron, slugging first baseman who has been idle since Sept. 13 with a sacroiliac ailment, said he felt much better but wouldn't know until later in the day whether he would be okay. He planned to take batting practice.

Mantle, bothered by shin splints, said, "I feel about the same." It appeared almost certain he would start in centerfield.

Defending ACC Swim Champs Begin Practice October 14

With five All-Americans returning, Carolina's 1958 swim team eyes another championship season. Coach Pat Eary has announced that official practice begins October 14th. Eary who replace veteran coach Ralph Casey, is no newcomer to the swimming world. For the past five years he has coached the state high school champions from Greensboro.

The ACC champs will feel a heavy loss from All-American Charlie Kreep,but with freshman star Paul Wachendorfer they should retain their title. Wachendorfer was third in the National AAU Championships, and Carolina's relay team was fourth in National Competition.

Lettermen returning are:

Bill Zickgraf and Kelly Manus in the sprints, Kit Mercer and Jim Goad in the breaststroke events, Mac Mahaffy and Bob Turner in the butterfly events, Brent Nash in the backstroke. Tony Schiffman and Jim Atwater in the distance events, and divers Ned Meekins and Dick Cashwell. Ted Smith Gets Two Tallies For Winners

By JIM PURKS

A pep talk prediction came true yesterday as Carolina's varsity soccer team hustled to a well-earned, 3-0 victory over Roanoke College.

The Tar Heel booters, deadlocked 0-0 with Roanoke at the end of the half, opened the floodgates early in the third quorter on a goal by Ted Smith and dominated play from then on.

Before the game, Coach Marvin Allen told his starting eleven that if they hustled and beat the Roanoke players to the ball that they would run Roanoke into the ground and win.

No truer words were ever spoken as the Carolina squad, showing no ill-effects of the two-day layoff from Friday's practice, hustled during the entire game, often leaving the trickier but slower Roanoke players behind in the mud.

The Tar Heels "traded punches" with Roanoke during the first half, each team having several good scoring chances, but not being able to capitalize on them.

Carolina had a good chance to score midway in the second quarter when a penalty kick for pushing was called against Roanoke. Fullback Ted Youhanna made the penalty kick, but a nice save by Roanoke goalie Harry Clegg prevented Carolina from taking a one goal lead.

In the second half, two new faces to Carolina's forward line provided the scoring punch which vanquished Roanoke.

Left inside Ted Smith, a second string defenseman last year, "ribbled through several players near the Roanoke goal before blasting a shot into the right corner of the goal past goalie Clegg.

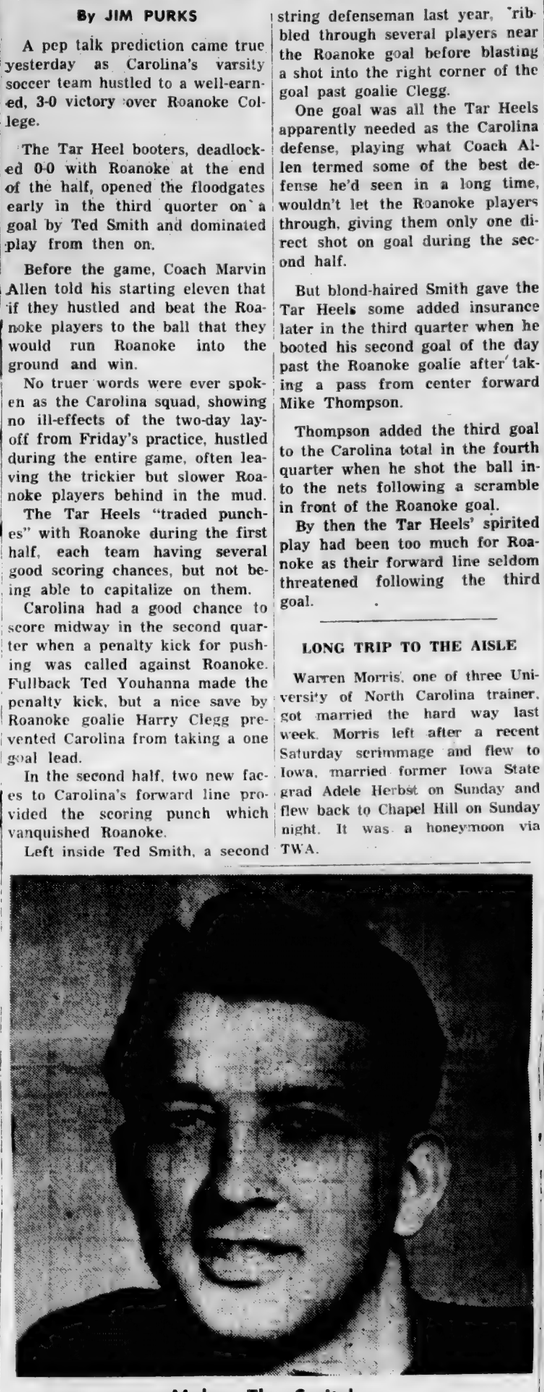
One goal was all the Tar Heels apparently needed as the Carolina defense, playing what Coach Allen termed some of the best defense he'd seen in a long time, wouldn't let the Roanoke players through, giving them only one direct shot on goal during the second half.

But blond-haired Smith gave the Tar Heels some added insurance later in the third quarter when he booted his second goal of the day past the Roanoke goalie after taking a pass from center forward Mike Thompson.

Thompson added the third goal to the Carolina total in the fourth quarter when he shot the ball into the nets following a scramble in front of the Roanoke goal.

By then the Tar Heels' spirited play had been too much for Roanoke as their forward line seldom threatened following the third goal.

LONG TRIP TO THE AISLE



Warren Morris, one of three University of North Carolina trainer, got married the hard way last week. Morris left after a recent Saturday scrimmage and flew to Iowa, married former Iowa State grad Adele Herbst on Sunday and flew back to Chapel Hill on Sunday night. It was a honeymoon via TWA.

Boxing Meeting Set

An organizational meeting of the new Carolina Boxing Club will be held at 221 Venable Hall tonight at five o'clock.

It is not to be held in the form of a tournament or a series of eliminations but rather as a clinic to teach interested students some of the fundamental moves and countermoves of the sport. Emphasis will be so placed that no previous experience is necessary.

The ultimate aim of the club is to teach the members sufficient proficiency so that they will be able to box for enjoyment without any danger of injury.

Makes The Switch

Ron Marquette, senior from Pennsville, N. J. saw his first real action at halfback for Carolina against Clemson Saturday. Marquette was switched from quarterback before the season began and performed well against the Tigers.

Arkansas Guard Replaces U.S. Troops

Gov. Faubus Yields To Court; Ike To Withdraw U. S. Troops

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 1 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus pledged himself tonight to maintain law and order outside Central High School and not to obstruct integration orders of the federal courts.

In return, Faubus said, President Eisenhower had agreed to return the Arkansas National Gutrd to his command to withdraw federal troops from Little Rock as soon as practicable.

The peace pact, worked out in Washington earlier in the day, apparently presaged an end to the grave Little Rock crisis over civil rights and states rights.

Faubus would not go beyond the comment contained in a statement contained in a statement he issued to newsmen at his mansion here. It read:

"At a meeting of committee representing the Southern Governors Conference this afternoon at the White House, the President was informed at my request that it has never been my intention to obstruct the orders of the federal courts, that the orders of the federal courts will not be obstructed by me, and that I am prepared, as I have always been, to assume full responsibility for maintaining law and order in Little Rock.

"This has been consistently my stand and viewpoint throughout the controversy.

"On the basis of this assurance, the President has declared that the Arkansas National Guard will be returned to my command and thereafter as soon as practicable all federal troops will be withdrawn.

Negroes Unescorted

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 1 (AP)—Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen replaced regular Army troops at Central High School today as Gov. Orval E. Faubus still considered the possibility of calling a special legislative sesison to deal with integration here.

For the first time since the troop-enforced integration began at the school Wednesday, the six Negro girls and three boys walked into the school without a military escort.

Faubus, at a news conference later in the morning, said the guardsmen could no longer be considered national guardsmen.

"They're not the National Guard," he said. "They are U. S. Army Troops."

MAY CALL SESSION

Faubus said he expected to decide "this week or next" on whether to call a special session of the legislature to deal with the integration problem at the school. Talk of such a session began over the weekend but Faubus appeared yesterday to have cooled off on the subject for the time being, at least.

The governor said he had no plans of his own to reach a compromise in the integration crisis here and he did not know how it would end. He said he had talked by phone with Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina, one of the four southern governors to meet with President Eisenhower later in the day to discuss integration. He said he expected to hear from Hodges after the meeting. He said the conference would not be binding on him.

ACCUSES HOOVER

Faubus accused J. Edgar Hoover, FBI Director, of using "Lawyer Language" in denying that his agents had held teen-age high school girls incommunicado last week for questioning. He said Hoover placed that denial next to one he had made that his agents had not tapped the telephone lines of the governor.

"The way he placed the two statements together does not mean that I lied in any respect," Faubus said.

Faubus said he thought the guardsmen would find their duties escorting the Negro students into a "forcefully integrated school distasteful."

Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, commanding general of the Arkansas National Guard, appeared at the school today. When asked what instructions he had given his guardsmen, he replied:

"What do you think any general says to his troops when he's proud of them? They have been given no special instructions. They are doing

CHANCELLOR AYCOCK
Confers With Students

Problems Of Students Discussed With Aycock

By BILL CHESHIRE

Student leaders and administrative officials met yesterday in the first of the recently-inaugurated meetings between these two levels of campus officialdom.

The invitation from the Chancellor to attend these meetings was extended to the students in a surprise move last week. This was seen as a step toward keeping the student body more closely abreast of the University's long range planning.

Chancellor Aycock described the meeting as "wholesome and very desirable. The information and discussion was valuable to us as well as to the student representatives. It worked both ways," Aycock said.

Student Body President Sonny Evans said that he was "certain that the coming months will bring forth various discussions from which we will all gain a great deal.

"We should also like to thank Chancellor Aycock for the opportunity of such a worthwhile exchange of ideas," he said.

At the outset of the meeting, Chancellor Aycock clarified the new policy on student participation in the conferences. He explained that student leaders will not be expected to attend every meeting of his cabinet. Instead, they will meet with the cabinet on the first Monday of each month and at any other times upon request.

PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

During the hour-and-a-half session in the Chancellor's office the group discussed various student problems as well as the function and hopes for the future of the Chancellor's Cabinet.

Quoting from the inaugural address of Student Body President Evans, Chancellor Aycock told the meeting that "Student Government must present a unified front for the new administrative officials . . . if we are to continue the respect that is so necessary to achieve."

Aycock added that "we (students and administrtaion) are all working for the same purpose."

TV REPAIRS

The first of the student problems taken up by the group was that of dormitory TV repairs. In the past, it was explained, these sets have remained out of order for extended periods of time.

Administrative officials informed the group that in the future funds for the repair of these sets will be provided from the profits derived from the campus stores (vendin gmachines, Book g, Cir-(vending machines, Books, Cir-

PARKING SITUATION

Parking was also taken up at the meeting. The University's Business Manager Branch explained that weather difficulties have held up construction of the new parking facilities in the Kenan Stadium area. He predicted that, with good weather, these facilities should be available around the middle or latter part of this month.

Evans then pointed out that final decision on who will use the lots can only be decided after the registration of all student automobiles. He said this should be around Oct. 15.

DATE TICKETS

On the question of lower prices for date tickets to athletic events, Aycock suggested that it might be simpler to work out a solution to this problem two or three years in advance. By way of explanation

Crack Brigade Of Midshipmen Visits UNC Campus Saturday

One hundred and fifty midshipmen representing the best brigade at Annapolis last year will be on campus here Saturday for UNC's game with Navy.

The group, which will arrive Saturday and be housed somewhere on campus, is being given the trip to Saturday's game as a reward for their performance last year at the U. S. Naval Academy.

The group will sit in a block on the Navy side of the field.

A dance sponsored by the Quarterback Club will honor the midshipmen Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Naval Armory.

The group will not march at halftime; however, the UNC Naval ROTC precision drill teams will perform.

Battalion Commander W. C. Roth will lead cheers for Navy and Carolina before the game.

During half time the Drum and Bugle Corps and Companies A, B and C will do precision drill. Midshipman R. Hines Jr. of Kinston heads the Drum and Bugle Corps, while A, B and C companies are headed by Midshipmen M. Glatzer, Kingsington, Md.; L. C. Wardrup, Middlesboro, Ky.; and J. R. Alexander, Lake Wales, Fla.

Also taking part Saturday will be the drill team headed by E. W. Butchart of Greensboro.

Rushees To Sign Slips In Dean's Office Today

Frosh, Law Students Yack Pix Being Taken

Freshmen and law school students will have Yack pictures taken this week every day from 1 till 7:30 p.m. in the basement of Graham Memorial. Men must wear dark coats and ties.

The dead line for Senior pictures has been extended through today. A late fee of $1 will be required, however.

Final Arrangements Being Set For Norman Thomas' Speech

Final arrangements have been made to bring Norman Thomas to the campus as the first speaker for the fall of the Carolina Forum, according to Chairman Jim Holmes.

Thomas, six time campaigner for the presidency of the United States on the Socialist ticket, will speak Monday, Oct. 28, at 8:15 p. m. in Carroll Hall.

The public is invited and a reception will be held in Graham Memorial immediately following the speech.

Born and raised in Marion, Ohio, he graduated from Princeton University in 1905 and later became a Presbyterian minister.

During World War I, he took a definite anti-war stand, resigning his missionary post because supperters were withdrawing aid from the parish on account of his socialist and anti-military views.

Thomas was one of the organizers of the American Civil Liberties Union. After joining the Socialist party, he took part in many free speech fights and in many other struggles in support of the rights of workers to organize. He has run for many offices, including the presidency of the United States on the Socialist Party ticket in six elections.

Seeing the plight of southern tenant farmers, he organized the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union. Thomas is also the author of numerous books and pamphlets.

Resigns Commission

MANNING, S. C.—(AP)—State Sen. James Hugh McFaddin of Clarendon County has resigned his commission as an officer in the U. S. Army Reserve because of the presence of federal troops to enforce integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark. McFaddin's move followed by only a few days the announcement of South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. that he had resigned his commission from the Navy Reserve in protest of the situation at Little Rock.

New Judge

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)—Federal District Judge Roy W. Harper disclosed in St. Louis that he has been assigned temporarily to Little Rock, but he apparently will not sit on the bench on proceedings involving the racial integration case here.

Grady Miller, federal district court clerk here, said that Judge Harper had been assigned to Little Rock to help Judge Ronald N. Davies "clean up a backlog of cases. He will handle all cases except the integration case."

UNC Officials Attend Meeting At The University Of Georgia

Two UNC officials, Dr. James Godfrey and Dr. William M. Whyburn, attended the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Land Grant College and State Universities at the University of Georgia in Athens, Sept. 30 through Oct. 2.

Dr. Whyburn, vice-president for graduate studies in research of the Consolidated University represented the Consolidated University while Dr. Godfrey, dean of the UNC faculty, was the official representative of the University.

Other North Carolinians who attended the meting were Chancellor Carey Bostian and Dr. Donald Anderson of State College in Raleigh.

Other topics included problem of higher education, means of improving research and training, the use of entrance examinations for selective admission and faculty-student ratio.

Bells Have Always Called UNC Students To Class

By JACKIE HAITHCOCK

If peeves are your specialty, the source of your pet one probably lies within the confines of an octagonal tower atop South Building.

"It," of course, is the bell that rings forth from South Building every day 10 minutes before the hour and then again exactly on the hour.

It wouldn't be so bad if this noise maker didn't insist on dragging you out of the sack every morning and causing you to have words with that prof who is a stickler for punctuality.

"MISERY LOVES COMPANY"

If such inconveniences now have you on the point of frustration, there may be some comfort in the old adage "misery loves company."

In the case at hand, the "company" dates back to Feb. 12, 1795, when Hinton James walked 150 miles from Wilmington to enter UNC as the first student in its history.

At that time, the bells literally started ringing and have continued unceasingly through the years to annoy a long train of students in the University's history.

The details have changed, of course. One of the first university bells found its home in a lattice-worked, wooden tower located where the Old Well now stands.

RISE AND SHINE

In those days, the first ringing of the bell in the wee hours marked the rising time for all student and faculty members. The second clang meant that everyone should be snuggly seated in his chapel seat. (Chapel attendance was a requirement for all.)

So the schedule ran. A clang for breakfast at 7 a.m.; another for classes to begin at 8 a.m.; one for lunch at 2 p.m. and a final ding-dong for a 6:30 p.m. supper.

TOWER BURNS

By 1856, the sound had become unbearable. One evening a group of students were throwing fireballs made of cloth saturated in alcohol and kerosene and "accidently" hit the wooden tower. The lattice work caught fire and the sonorous bell and its wooden confine were completely destroyed.

The silence was short-lived, however. Soon after the bell tower burning, an old-fashioned eight-inch dinner bell made by a Rowan County blacksmith was used to perform the customary bell duties.

This same bell now lies in the vault of the University library.

In 1860, history marked the erection of the present belfry on South Building complete with a new bell. Students, not to be outdone, took revenge by ringing the bell at all hours, causing a general pandemonium.

Phillips Russell, former professor of creative writing at UNC who was living in South Building as a student at the time, recalls that he used to hide the rope to the bell in order to get some sleep.

UNC CLOSES

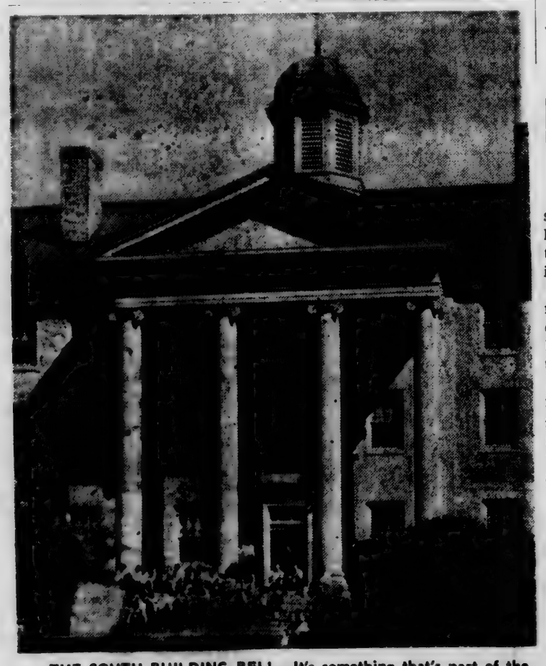
And so the regular and irregular clanging of the South Building bell continued until after the Civil War. Then came the Reconstruction period that marked another five-year period of silence for the bell and almost complete extinction for the university.

For five years after the war the bell rang only once. Then only to bid farewell to Miss Nancy Hilliard, beloved boarding house mistress to many former students.

On March 20, 1875, however, the Senate passed a bill calling for the reopening of Carolina. Cornelia Phillips Spencer, who had been working for the reopening, got news of the action in a telegram from A. D. Mickle.

She ran up the gravel path to South Building, climbed the stairs to the attic and tugged the bell rope—ringing the message of reopening across the countryside for four miles around.

With the reopening of the University came more bell-ringing pranksters who continued their noisy habit until the rope was finally placed inside a metal tube that ran down to the first floor of South Building. Then, until 20 years ago, the bell was rung without incident by a janitor with a dollar watch.



"HORNY-HANDED" HENRY

One of the best-known of these janitor bell-ringers was "Horny-Handed" Henry Smith. Smith's outstanding achievement was probably the gaining of an honorary title from Frank Graham who named him the "Learned Lawyer Ding Donger."

The time of pranks and honorary bell-ringers came to an end in 1936. During that year, an automatic clock system was installed and a bell-ringer attached that copied the exact sound made when the janitor rang the bell.

So if your frustration becomes unbearable don't go hunting for the nearest janitor or climbing the South Building belfry with fireballs. These phenomena have passed on with history.

You have only two alternatives. Try tranquillizers, or better yet, a little cotton in the ears.

THE SOUTH BUILDING BELL—It's something that's part of the Carolina Way of Life, something that leads you to class, something that wakes you up, something that's just as much a party of history as South Building itself.

Shades Of McCarthyism, From Frying Pan To Ku-Klux-Klanic Kasperism

"Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools and the beacons of wise men."—Thomas Henry Huxley.

The less decay is stirred — the less the stench.

The less John Kasper and his brand of Dionysian bigotry and anti-intellectualism is mentioned —the less the olfactory mistreat.

And the English language must be subjected to the introduction of another ignominious word—a word synonymous with the words bias and emotionalism and dogmatic prejudice.

The first was McCarthyism.

The second to the pinnacle of infamy in this frenetically infamous vocabulary list is:

Kasperism.

The logical consequence of actions such as Kasper's White House picketing and Oligarchic Orval Faubus's calling out of National Guardsmen is a retaliation of violence.

And such retaliation should be the beacons of wise men in the South.

Peaceful compliance with the land's Supreme Law—whether interpreted rather arbitrarily and elastically by the Supreme Court's Nine Tall Men or not—must be the South's beacons as this historic phase of society plows forward through troubled and blood-mixed waters . . . uncharted waters of racial disturbance.

We must note with sincere interest the Richmond Times-Dispatch's comment upon the whole Little Rock fiasco:

"A far-reaching and perhaps catastrophic step has been taken by President Eisenhower. Even the small minority (of Southerners) who believe in integration may well stop and ponder whether the president isn't sowing seeds of bitterness that will poison race relations in the South for many years."

And we must endorse the stand taken by the Little Rock Arkansas Democrat:

"The law must prevail. the courts must be respected, or all of our rights, our peace, freedom and everything we cherish is put in deadly peril . . . These troops . . . are guardians of our freedom . . . here . . . to deal with the mob spirit that defied it."

And it is odd that we must note the most extreme viewpoint comes from the New York Daily News:

"President Eisenhower's ordering of the one thousand 101st Airborne Division paratroopers from Kentucky to Little Rock strikes us as an ill-advised act of a chief executivepressured by a hysterical and short-sighted palace guard..."

We feel — like the New York Daily News—that Eisenhower is in a partial vacuum into which only the advice of a palace guard filters. His physical condition may necessitate such Washington-to-golf-course advice. It's wretchedly bad at any rate.

But his position—his federalization and call-to-arms—was inevitable.

And the actions of extremists like Notorious, Ku-Klux-Klanic Kasper and Oligarchic Orval Faubus must be looked upon as ignominious beacons—from which the South must steer.

From the frying pan into the farce . . .

Vitriolic Emotionalism: Objectivity Doomed As Students Turn Backsides

University student government has enjoyed a symbiotic relationships with the National Student Association to many years.

The association is the source whence came the University's Orientation Program pattern.

It is a storehouse of thought — a disseminating focal point from which have radiated diverse ideas —a point which provides an all-important intercourse of myriad ideas.

And University student government has provided assistance to NSA by furnishing a pattern—a rather model student government in many ways—upon which other institutions may draw.

Also local student government has furnished two presidents for the association in its scant decade of existence.

Thus the symbiosis—the mutual beneficial relationship.

Now the partnership is threatened with dissolution due to the failure of students to offer their services to aid with the local NSA desegregation committee—a committee which compiles information on the segregation-desegregation problem for the information of NSA-member schools throughout the nation.

The committee's theme is only, of course, a problem which has the South split in armed camps. Any repository of information on the subject could be a valuable asset to the entire country.

Especially if the information is non-partisan and objective—rather than emotional and subjective as most copy poured out by northern carpetbagger journalists has been . . . dripping with vitriolic and prejudicial emotionalism.

We'd greatly appreciate some lucidly compilations on educational integration . . . both in North Carolina and the overall South.

The symbiotic relationship should not become parasitic.

University student government must perform its role . . .

READERS' REPOSITORY

Verbal Spank For Mills' Odes By Yardley . . .

Read with great interest. Crayson Mills' article. Is Jazz The Unknown Soldier? in the September 27 Daily Tar Heel. Some of the points made in the article seem to be crying for comment.

"Today, Dixie is better than ever." That is not true. There is one Dixielandband, out of hundreds, which has succeeded in adhering to the true spirit and musicanship of the New Orleans bands of fifty years ago. That, of course, is the group lead by the ericdite Mr. Wilbur de Paris. Save this group, Dixieland music is in a bad situation.

I wonder if Mr. Mills had the dubious privilege of attending the Louis Armstrong Birthday Celebration at this years. Newport Jazz Festival? The death toll of Dixie seemed to have been struck that night as Armstrong, literally hogging the stage, showed himself to have become nothing but a pitiful shadow of the man he once was. He has become an entertainer, and a poor one at that—Jim Crow jokes, tasteless dancing by Velma Middleton, his talentless blues singer, were the characteristics of his performance.

And as for the musicanship—Armstrong's blowing was weak, spiritless; Trummy Young seems to be content with making his trombone sound like a buzz saw; Billy Kyle's pianoplaying is without depth or feeling; Squire Gersh is a talentless bassist on stand today—under his dubious guidance a drumstick becomes a sledge hammer; only clarinetist Edmond Hall remains a musican, and he seemed overpowered by the mediocrity of his surorundings.

This is not to say that Armstrong is the only offender—he is merely the most prominent. Turk Murphey and Bob Scobey, only four years ago powerful proponents of the original New Orleans jazz, have resorted more and more to the clicks of noise and tastelessness to gain fame and fortune.

We never hear from Kid Ory any more, altho he undoubtedly remains one of the truly great jazz artist alive. The same applies to the wonderful Mr. Jack Teagerden. Except for a couple of excellent Capitol recordings, he has vanished from the scene. And while these greats remain underground, the public is subjected to the noise made by such groups as Stan Robins' Tigertown Five and the Dukes of Dixielands.

This all leads me to a statement of my view on jazz. I believe that, above all, jazz should swing. Does Barrett Deems swing as he pounds his way through Ko-Ko-Mo for the seven hundredth time? No. Yet thirty years ago Bix Beiderbecke's Wolverines swung, and they too were Dixieland musicans. The present day concept of Dixieland seems to be over-riding noise. if necessary at the expense of musicanship.

I blieve that taste is important in jazz. Was Armstrong tasteful when, introducing the Now You Has Jazz number from High Society, turned to Trummy Young and said, "I'll sing my part and you play a technicolored Bing Crosby?" No. Yet as Joe Turner, that great blues singer, belts his way through Morning Glory, he is in fine taste, altho his music is much earthier than Armstrong's.

I believe that jazz must have musicanship. The amount of musicanship contained in one of the ultra-high-fidelity recordings of the Dukes of Dixieland is questionable, but they certainly have reached the goals of fame and fortune.

Meanwhile, a little known trumpeter named Doc Evans, who operates in and around Wisconsin, is one of the finest jazz musicans around.

Finally, jazz must have that element which is so much its own, spirit. The last time Armstrong did anything spirited was four years ago, when he put out a wonderful recording called Louis Armstrong Plays W. C. Handy. Since then, he plays the same program every night, with absolutely no interest or spirit. But there is plenty of spirit in that new record. This Is Teagarden.

Where, then, do hese comments lead me. Up until three years ago, I was a die-hard fan of the questionably immortal Mr. Jelly-Roll, of the great Joe Oliver, of the early Tours'. But they can only be heard on recordings. So I began to listen to what Mr. Mills' coldly refers to as "the music of the Antarctic."

I made some thrilling discoveries—Dizzy Gillespie is a swinging, tasteful, articulate, spirited musican; Stan Kenton is incredibly exciting; Stan Getz can move me; There are few better drummers than Shelly Manne; Erroll Garner is the happiest musican in the world; Duke Ellington is the greatest jazz artist who ever lived. And, slowly to be sure, I began to listen to this music. It took a while for the many wonderful things about it to sink in, but they did, and "modern" jazz became part of my life.

It think Mr. Mills is a mite brased I don't want to call him an ivory tower traditionalist, tho I have met many of them, because I do not know him nor am I well enough acquainted with his views.

Snap judgments can often be erroneons. But I would like to suggest a few things to him; he might make this his project for the year. Listen, Mr. Mills, to Jimmy Guiffre and his three playing Two Kindsof Blues, if you want to hear modern jazz which has retained the feelings, the spirit of the land and the music it owes so much to; or listen to the Modern Jazz Quartet playing Bag's Groove. For a swinging, emotional piece which adheres to the basic ideas of what jazz should Garner's entire album, Concert By The Sea. Listen to it many times. There is more personal, human emotion in this recording than all the things Tom Armstrong has recorded for the past four years.

No, Mr. Mills. Dixieland is not the only jazz. You would find it best to broaden your scope, and learn to love every school. Then I will believe what you have to say.

FROM COLORADO STATE

Tradition Ties Thinking In Far West

Where are all of the 1800 freshman beanies issued last week? This question has been the chant of many upper classmen the past few days, and a justified question it is.

It seems odd that the freshman are willing, and, in some cases, anxious to trade their eye-catching green millinery for the common headwear of the upperclassmen—nothing. It is amusing, and yet disgusting, to see the green freshman proudly stuff his beanie in the darkest corner of his dresser drawer and blissfully walk around the campus with his chestpuffed out, pretending he is an upperclassman.

The freshmen should be proud to distinguish themselves as the first freshman class of Colorado State University. They should be thrilled at the attention that only a freshman receives. Most of all they should enjoy the once-in-a-lifetime experience of a college freshman.

School spirit is composed of many intangibals, one of the most most important of which is the enthusiasm of the new students. If the new students themselves do not have enough spirit to carry on the tradition practiced by all institutions of higher learning (the wearing of the green beanie), how can they expect the rest of the student body to posses school spirit in other events.

VIRGINIA CAVALIER CAJOLERY:

10th Amendment Vs. Federalism

Last week the citizens of the United State, many of them unknowingly, celebrated Constitution Week, an observance designed to commemorate the magnificent achievements which that document represents. Ironically enough, this year's Constitution Week came at a time when a decision of the United States Supreme Court, based on sections of the Constitution, was being sharply debated both verbally and actively. We make reference to the Court's decision of May, 1954, when it declared separation of the races in the schools to be illegal and unconstitutional.

The Constitutional basis for that well-known decision was the Fourteenth Amendment, which provides that all person born or naturalized in the United States are citizens, and the Fifteenth Amendment, which guarantees to all citizens equal protection under the law.

But the 1954 action of the Court was not the first time, by any means, that the legality of racial segregation had been brought under the scrutiny of the nation's highest appellate body. And in all previous instances the jurists had held that the question was a state matter, reserved for action by the states in the Tenth, or so-called States' Rights Amendment, which reads:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.

The proponents of segregation have loudly maintained that it was the intention of the drafters of the Constitution to reserve for action by the states alone matters which are of a sectional nature, that is, matters which do not affect the whole country in the same way. It does appear, indeed, that there exists in the racial question a need to take into account the fact that the problem is not a uniform one throughout the country. It seems that there is a basic fallacy in reasoning that leads to the adoption of the same set of laws governing the question to apply equally in Alabama and in South Dakota

Nowhere in the South has the protest to racial mixing in the schools been more apparent than in Little Rock, Arkansas, under the leadership of the governor of that state, Orval E. Faubus.

Gov. Faubus began his grandstand play when he called out his state's National Guard units, apparently to prevent Negro children from entering Little Rock's Central High School on the opening day of School, September 2. He also placed a detachment of Guardsmen around the governor's mansion in Little Rock, but for largely unexplained reasons. Thus fortified, he has withstood all comers, including President Eisenhower and Little Rock Federal Circuit Court judge, Ronald N. Davies, while he took time to contemplate the situation and to weep for his people. His meeting with the President was characterized largely by vascillation on the part of the Chief Executive; and to his first court subpoena from Judge Davies, Gov. Faubus was aloof.

When he was presented with the subpoena, the governor wrote to the clerk of the Circuit Court:

"While I have the utmost respect for your court and its valid processes, I must point out that almost from the very beginning of our republic it has been uniformly held that the chief executive (of a state) is not compelled to comply with a subpoena unless he chooses to do so. In this particular case because of the obvious ulterior motive of those who obtained the subpoena, I do not choose to comply . . ."

Now the National Guard troops have been removed under court injunction, and Gov. Faubus has decided to have his day in court after all. As to what has precipitated this strange turn of events, we can only surmise. It seems most probable that the Arkansan has decided not to try to push his luck any farther at the present, but in any case, we may be sure that when Mr. Faubus goes to court to test the laws on the race question, we will see the old fight of state versus federal power cropping up once more.

FRESHMAN FROWNS:

Disillusionment For Freshmen

Editor:

We, spirited freshmen at UNC, are disappointed Before coming to Carolina, we heard much about the great Carolina spirit, and looked forward to being a part of this spirit. Is this spirit dead?

On Friday night, prior to the Clemson game, a pep rally was scheduled. The entire grid squad was assembled at Woollen Gym waiting for their fellow Tar Heels, of whom only about 100 showed up. Is this spirit?

After marching through the men's dormitory quadrangles and proceeding to the South Building steps, the throng "swelled" to 200. How can the football team of a great school with a sizeable enrollment perform at its best after seeing this?

According to The Daily Tar Heel of Sept. 22, there are 7,308 students at UNC. Where were the other 6,838? Girls are excused somewhat as sorority rush was going on.

Let's go Carolinians. Show that spirit to us disappointed freshmen and especially to the downhearted football team. Surely someone can spare an hour to display his school spirit.

UNC Placement Service Offers Jobs To Seniors, Grad Students

By STAN FISHER

This year the UNC Placement Service is anticipating a highly successful year in making available many of the better jobs to university students.

In the past it has been very effective in placing UNC students in positions best suited to their ambitions, capabilities and college education.

The Placement Service was established in 1948 by the University, in the realization that the college, in addition to an education, was obligated to aid them in obtaining jobs as well.

The Placement Office has four major areas in which it works to help students. The majority of the work of the service is to help seniors obtain jobs after graduation.

In addition to this, it aids alumni in obtaining other jobs. As a third area of its work the Placement Service aids college students to find summer employment. The service also has a list of all information needed by post-graduate students in obtaining a scholarship.

The agency aids both men and women students. Mary Hayes Barber, assistant director of the Placement Service, is available for consultation with co-eds interested in using this bureau.

The Placement Service specializes in placing students in business, government and industry. It does not handle teaching employment. However, these positions are available through the School of Education, and, in the case of those interested in teaching on the college level, the Graduate School.

All seniors are urged to register with the Placement Service at the beginning of their senior year. Graduate students are urged to register early in their last year of college. Those students interested in summer jobs should register early in January.

Registration with the Placement Service is a simple matter. The applicant fills out a single data sheet. This is duplicated into 50 copies, 30 of which stay with the Service to be used in contacting prospective employers. The remaining 20 are left for the student to use at his own discretion in contacting other companies he might be interested in.

Since the bureau is a state-operated office, there are no charges involved other than those incurred in having the data sheet duplicated and pictures taken to accompany the forms.

The office keeps a complete personnel record on each student registered, that includes a rating sheet in which the registrar is rated by two of the professors in his major. He is rated among other things on: emotional stability, leadership, social qualities and personal appearance.

All students are urged to register with the Placement Service regardless of what arrangements they may have already made. It might prove invaluable in the future as a reference.

After the office contacts several prospective employers, interviews are arranged. In these interviews the student is expected to "sell" himself to the prospective employers. The final choice of which offer to accept rests with the individual.

J. M. Galloway, director of the UNC Placement Service, had this to say about the program:

"The Placement Service looks forward to a successful year. We urge all seniors and graduate students who seek employment in business, industry, or government to register with the office as early as possible.

"Students who are faced with military obligations should also register with the office in their senior year. In this way connections can be established with employers which will be very helpful to the student when he seeks a full time job after completion of his military service.

"For those who register with us while in school we will gladly help in placement following completion of military duty."

UNC Student Starts New Business: Will Sell Confederate Belt Buckles

By DALE WHITFIELD

The editor gave me the assignment; go to the Tempo Room and interview Bill Howell for a feature story.

Dubious of the sincerity of the assignment I opened the door of the Tempo and walked down the narrow steps. I found Bill sitting at the bar. Thus started a most interesting interview.

I introduced myself to Bill and took a seat next to him at the bar. I found that Bill, a veteran of World War II and the Korean War, has an interesting hobby of collecting Confederate arms and equipment. He showed me a reproduction of a Conefderate officer's belt bcukle.

Bill owns the original buckle from which the reproduction was made. So many people had asked him where they could obtain a similar buckle that Bill and a friend decided to make reproductions and sell them.

The buckles go on the market this week at Stevens-Shepard here in Chapel Hill. Later in the year they will go on the national market, handled by a firm in New York.

The original buckle was cast in sand and made of solid brass. The reproduction is made of brass, but is nickel plated. This was a necessary step to take, says Bill, because the unplated buckles tarnish so and need extensive polishing.

The buckle has CS in the center of it. I asked Bill what this meant. This was not an unusual question asked of Bill, even by southern boys.

"Well," he replied, "it could stand for Carolina student, Civil Service, or Colonial Store; but anyone from below the Mason-Dixon ought to be able to tell you it means Confederate States."

While I was sitting there someone brought Bill some pictures which they had developed for him. The pictures were of some boxes of Confederate cartridges.

Bill explained that there were only two known boxes of these cartridges in existence and that he owned both of them.

He had just recently bought them from a farmer in the eastern part of the state and has received offers as high as $800 per box.

Bill also operates a gun shop in Greensboro. He is one of 28 persons in the United States who is licensed to sell fully automatic weapons, such as the famed B.A.R. and the Thompson submachine gun.

I wished Bill luck with his new version of an old product, placed my order for one of the first, and made my way back up the steps pleased with the interview and a lot less doubtful of my editor's assignments.

Choral Club Sets Monday To Rehearse

St. Saens' Christmas Oratorio will be the major work of the Chapel Hill Choral Club this season, according to Joel Carter, professor of music at UNC and director of the club. Rehearsals start Monday, Oct. 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the Choral Room of Hill Hall.

"Anyone interested in group singing is welcome to join the Choral Club," said Carter. "There are no auditions and no dues. We do request that members attend rehearsals regularly. These are held held once a week on Monday nights until just before a performance, when we usually schedule an extra rehearsal or two."

The club has been a feature of town and campus life for over 25 years. Its ranks are composed of housewives, businessmen, doctors, students, lawyers, nurses, faculty members, office workers—anyone who likes to sing.

The last major work performed by the club was Verdi's Requiem. It was accompanied by the University Symphony, as are most of the club's presentations.

Tatum Tremendously Pleased With Tar Heels

Jim Tatum held his weekly press conference at the Pines yesterday and the Tar Heel mentor appeared a good deal happier than he was one week ago.

The articulate coaching veteran was "tremendously pleased" at his team's performance against the Clemson Tigers in Kenan Stadium Saturday. But he wasn't lingering on the memories of the game too much because of the Tar Heel's Saturday opponent, Navy.

Tatum expressed the view that the Clemson victory has put the team in high spirits. "The boys came out there Monday and were anxious to get started," Tatum said. "If we can get a good break in the weather, we can get as much accomplished this week as we ever have."

Ed Lipski Might Be Starter Saturday

Sunny Jim praised his entire club for its efforts Saturday. He was impressed with the work of guards Fred Swearingen and Ed Furjanic and fullback Ed Lipski. Swearingen had been switched from center to guard and performed very nicely. Lipski's performance might win him a starting birth against the Navy.

Swearingen, incidentally, is suffering a shoulder injury and has been taking things easy this week but team physicians say he should be okay by Saturday. Other than that, the Tar Heels are in excellent physical condition.

Tatum fully realizes the power of the Navy team and knows his club will have to be at its best Saturday. "Navy is big, strong and experienced," he said, "but I believe all our coaches and players feel that we have a chance against them."

Navy Coach, Ed Erdelatz will probably have his team "up" for the Tar Heels since his record against Jim Tatum is 0-3. All of these games were played while Tatum was at Maryland.

Preston Gives Scouting Report On Navy

On hand at the luncheon was Assistant Coach. Pat Preston who scouted Navy in its first two games against Boston College and William and Mary. Needless to say, Preston was greatly impressed with the Middies.

"It's a good hustling ball club," Pat said. They're in excellent condition and they can block and tackle with the best. Many people at the Academy think its the finest team ever assembled there," he added.

What is Navy's chief asset? "Experience, according to Preston. "There are only six juniors on the first two teams," Preston said. "All the rest are seniors."

Middies Like To Throw The Ball

Preston stressed the fact that Navy was a "throwing" ball club. Against Boston College, the Middies completed 12 of 23 passes and connected for 14 of 30 againt William and Marv.

Pat added that the quarterbacks do all the throwing. The number one quarterback is Tom Forrestal who has three years experience. Preston was greatly impressed with the all-around performance of Forrestal. Pat Flood is the number two man and appears to be a capable understudy.

The Middies, according to Preston, have tremendous backfield strength. He singled out halfbacks Ned Oldham and Harry Hurst as a couple of hard-charging fellows who can grind out the yardage and fullback Dick Dagampat, the smallest fullback in Navy history who is a fine blocking back but doesn't carry the ball much.

The Navy line, averaging over 215 pounds, is paced by center Bob Reifsnyder, tackle Jim Martinez and end Pete Jokanovich, whom Preston describes as a fine pass-catcher.

Preston said that the Middies play a wide open brand of football and love to pass the ball. "They run a lot from the closed end," he said.

Tatum was asked if he feared the Navy passing attack. To this he replied, 'I hope it doesn't backfire on us, but my theory has always been that anytime that ball is in the air, it's as much ours as it is theirs.

Mantle, Skowron Are Named As Likely Series Starters

NEW YORK—(AP)—Both Mickey Mantle and Bill Skowron are tentative New York Yankee starters in tomorrow's World Series opener against the fit and ready Milwaukee Braves at Yankee Stadium.

With comfortbale weather predicted, a crowd of about 70,000 is expected to jam the big ball park for the Yanks' 23rd series. Game time is 12 noon (EST) with wide-flung radio and television (NBC) coverage.

The physical condition of Mantle and Skowron continues to be the most important news item as both mangers have named their starting pitchers. Whitey Ford (11-5) of the Yanks and Warren Spahn (21-11) of the Braves will hook up in a battle of lefthanders.

Although Ford has been handicapped by a sore shoulder, he hit his true stride in early September and has been groomed for this important "money game" by Coach Jim Turner. Spahn, 36-year-old Milwaukee ace, has been Manager Fred Haney's big "stopper" for two years.

Intramurals Fights Weather To Open Today

Under the direction of Coach Walter Rabb, the Department of Intramural Activities is beginning the 1957-58 year with plans for a bigger and better program of activities for the UNC Student body.

Coach Rabb and his assistants have attempted to set up a program which will arouse the interest of the students and promote leadership and a spirit of competition unequaled by any prior year. Cooperation is absolutely necessary to make the program jell and everyone is urged to participate and enjoy the facilities provided for this program.

In the two weeks school has been open the field supervisor has enlisted the aid of a fine group of officials for tag football, and the department is confident of good officiating this year.

The graduate tag football league was originally scheduled to begin on Monday, September 30. However, the traditional "Carolina Monsoons" have stepped into the picture. But with weather permitting, the department plans to open the season today at 5:00 p.m. with Law School-1 playing Medical School. The Dormitory and Fraternity leagues will begin play on October 7th. For the benefit of the new managers, the games that are cancelled because of inclement weather will be rescheduled the following week.

Due to the necessity of securing officials from the varsity wrestling squad and the use of wrestling equipment, the weigh-in dates for Intramural wrestling have been changed to October 28 and 29. Competition begins on October 31.

All hunters and fishermen who are interested in participating in the Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet should note that the entries close on October 18, and that the meet will be held on October 22 at the Durham Wildlife Club. This should be an exciting day of competition and fun. If you would like further information, please contact the Intramural Ofice in Woollen Gym.

All managers are urged to keep the Co-rec Carnival in mind. The Carnival will be held in the Fall this year instead of Spring, as it was last year. This change was made to help everyone get acquainted with each other and possibly as a boost to other extra-curriculars outside the planned program of the University.

Sooners Still Tops In AP Poll; Duke 4th

By WILL GRIMSLEY
The Associated Press

Two behemoths of the Midwest, Michigan State and Minnesota, moved up as chief contenders for Oklahoma's No 1 college football position today and the Deep South mourned deflation of its perennial powers, Tennessee and Georgia Tech.

Oklahoma, idle last week and facing a mild test Saturday in Iowa State, held its place atop the Associated Press weekly poll put saw its top heavy favoritism sharply cut by the boys from the Big Ten.

The Sooners received 81 of the 134 first place votes of sports writers and broacasters for 1,223 points. Michigan State, which trampled Indiana 54-0, went into second place with 24 first place votes and 999 points. Minnesota, 46-7 victor Washington, graduated from six to third place.

Both are in a position to add to their prestige this week, while Oklahoma is toying with a breather foe. Michigan State invades Berkeley, Calif., to play California. Minnesota is host to Purdue.

While Tennessee was getting its lumps 7-0 from Auburn and Georgia Tech was being tied by Southern Methodist 0-0, Duke's Blue Devils emerged as the Souths current best bet for national honors.

Duke, which routed Virginia 40-0 climbed into the No. 4 position in the top ten standings, followed by Texas A&M, which dropped from second although still unbeaten; powerful Navy, Auburn, Iowa, Oregeon State and Michigan.

Georgia Tech, a Top Ten regular, fell from third to 14th and Tennessee, which ranked eighth in the first poll of the season and No. 2 behind Oklahoma a year ago, dropped completely from sight.

Texas A&M lost ground despite a 21-0 victory over Texas Tech.

Bishop Paces Harriers In Trials

By DAVE WIBLE

Wayne Bishop smooth striding junior from Greenville set the pace for Carolina's cross-country squad over a muddy, rainsoaked coursed around Kennan Woods as the defending ACC champs puffed and panted their way through the season's first time trials.

Bishop covered the estimated four mile course in 20:30, fifteen seconds ahead of Dave Scurlock, Carolina's outstanding midle-distance man. Completing the top trio was Senior Everett Whatley the team's captain and top notch miler.

The trial was help in preparation for the team's opening meet which will be at Clemson next Monday. The weather for the past two weeks has slowed the squads progress considerably and caused yesterday's trials to be held on a makeshift course, the regular course under water in several places.

A sigh of relief was heard from the onlookers as Bishop made his way around the track to the finish for it was at this same time last year that he injured his leg during a trial and was forced to sit out the season.

Finishing on down the line were Cowles Liipfert, Alex Coffin, Howard Kahn, Pickle Hunter, John Reaves, Doug Henderson, and Frank Sirianni in that order. The fourth man, Liipfert, was a freshman cross-country sensation last year going undefeated until stopped by a twisted ankle in the last two meets.

Prior to the varsity run the freshman squad ran a trial over half the distance. Worth Sweet finished first covering the distance in 12:15. Close behind was Harvey Miller. Completing the top five were John Bowles, Bob Costello, and William ackett. F

The freshmen have a tentative meet scheduled for Saturday at 12:30 with East Mecklenburg High School of Charlotte.

Freshman Gridders Prepare For Opener With Maryland

By ERWIN FULLER

Rain forced Carolina's Tar Babies inside the Tin Can yesterday as they continued preparations for their season's opener Friday afternoon against Marylands' Baby Terrapins at College Park, Maryland.

Coach Bud Carson sent his charges through a snappy but thorough dummy drill, with emphasis on polishing the timing and coordination of his units. If weather conditions improve, the group will work outside today, with Carson taking a good look at the UNC pasing game. The Tar Babies are scheduled to depart from Chapel Hill early Thursday afternoon to travel by bus to College Park. Kickoff time in beautiful Byrd Stadium is set for 1 p. m.

Coach Carson said yesterday that "considering the weather and practice difficulties we've experienced, especially in the last few days, I think we are about as ready as could be expected." He was particularly pleased with last Friday's heavy contact drill, and commented afterward that " the boys looked much better today."

The UNC mentor is expecting a tough battle with the Maryland group. "Coach Whitey Dovell and his asistant have a very good group of boys to work with, and from all reports, they've done a superb job in developing a strong all-round game there," he stated. Dovell, a Maryland performer under Jim Tatum, operates from the split-T style of offense, the same system the Tar Babies will employ.

The Maryland Battle could well be the making of this Tar Baby outfit. "This game will be very important to our morale and spirit. If we are fortunate enough to come home with a decisive win, I think these boys will be very difficult for the remainder of our opponents to handle," said Carson. "On the other hand, we can expect to make some mistakes, and against a team like Maryland, no one can say what the outcome will be. We just hope to hold our mistakes to a minimum and work out those that we do make as best we can during the game", he continued.

Defense will be a strong point for the UNC club, in Carson's opinion. "We've had more time to work on this phase of play in our scrimmages with the varsity." Carson ponits out, however, that his boys ave a very strong offensive potential. "We'll be able to better judge our overall strength after the Maryland game, but I think our offense will show up very well. We've got several boys who are definite threats any time they handle the ball."

Excellent depth at nearly every position promises to be a second Tar Baby forte. "The competition for every post as been very keen. We have some 36 boys among whom there is very little noticeable difference in skill and playing ability. We haven't had the opportunity to work with any of the boys as much as we would have liked, and thus there are some boys who haven't really had a chance to prove themselves to us. "There are boys running with our fourth unit at present who appear very promising and who are going to move up if they continue to play the brand of football they've been displaying in recent practice sessions", stated Carson.

As a whole the Tar Babies are in good physical shape. However, two players, Danny Sofranko and Bob Jenkins, are definitely out for the Maryland game. Sofranko, a Pennsylvania native and a very promising line prospect, has been on te disabled list for several weeks with an injured knee. Jenkins has been sidelined with a head injury.

news brief

W. Va. Integration

MATOAKA, W. Va. (AP)—Four of Matoaka High School's 10 Negro students returned to classes without incident today. The anti-integration outbursts of the two previous days appeared to be all but over.

The four arrived in a special school bus and were escorted to the door by state troopers. There were no loitering of white students to cause a commotion on the street, for police herded students into the building as soon as they arrived in the area.

Faubus Accused

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP)—Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland today accused Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas of "double-crossing" the four Southern governors who met yesterday with President Eisenhower to discuss the withdrawal of Federal troops from Little Rock.

McKeldin, one of the four who met with Eisenhower, said Faubus "has elected to pile infamy on the head of disgrace which he has inflicted on the great state of Arkansas." McKeldin was the only Republican on the Governors' committee.

West Blamed

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—Saudi Arabia today blamed western nations for Middle East tension and called for a U.N. "hands off" policy toward Syria.

Ahmad Shukairy, minister of state for Saudi Arabia, told the 82-nation general assembly "it is the policy of the West that is destroying ties with the Arabs."

He proclaimed Saudi Arabia's full solidarity with Syria and asserted shipments of Communist arms to that country is no business of the United Nations.

Wilson Leaving

No effective date was set. But the White House said Neil McElroy will take the oath as Wilson's successor at 8:15 a.m. (EDT) a week from today.

Wilson's letter of resignation, released at the White House along with Eisenhower's letter of acceptance, said he had remained in his post nearly five years and that was "much longer than I thought was possible or probable."

Confidential

NEW YORK (AP)—Confidential Magazine Publisher Robert Harrison said today the failure of jurors to reach a decision in the California criminal libel conspiracy case against the publication "certainly is proof that there was no basis for criminal prosecution."

In a statement issued here, Harrison said in part:

"The result of the California trial constitutes a vindication and reaffirmation by an American jury of our basic constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and freedom of the press—not only the freedom of a publisher to publish, but equally, if not more important, the freedom of the public to read."

Symposium Names Advisor

William Geer To Hold Post

William M. Geer, of the social science department, has been named faculty advisor to the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs, according to an announcement yesterday by Sonny Hallford, symposium chairman.

At the same time Hallford announced the appointment of Jerry Oppenheimer as executive secretary of the symposium.

Those appointments were made by the newly elected symposium officers.

Geer's duties are to act with the chairman as liaison with the university administration and student government; serve in advisory capacity to officers and committee chairman; and serve as a member of the executive council and of the program committee.

Hallford stated, "I am indeed happy that Mr. Geer will be our advisor and am looking forward to working with him in the coming months. It is our sincerest hope that we will have a very successful symposium."

As executive secretary, Oppenheimer's duties are to aid and assist the chairman of the symposium.

"I think it is indeed fortunate that we are able to obtain a person of Jerry's caliber to assist us in the work at hand," Hallford said.

Officers elected at the symposium's first meeting last Monday included Connie Whitaker, vice chairman; Mary Jane Fisher, secretary; and Al Goldsmith, treasurer. All have been previously active in student activities.

Negro Students Tormented By Little Rock White Boys

COMPILED BY WIRE EDITOR PAUL RULE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2—(AP)—Neither Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas nor President Eisenhower budged an inch today in their troops-in-Arkansas deadlock, but a presidential aide held out a measure of hope for agreement.

Sherman Adams, the President's top assistant and one of his closest advisers, said in a Chattanooga news conference:

"In our opinion a basis will be found for the early withdrawal of federal forces from Little Rock.

"I personally believe and certainly hope this will not occur again."

Adams' words offered the only glimmer of hope for any early settlement of one of the grimmest federal-state conflicts in the nation's history.

Faubus said at Little Rock today he was standing pat on his statement of last night. This was the one rejected by Eisenhower as inadequate. He wants stronger assurances that the governor will prevent obstruction of federal court orders for the integration of Central High School at Little Rock.

Federal troops and national guardsmen under federal control are in Little Rock now to enforce the court orders.

The White House today was as unyielding as Faubus, and Press Secretary James C. Haggerty said:

"There will be no comment on Gov. Faubus' statement today other than to say that I think the President's statement of last night is more apt than ever."

How is it more apt, Haggerty was asked.

The secretary replied there were several things, notably that the governor had been quoted as saying it was evident that disorders would follow withdrawal of federal troops.

Haggerty said the President will have a news conference tomorrow, his first since the integration crisis started building up at Little Rock a month ago.

Presidential aide Adams was in Chattanooga for a luncheon with Republican leaders on party finance matters in the Southeast. Adams declined to discuss how Eisenhower's handling of the Little Rock situation would affect the Republican Party in the South.

But, of Eisenhower's calling out the troops, Adams said:

"No American could have done so with more reluctance.

"These things should be considered:

"First, the executive department did not originate the (integration) plan. Secondly, the administration is not responsible for the decision of the Supreme Court in this matter.

"But whether we like it or not, it is the law of the land. The President agreed when he took his oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States as indeed did every governor."

Gov. Hodges Still Making Efforts To Remove Troops At Little Rock

RALEIGH, Oct. 2—(AP)—Gov. Hodges said today he still hopes that the impasse between President Eisenhower and Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus over removal of federal troops from Little Rock is "something in the way of a misunderstanding."

The governor said this as he revealed he was still making efforts to bring an agreement so that the troops may be removed.

He said that he had "made some contacts" during the day about the matter and that he expects to hear from Frank Bane, executive secretary of the Southern Governors' Conference, who has gone to Little Rock.

Hodges is chairman of a committee of southern governors created by the governers' conference. The committee conferred with President Eisenhower yesterday in an effort to work out an agreement for removal of the troops.

The governors thought their mission had met with success until President Eisenhower announced last night that he could not accept the wording of a statement in which Gov. Faubus said he would not obstruct the enforcement of orders by the U. S. District Court in Little Rock which ordered integration of the city's Central High School.

Earlier today Hodges told reporters that words added to the statement by Faubus had "somewhat negated" the terms under which the president had agreed to removal of the federal troops and restoration of the Arkansas national guard to state control.

Meanwhile, Gov. Faubus told a news conference today that he was "standing pat" on his statement as it was issued.

Hodges said he did not care to comment on Faubus' news conference remarks but that he expected to make a statement tomorrow. Hodges has a new conference set for 10 a.m.

The governor said he "still feels the president's use of troops in the Little Rock was "a tragic mistake."

Hodges told reporters "at the moment" he saw no need of his going to Little Rock. Asked if another meeting of the Governors' Conference would be called, Hodges said "It's not imminent."

Complete Unit To March Sat.

Contrary to the statement in yesterday's paper, the entire UNC Naval ROTC Unit will march onto Kenan Field just prior to the Carolina-Navy game.

On the field the unit will the lead by UNC cheerleaders in a cheer for Navy and then for Carolina. The UNC Midshipmen will then go to their seats on the Carolina side.

During the half-time the UNC NROTC Drill Team under the leadership of E. W. Butchart of Greensboro will perform.

The Honor Company of Annapolis Midshipmen, who will be at the game, will attend a dance at 8 p. m. in the Naval Armory. The dance is being sponsored by the Quarterback Society, the honor society of the NROTC Unit.

Tennis Coach Valdimine Cernick, who took over the coaching duties for Carolina's tennis team in the middle of the season last spring has returned to Chapel Hill and will coach the squad again this year.

There was some doubt whether the former Czechoslovakian would return this year. However it was announced yesterday that he definitely will be Carolina's tennis mentor.

Wishing to rebuild the Carolina tennis squad which had its worst season in many years last spring Coach Cernick is wasting no time. He has announced that there will be a meeting of all students interested in coming out for the varsity or freshman tennis teams on Friday at 2:30 on the tennis courts.

Yack Pictures

Freshmen and law students are reminded to have their Yackety Yack pictures taken either today or Friday from 1 to 7:30 p. m. in the basement of Graham Memorial. Students have been asked to wear dark coats and ties.

George Barclay To Speak At Pep Rally Friday Night

UNC's first All-American, George Barclay, will speak to Tar Heel fans at a torch lit pre-game pep rally here tomorrow night.

The speech by Barclay, All-American guard for the Tar Heels in 1935, will highlight the 6:15 p.m. event that precedes the Carolina-Navy game Saturday afternoon.

In addition, 100 torches will be distributed to fans by members of the University Club, the organization sponsoring the pep rally.

Rally-bound students will assemble at the Air Force entrance of Emerson Field, where they will meet the team. Then the group will proceed with the team to Woollen Gym, where a large bonfire will be lit off.

Plans are also being made for each of the campus's sororities to have a "queen" who will accompany the procession from Emerson Field to the gym.

At game time Saturday 800 boxes of confetti and 200 noise makers will be distributed in the Carolina bleachers.

Graduate Club Plans Dance

Members of the Graduate Club will usher in their fall social season tomorrow night with a dance featuring the music of Jan Crisp and his orchestra, club president Bill Deaton announced today.

The dance is scheduled for 8:30 in Kenan dormitory.

In addition to members of the Graduate Club, non-member graduate students and graduates of the University who live in the Chapel Hill area are also invited to attend.

Men are requested to wear suits and ties; women, date dresses. Refreshments will be served during the dance.

The committee members responsible for planning the function are: Jean-Pierre Boissuvt, Grace Alley, Barbara Battle, Yehia Dessouky, Nola Hatten and Margaret Minter.

Teamsters Challenged

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—The teamsters convention today seated delegates from 41 out of 68 local unions challenged by Chairman McClellan (D-Ark) of the Senate Rackets Committee, as having been illegally chosen.

Interdormitory Council Opens Season With Banquet Tonight

The Interdormitory Council will open its 1957 year with a banquet at the Carolina Inn at 6:30 tonight according to Tom Walters, president of IDC.

Guest speaker at the banquet is J. E. Wadsworth, director of the housing office at UNC. Wadsworth will discuss the importance of individual dorm government, using everyday problems to illustrate his talk.

"I feel that Wadsworth is a wise choice for speaker; he is a man close to the university and the dormitories, and he knows the subject first hand," Walters stated.

All IDC representatives and dorm presidents who make up the IDC body will be present at the banquet. New IDC officers are to be sworn in during the meeting.

Consolidated University President William Friday and UNC Chancellor William Aycock have been invited to attend the banquet.

"I am very pleased with the way the IDC is working out this year. All in all I am expecting a very big year for the IDC," Walters commented.

He announced that one of the big plans for this year is an emphasis on the IDC honorary society. "We hope to work out some means to make money and create ally set up an honor society scholarship.

Officers of the IDC this year are: Bob Carter, vice president; Neil Bender, secretary; Mike Hayes, treasurer; Frank Brown, ID court chairman; Pat Leonard, clerk of ID court.

The Two-Sided Mouth: Faubus And Integration, And Pontius Pilate . . .

President Eisenhower—vacuumized by advisers and vacillating as he is—is assuredly justified in retaining federal troops in Archaic Arkansas.

Gov. Faubus has exhibited a turn-coat attitude—an attitude of diplicity—even to his fellow Southern colleagues.

Southern governors negotiated with Ike with the understanding that Oligarchic Orval would stand behind their conclusion—above the board and honestly.

But Ozark Orval's statement exhibited very lucidly the two sides of his mouth:

The staunch "prohibitor of violence" sid.

Little Orval's statement reads:

"I now declare that upon withdrawal of federal troops, I will again assume full responsibility, in cooperation with local authorities, for the maintenance of law and order; and that the orders of the federal courts will not be obstructed by me."

Faubus's statement was called, reportedly, by Gov. McKeldin of Maryland, "a breach of faith." And it is a stab in the back to Southern mediator-arbitrator-governors like Luther Hodges of our own Tar Heelia who is making political hay while the Southern sun is in eclipse.

Faubus has exhibited the deceptiveness of Bob Cousy of peripheral vision fame; th double-daling double-tak characteristics of B & K: the venomous duplicity of the Garden of Eden's serpent. Could any combination be more conducive to violence?

One analyist dissected Faubus's double-dealing speech in this manner: (Outlining the points to which Ike objected)

"The first was that Faubus attempted to justify himself by saying that it had never been his intention to obstruct the orders of the federal court.

"The second is that he made withdrawal of the federal troops a first condition before he pledged himself to full responsibility.

"The third point is that he used the words that orders of the federal courts would not be obstructed 'by me.'"

This, of course, indicates that Faubus might hire a band of rogues—for that matter—and lynch prospective educationally integrated Negroes without soiling his hands.

He has played the prelude to violence. Now he might play Pontius Pilate and wash his hands while non-federal protected Negro students are persecutd.

And the Arkansas double-dealer says he has:

"Given until it hurts."

It is our sincere hope that Southern governors will be able through further negotiations to bring Ozark to his senses. He has said he will "stand pat."

Until he yields with a more responsible and less self-justifying statement, Ike should not recant.

The drama of Southern bias continues to unfold . . . .

Confidentially Speaking, Bad Apples Should Go . . .

It is a catastrophic and calamitous stroke of misfortune that Confidential Magazine and its scandalous sister Whisper have been temporarily acquited of criminal libel charges.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Herbert Walker called it a mistrial. We call it a miscarriage—of justice.

It is extremely important that jurors deliberate carefully before limiting freedom of the press.

But we interprete freedom as encompassing hidden connotations of the word—responsibility.

These magazines, Publisher Robert Harrison and Investigators Fred and Marjorie Meade are all exponents of filthy journalism—parasites who thrive on the moral mistakes of others—others of renown.

Perhaps the next jury will not be so lenient on these scandalmongers.

They give an unpleasant odor to the entire journalistic world . . .

A bad apple should be cast out . . . .

Prophecy: Success . . .

Yesterday's bi-leveled meeting between the Chancellor's Cabinet and student government leaders was assuredly a prophetic sign.

It prophesys a more successful working arrangement between the University administration and student government.

Perhaps a true junior partnership will crystallize from this initial good-will step.

The University's new progressive leadership — particularly Consolidated University President William Friday, Chancellor William Aycock and Business Manager J. S. Branch—is truly offering full cooperation to students and catering to their wishes.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Pick Yeself Up, Dust Yeself Off And Reknock . .

One of the most difficult, yet rewarding, of life's painful processes is defeat. It is difficult becauseit hurtsat the time. It is rewarding because the person who masters it is twice the person he was before.

During the college segment of our lives, we will be built up to be let down, we will think we have climbed Mt. Everest only to find ourselves drowning in the Dead Sea. We will alternate from heights to depths, crests to valleys, ad infinitum.

* * *

Almost every great person is great because defeat knocked him down and he had the intestinal fortitude to get up, brush himself off, and go on about his business.

Rudyard Kipling wanted to be a writer. But first, he had to receive 97 rejection slips fronr discriminating publishers.

Abe Lincoln liked politics. But a fast-talking little bit of a man ran off with the senatorial election at Freeport. We could go on and on eiting examples of people who finally "made it' after many lonely hoursand "island" years when all the others seemed to have found the mainland.

The really tragic ones are not those who suffer and go on. The tragic ones are those who give up on the one-yard line, the next to last chapter, the day before trit aph. The tragic ones are those who don't get up and brush themselves off.

And for every outstanding student on every campus there are ten more who could have been outstanding, for every leader there are ten who could have been leaders.

* * *

What if Kipling had thrown his manuscript in the trash can after the 96th rejection slip? What if Abe Lincoln had gone back to the woods because he couldn't be senator? What if Columbus had turned back the ship on Oct. 11? Whatif the famous Teacher who told his students: "Knock and it shall be opened to you . . ." had thought, "What's the use? I'm going to die anyway," and ended it all then and there?

FROM THE DAILY KANSAN:

Are We Lowering Armament Pants? & Fall's Fallen With Fast Fell Flick

On September 19, Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson made an announcement which probably stirred joy in the hearts of many young men and their mothers. He ordered a cut of 100,000 men in the armed forces in addition to those made earlier this year.

These cuts will bring our armed forces down to 2,600,00 men. Wilson promises more cuts by the middle of next year.

Mr. Wilson justified these cuts by saying that the money was needed for the production of the United States' new 3,000-mile guided missile. Mr. Wilson could have asked for additional money for missile production. Congress is aware of the international situation and the race for new and better weapons.

This additional cutback following so closely on the heels of previous cuts should fill the country with a feeling of uneasiness. Russia and China are building up their armies, and war clouds are gathering in the Middle East.

If we should enter a war tomorrow we would have a source of manpower which hasn't been tapped—young men aged 18 to 25. But even under an accelerated training program, none of these men would be ready for active duty for at least three months.

It takes time to train men to fight. Even a common rifle-bearing infantryman requires specialized training, not to mention specially trained radio operators, mechanics, etc., needed to fly our planes, man our ships and move our armies.

If we are going to cut our armed forces, we should at least require physically fit young men to undergo a six-month training period. The present six-month program is optional, not required.

Able-bodied men are being passed by. If a war should develop they would not be ready for months.

Now is the time for the U. S. to take a look at its defense program. We must plan ahead. After the bombs fall it will be too late. With inter-continental missiles in the possession of unfriendly powers we would not have enough timeto recover from an enemy attack which would hit at our very vitals.

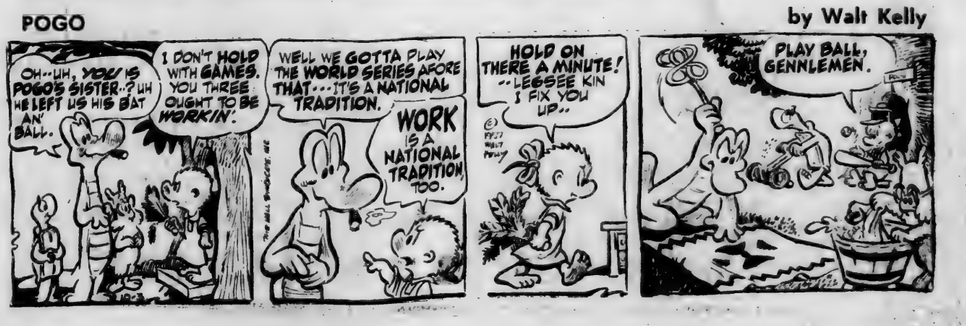
The time for preparation is now, not ten minutes after we are reeling from an unexpected nuclear attack. Our Civil Defense program is rusty and weak, our radar and plane spotting posts have huge gaps. Now weare weakening our armed forces, our greatest protection from the enemy.

Russia doesn't need to waste their time in disarmament conferenceswit h us. Give us time, we're disarming ourselves.

The feeling is difficult to define. Many try to pin down the feeling. The feeling of Fall, I mean.

It's a sensation that just appears. Everyone knows it is here, but no one knew when it came. Maybe it was when the first leaf fell. Or when the smell of that leaf moves slowly through a quiet evening, leaving a taste of other Fall evenings when leaves were something for children to play in and no one but an adult would think of burning them.

Maybe Fall really comes later. Maybe it is when it becomes just a little easier to get up in the morning.



Or maybe we're making it difficult. Perhaps Fall is a myth, maybe it is the end of summer and not a beginning at all. Fall could be the time of year when you tire of swimming, become bored with tennis, and find that

A Farewell

Frank Crowther

In the late summer of that year we lived in a dormitory in a village where we could look across the street to the post office. Troops of students went by the dorm and down the road, but they didn't raise any dust. In the early fall I got sick and went to the Infirmary.

When I finally got well enough to thing of women and liquor again, I couldn't find my Saint Anthony medal. Somebody probably got it at one of the dressing stations. I wasn't a Catholic, but I had heard that the medal was very useful.

One afternoon when I was still under the effects of morphine and demerol, I saw her. She looked fresh and young and beautiful. I had never seen anyone so beautiful. Her name was Bathroom Berkeley and she was one of the nurses who had been giving me the treatment. I knew right then what would happen. And it did.

I suddenly wished that I had been an ambulance driver, but my license had been suspended. I knew that this would never be a realization for me. It was alright, though.

She was carrying a shillelagh under her arm. "What's the stick?" I asked.

"It was given to me by a boy who was lost last year," she said.

"I'm awfully sorry."

"He was a very nice boy. He was going to marry me but he was captured."

"In the war?" I asked.

"No, by a Tri-Delt," she replied.

"You have beautiful hair," I said.

"I was going to cut it all off when he left," she remarked, "I wanted to do something for him

I didn't say anything.

"Do you suppose it will always go on?" she asked.

"What?"

"This sickness. What's to stop it?"

"It will have to crack somewhere." I replied bravely.

She smiled and left. She had a very nice smile.

That night the head nurse made her rounds. She picked up my chart and frowned at me.

"You're a Northerner in a Southern college," she asked.

"Yes, ma'am."

"How did you happen to do that?"

"I was in the South and already spoke the dialect."

"I'm learning it, too," she said. "It's a beautiful language. I'm a Northerner, too, you know."

I said that I didn't

"Dou you know if Miss Berkeley will be around soon?" I asked. She looked at me and she knew I knew she knew.

"She'll be here in an hour.55 With that she left.

I sent for the porter and when he came I told him in dialect to get me a bottle of ginzane at the wine shop, a fiasco of Chianti and the vening papers. My dialect must not have been too good because he cameb ack with a Coke, a cup of tea and the Daily Tar Heel. It didn't matter. The porter didnt' have a corkscrew, anyhow. They left me alone and I lay in bed and read the papers awhile, the news from the front in Little Rock, the list of dead and their decorations from Governor Faubus. It wasn't a very good war, but it was all we had.

Bathroom came in without my noticing her.

She walked over to the bed and I turned and looked up. When I saw her I was in love with her. Everything turned over inside of me. She sat on the side of the bed and leaned over and kissed me. I pulled her down and kissed her again and felt her heart . . . beating. My instincts rose above my sickness.

"You mustn't," she said. "You're not well enough."

"I must. I have to."

"You can't. oYu shouldn't."

In my anxiety I knocked over the Coke and the cup of tea. The Coke broke the water bottle and the tea spilled into her shoe. It was a hell of a commotion. We heard someone coming and she got up quickly.

"Oh, Frank," Bathroom said, "we could have had such a damned good time together."

"Yes," I said, "isn't it nice to think so."

She picked up her shillelagh and started crying. I liked the way she cried. As she got to the door she turned and said, "You will be good to me, won't you darling? Because we're going to have a strange life."

I didn't say anything. She was gone

Since I got out of the Infirmary I haven't seen Bathroom. But she'll be there when I go back. We have a fine time together one of these days. And if I get her in trouble we can always row to the other side of Hogan's lake. They tell me that we can find neutral territory over there.

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Chapel Hill: The South's Kidney?

Gary Nichols

The biggest laugh I had last week was reading the dire threats and warnings of a couple of readers to Ike telling him to "call off your dogs," etc. in regard to the Little Rock incident. For all their chest beating and blustering, I couldn't help but wonder who they thought was standing behind them in the revolt. They were revolting, all right.

It was a real pleasure to sit in Kenan last Saturday and watch the Tar Heels play the brand of ball they are capable of playing.

I was impressed by the cheering that filled the stadium, too. I'd like to thing that I'll hear it in the future when the team might need a little encouragement, but I guess I know better. I hope I'm wrong, but I doubt it.

I imagine, however, they'll be a big turn-out for the pep rally this Friday. It's always a little easier to ride with a winner.

UNC Library Is Observing Press Week

Wilson Library is participating in the observance of "National Newspaper Week," Oct. 1-8, with an exhibition on the main floor of recently published books in the field of journalism, principally on the freedom of the press.

National Newspaper Week is annually observed at this time in honor of the daily and weekly newspapers of the nation, under the sponsorship of the Newspaper Association Managers, Inc., the nationwide organization of state, regional and national press association managers.

The purpose of this special week is "to demonstrate to the American reading public their right to know, as exemplified by Federal and State Constitutions," and the slogan for this year is "Your Newspaper Serves."

The American Library Association is cooperating in the nationwide observance. In a letter to the Newspaper Association Managers, Lucile M. Morsch, president of ALA, said: "This year, it is especially significant that librarians salute editors and publishers, because the theme, "Your Newspaper Serves," characterizes simply and directly the chief responsibility which newspapermen and librarians mutually share.

"Together, we 'serve' our fellow-citizens with information, inspiration, and entertainment. We have stood together, too, for full freedom in making available all the facts on any subject, in the tradition of democracy's great contribution to the thinking of free men everywhere."

Card Winners Are Announced

The following students were announced as winners of Monday night's bridge tournament:

North-South: first place, Ted Hill, playing with townsperson, Bill Perkins, second place, Malcolm Clark and Mike Atheneos.

East-West: second place, Joe and Sue Converse; third place, Bettie and Richard Hicks.

The next regularly scheduled game is set for next Monday at 7:30 p. m. in the Rendezvous Room at Graham Memorial.

Dean Settles Cut Questions

Absences from 8 and 9 a. m. classes on October 12 and classes on October 14 will not count as double cuts, according to an announcement yesterday by Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

This announcement came as a result of doubt aroused concerning whether or not University Day, October 12, is considered a University holiday.

Dean Sitterson said that the two classes Saturday morning, October 12, and classes on Monday, October 14, may be cut without any double-cut penalty.

Just the 8 and 9 a. m. classes will be held on October 12 so that the students will be abled to attend Cancellor William Aycock's installation at 10:30 a. m. that day.

Fall

the sun isn't quite as important as it was in June.

Could it be the time when hay fever goes south?

Fall could mean different things to different people. To the old it may mean of slippery walks and an aching joint; to the young, the approach of Hallowe'en, the experience of eating too much during Thanksgiving, and a promise of tinsel and candy to go with a December Christmas.

Fall is the time of the hunter. You know Fall is here when you are first awakened by the sound of geese heading south for the Winter. Guns appear from closets. Alarm clocks ring a little earlier. And strangely enough, arising early for hunting is not the same as arising early any other time . . . another puzzlement of Fall.

To some, Fall might easily be defined as simply a season conducive to hayrack rides. This is health reasoning, but not comprehensive.

Whatever it is we're glad it's here.

Quintuplets Born

TOULON, France (AP)—The French news agency reported a 33-year-old mother here gave birth to quintuplets today—three girls and two boys.

The report said all the babies were doing well although born three months early. They have been put into incubators. The mother Mrs. Camille Christophe also was reported doing well.

Only two other sets of quintuplets have survived the first days of birth—the famous Dionnes of Canada and the Diligenti quintuplets, born in 1943 in Buenos Aires.

On Campus with Max Shulman

WHAT EVERY YOUNG COED SHOULD WEAR

Gather round, girls. Flip open a pack of Marlboros, light up, enjoy that fine flavor, that good filter, relax and listen while Old Dad tells you about the latest campus fashions.

The key word this year is casual. Be casual. Be slapdash. Be rakish. Improvise. Invent your own ensembles—like ski pants with a peek-a-boo blouse, like pajama bottoms with an ermine stole, like a hockey sweater with a dirndl.

(Dirndl, incidentally, is one of the truly fascinating words in the English language. The word originated on June 27, 1846, when Dusty Sigafoos, the famous scout and Indian fighter, went into the Golden Nugget Saloon in Cheyenne, Wyoming, to see Lily Langtry. Miss Langtry did her dance in pink tights. Dusty had never seen anything like that in his life and he was much impressed. He thought about her all the way home. When he got home his wife Feldspar was waiting to show him a new skirt she had made for herself. "How do you like my new skirt, Dusty?" asked Feldspar. He looked at the large, voluminous garment, then thought of the pink tights on Lily Langtry. "Your skirt is darn dull," said Dusty. "Darn dull" was later shortened to dirndl, which is how dirndls got their name.)

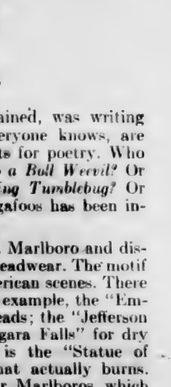
But I digress. We were smoking a Marlboro and talking about the latest campus styles. Casual, we agree, is the key word. But casual need not mean drab. Liven up your outfits with a touch of glamor. Even the lowly dungaree and man-shirt combination can be made exciting if you'll adorn it with a simple necklace of 120 matched diamonds. With Bermuda shorts, wear kneecymbals. Be guided by the famous poet, Cosmo Sigafoos (whose cousin Dusty invented the dirndl), who wrote:

Sparkle, my beauty,
Shimmer and shine,
The night is young,
The air's like wine,
Cling to a leaf,
Hang on a vine,
Crawl on your belly,
It's time to dine.

(Mr. Sigafoos, it should be explained, was writing about a glowworm. Insects, as everyone knows, are among Mr. Sigafoos' favorite subjects for poetry. Who can ever forget his immortal Ode To a Boll Weevil? Or his Tumbling Along with the Tumbling Tumblebug? Or his Fly Gently, Sweet Aphid? Mr. Sigafoos has been inactive since the invention of DDT.)

But I digress. We were smoking a Marlboro and discussing fashion. Let us turn now to headwear. The motif in hats this year will be familiar American scenes. There will be models to fit every head—for example, the "Empire State Building" for tall, thin heads; the "Jefferson Memorial" for squatty heads; "Niagara Falls" for dry scalps. Feature of the collection is the "Statue of Liberty," complete with a torch that actually burns. This is very handy for lighting your Marlboros, which is terribly important because no matter how good Marlboros are, they're nowhere unless you light them.



© Max Shulman, 1957

Whatever you wear, girls—and men too—you'll find the perfect accessory is Marlboro, whose makers take pleasure in bringing you this column throughout the school year.

Little Rock

thought they had worked out an agreement last night.

That collapsed, however, when Faubus' reception of the proposal failed to satisfy Eisenhower.

Two of the nine integrated Negroes were reportedly chased, beaten and kicked today inside Central High School. The two Negroes, both boys, were not injured.

"We wanted to make it so miserable, they wouldn't want to go to the school," said a white boy who described himself as one of the Negroes' tormenters.

The two Negroes were identified by the white boy and a companion as Terrance Roberts and Jefferson Thomas. The white boys said the Negroes eventually were rescued by a teacher, although national guardsmen were on duty inside the building at the time.

In New York the National Council of Churches today delayed a proposed commendation of President Eisenhower for upholding desegregation laws after a suggestion that "some southern governors" also be commended.

No opposition was expressed to a portion of the declaration lauding President Eisenhower's handling of the Arkansas racial crisis, but action was stalled by the suggested pat on the back to some southern governors.

Veterans Administration Issues Last-Minute Reminder To GIs

Three last-minute reminders to 750,000 veterans training this fall under the Korean GI Bill were issued today by the Veterans Administration.

First, veteran-students were reminded that they should have enough money of their own to tide them over the first two months of GI training. It takes that long, under the law, for a veteran's first month GI allowance check to reach him.

VA's second reminder has to do with the monthly certifications of class attendance. These should be signed by the veteran and a representative of his school, and sent to VA promptly after each month of training completed. Late certifications invariably mean late checks, VA said.

The third VA reminder is for veteran-students who want to get part-time jobs after school, to supplement their GI allowances. There is no limit on the amount of money GI students may earn outside of class. In fact, they need not report outside earnings to VA.

The only "ceiling" on earnings applies to veterans training on-the-job under the Korean GI Bill. In their case only, if earnings are above a certain level, GI allowances will be reduced, VA said.

No Flu Says Infirmary Head— Just Too Much Rush And Rain

Scores of Carolina students continued their trek to the infirmary Wedesday as a siege of "common cold" cut down on classroom attendance.

However, University Physician Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth said there is "nothing to be alarmed of at this point."

While numerous cases of respiratory infection have been noted on the campus, infirmary officials said Tuesday's bed-ridden patients numbered just over 30.

"Most have been out-patient cases," one spokesman said.

Dr. Hedgpeth said current incidences of "respiratory infection" are "nothing more than we experience here every year about this time."

"There is nothing to suggest an outbreak of influenza," the physician commented.

He blamed ill feelings of UNC students on "rush, football game, school starting and wet, rainy weather."

Follow the TAR HEELS In THE DAILY TAR HEEL

The educated toe of the Cleveland Browns' big tackle has been filling sports pages and record books for the last 10 years. By the end of the 1955-56 season, Groza's strong right foot had scored a total of 764 points, kicked 393 out of 403 points after touchdowns, and booted more field goals (92) than any other grid star in history.

A tip from "the toe" —Lou Groza

While Groza is still very much in the football present, he's already well along with his plans for gridiron retirement. And, according to Lou,

"One of the easiest ways I know of to save for retirement is to put part of every pay chec U. S. Savings Bonds."

With a little planning and saving, retirement can be a real reward for your work. And the sooner you get going with these plans, the less you'll need to save each month.

Let's say you're now 45 and start investing $37.50 a month in U. S. Series E Savings Bonds. At 65 you'll have a retirement fund of $12,000. Another man is now 55, but he invests $75 a month in Bonds. At 65 he'll have $10,000. Both of you will have invested the same amount—$9,000; but you, the early starter, will have accumulated 20% more money.

Every day you put off saving is costing you money. So take a tip from the old dependable scorer, Lou Groza, and start scoring where it will count the most—with a regular retirement investment program in U. S. Savings Bonds. Sign up for Payroll Savings where you work. Or invest in Bonds regularly where you bank.

FIRST MEETING SINCE '46

Old Rivalry Renewed; Justice Was Last Star

The last time the Carolina Tar Heels ran into the Middles of Annapolis, a fellow named Charlie Justice saddened the hearts of many Armirals. This Saturday, a team called desire or otherwise known as the Tar Heels have their work out for them.

Coach Eddie Erdelatz' Navy team is considered the best of the East this year and will come to Chapel Hill with a perfect 2-0 log after having humiliated Boston College and William and Mary by respective 46-7 and 33-6 scores.

In 1946, the last time Carolina played the Middles, Justice, who was then a mere freshman, led the Tar Hels to a 21-14 victory in a series that sas been intermittently going on since 1899. There have been four UNC-Navy games to date and that win in '46 is the lone Tar Heel victory.

Tar Heel Coach Jim Tatum had nothing but nice things to say about his team's surprise 25-0 victory over Clemson last week, but he made it clear that any progrosticating was up to the sports scribes. He says his crystal balling days are over.

The Tar Heels emerged from Saturday's Clemson victory in good physical shape, but, more important, they are hungry for more food after getting their first victory in some time. The squad is in high spirits says halfback Jim Schuler, a young fellow fith great enthusiasm:

"We're going to beat Navy . . . I can feel it in my bones."

That's a big order and one that will not come easy for any team in the nation this year. The oddsmakers likely will make Navy a large odds-on favorite.

Navy will field a line averaging about 212 pounds per man. Carolina still will have the edge there, since it has been fielding a starting line thta averages 220 pounds per man. Navy should reign in the speed department, though.

The forte of the Middy line will rest in the 235 pound frame of 1956 All-America Honorable Mention, tackle Bob Reifsnyder. The Navy backfield will be headed by Tom Forrestal, who has come into his own this year as a carrier and aerial wizard. He showed of-and-on finesse last year at quarterback. Navy ends in and fullback Ned Oldham, the team's leading ground-gainer last year, should handle the offensive chores along with 190-pound halfback Al Swanson.

The Tar Heels have been getting stellar line play from tackles Leo Russavage, Don Redding, Stuart Pell and Phil Blazer and the development of the center position has also drawn praises.

Ronnie Koes, 216 pound junior, has been first rate, while junior Fred Swearingen of Petersburg, Va. was moved to a guard slot last week because of his outstanding center play. He started the Clemson game and a standout.

In addition, Ttatum can depend on starting guard Jack Lineberger and opposites Ed Furjanic and Don Stallings to do a creditable job through the middle of the line.

Arleady a crowd seems to be gathering around Chapel Hill for the big game at Kenan Stadium Saturday and according to the advance ticket sales, this one should draw more than 30,000.

Gridders Come Out For Drills

The Carolina Tar Heels were given a break by the weatherman today and held their first football practice of the week on a dry field.

The Tar Heels, in making preparations for Saturday's game with highly-ranked Navy, worked primarily on their pass defense and kicking game.

Coach Jim Tatum lauded the play of tackles Stuart Pell, a 230-pound senior. Ttaum added that Fred Swearingen, starting guard in last week's game with Clemson, was still working out lightlyafter suffering a bruised shoulder. Swearingen excelled in the Clemson game after being moved from second unit center position to starting left guard.

In previous practice sessions this week, Tar Heel drills have been hindered by rainy weather.

Program Sellers Meet

A meeting is set this afternoon for the program sellers at the Carolina-Navy game to be played here Saturday. The meeting will be held at four o'clock in room 304 Woolen Gym.

Yanks Stop Braves, 3-0 In Opener

Lefty Whitey Ford limited the Milwaukee Braves to five hits in their first World Series appearance today and the New York Yankees pounded Warren Spahn to cover in the sixth and took the series opener, 3-1.

A crowd of 69,476 packed Yankee Stadium and saw the Yanks hammer Spahn for two clinching runs in the sixth inning.

Bill Skowron, the Yankee clouting first baseman who hadn't played a game since Sept. 13 because of an ailing back, was forced out of action after two innings when he re-injured his back. Elston Howard and then Joe Collins succeeded him.

The veteran Spahn was touched for seven hits before he was removed with one out in the sixth. Ernie Johnson finished that inning but was removed for a pinch hitter and Don McMahon pitched the last two innings for the Braves.

Spahn was the victim of all three aYnkee runs, although the third was scored on a squeeze play executed by Jerry Coleman and Yogi Berra after he had been removed.

Hank Bauer drove in Coleman with the first Yankee run with a double in the fifth and Andy Carey's single in the sixth scored Howard with the second Yankee tally.

The Braves, who had made only three hits in the first six innings, finally scored off Ford in the seventh. Covington opened with a double into the left field corner. Nippy Jones, batting for Erner Johnson, the second Milwaukee pitcher, moved Wes to third with and infield out and Schoendienst drove in the run with a ground single through the middle of the diamond.

The second game will be played in Yankee Stadium tomorrow with Bobby Shantz, 11-5 expected to pitch for the Yankees and Lew Burdette, 17-9 for the Braves. Then, after a day off for travel, the series will move to Milwaukee.

BEST DON'T AWAYS WIN

University of North Carolina coach Jim Tatum gave a shining example the other day of how a team can lose despite the odds. One year his Maryland team outgained North Carolina State offensively 499 yards to 86, but still lost the ball game, 16-14. State hadn't won a game all year at the time.

Bocters Embark On Heavy Slate With One Win

By BOB MYERS

To play heads-up soccer is to get started on the right foot.

That's the philosophy of Coach Marvin Allen as the Carolina soccer squad, with one win already in the bag, embarks on a heavy schedule.

Initial efforts of the bootsers to better a 4-3 won-lost mark oif last season were successful. Well heeled with experience, the spirits of the charges weren't dampened by a muddy field as they blanked Roanoke College, Va., 33-30, in the season's opener.

Number one headache for Coach Allen is finding a goalie to replace capable Chuck Hartman, now an asistant mentor. Three men, Jim Ratty, Mickey Zlotnicki and John Holland have the edge on the spot.

Heading the list of returnees is Captain Bill Blair of Morehead City, A right halfback, Blair was the sparkplug in the Roanoke test, though he didn't tally.

The imposing list of seasoned players includes Charles Covell, Ted Smith, who scored twice against Roanoke; Tom Rand, Jim Purks, Ted Youhanna, Rick Grausman and Coleman Barks.

The soccer schedule:

Oct. 7-at Lynchburg, 14-Washington and Lee, 21-at Virginia, 25-at Davidson. Nov. 1-Pfeiffer, 8-Maryland, 15-Duke, 20-at N. C. State.

. . . DON COKER . . .
Sophomore Of Week

AP Names Don Coker Sophomore Of Week

Raleigh, Oct. 2 (AP)—Sophomore football tars cavorted all over the place last Saturday when Carolina's hitherto hapless Tarheels humbled Clemson's high and might Tigers.

Clemson's sophs had been more widely advertized, but when the chips were down theyi were outshone by Coach Jim Tatum's youngsters.

The standout of the Carolina sops was Don Coker of Reidsville who rates the nod as this week's associated press Sophomore of the week.

Coker, A-1, 196-pounder from Reidsville played a part in three of the Tar Heel scoring drives. He bulled three yards for a first down in a fourth and one situation in the second Carolina touchdown drive, caught a 12-yard pass the third time the Tar Heels moved goalward, and he scored the final touchdown on a nine-yard sprint. In all, Coker gained 25 yeards in 5 tries.

At that, though Coker just barely outshone Clemson's shop quarterback, Harvey White, a 6-2, 200-pounder from Greenwood. White led a Clemson drive that carried to the UNC 17 before it fizzled. White completed 4 of 9 passes for a gain of 55 years.

Other soph standouts in the Clemson Carolina contest included Clemson fullback Dough Cline who gained 16 yards in tries and Carolina's sub quarterback Jack Cummings who passed to end Takey Crist in a play that covered 53 yards to set up the last Tar Heel score.

Directs Booters

Marvin Allen's Carolina soccer team began its 1957 schedule Monday with a 3-0 win over Roanoke College. The booters, undergoing numerous personnel changes, face a "loaded" schedule this fall.

Harrier Should Be Strong; No Dead Weight—Ranson

Loaded is a misleading term for the prospectus of Carolina's defending ACC champion cross country term.

That's why veteran Coach Dale Ranson refers to his crop of distance runners as "long-legged" and "long-winded." "We don't want to give the impression there's any dead weight around," Ranson said.

And the ranson for Ranson's apparent optimism is the return of four veterans from last year's title-winning team, which sprinted to a dozen against one loss, and an impressive group of new sophomores.

Heading the quartet of lettermen is Greensboro's Dave Scurlock, a lanky junior who locked up four University track records in competition last year. Scurlock ground out new school track marks in the 440 and 880 yards runs and as anchor man in the mile and two mile relays.

Stomping into shape with Scurlock for an opening visit to Clemson, Oct. 7, are Captain Everett Whatley, John Reaves, a Charlotte senior and Howard Kahn, all lettermen.

Being counted on heavily in a combined effort to fill the fleet shoes of departed two-time All-American Jim Beatty of Charlotte is Wayne Bishop, a junior from Greenvile who sat out last season with a leg injury.

Depth is aforded by two juniors who saw limited action last season, Alex Coffin of Asheboro and Doug Henderson of Ellerbe.

The promise shown by a foursome of upcoming sophomores is making Ranson breathe easier.

The new varsity men are Cowles Liipfert of Winston-Salem, Fick Arthur of Greenville, Frank Sirianni of Long Beach, N. J., and Joe Friedberg of Great Neck, N. Y.

If pat records are indicative the the Tar Heel harriers will be strong contenders for conference laurels.

Since taking the reins as track-cross country mentor in 1927, Coach Ranson's teams have never finished lower than fourth ni cross-country competition. The Tar Heels have won or finished in the runner-up slot in the ACC each year since its creation five years ago.

State Preps For Clemson

RALEIGH (AP)—Offensive plays and defense maneuvers against the Clemson style attack today occupied the N. C. State College football squad.

The Wolfpack also sharpened its passing game and gave attention to kicking. Tony Guerrieri, Dick Hunter and Ken Trowbridge got off booming punts in the kicking session. Dick Christy worked on kickoffs.

Coach Earle Edwards found his squad in good physical shape. The Wolfpack, fresh from wins in its first two games will travel to Clemson Friday morning for the game on Saturday afternoon. The squad will work out at Clemson lightly Friday afternoon. They will return to Raleigh immediately after the game.

Well-Known Commentator To Appear Here With Forum

By MARY MOORE MASON

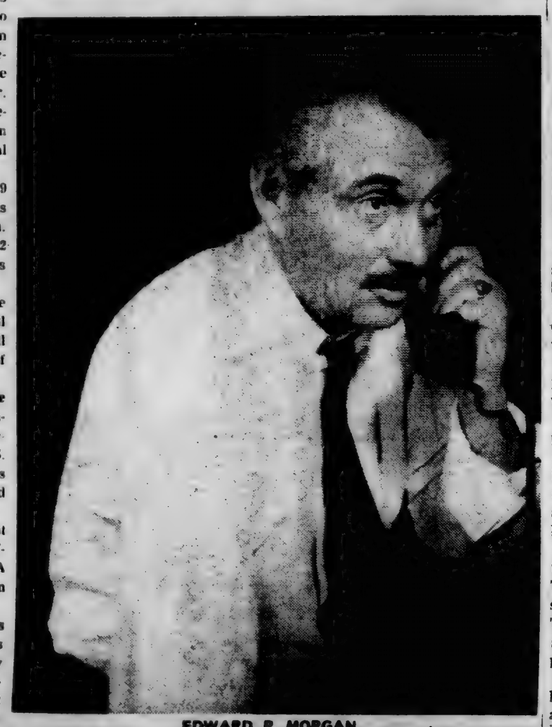
News will be made and communicated to the "outside world" October 21 and 22 when Edward P. Morgan, well-known ABC commentator, broadcasts his program, "Edward P. Mogan News" from the University of North Carolina.

Morgan will be here in conjunction with a YWCA forum which is concerned with civil liberties. Also present for the two day forum meeting will be William L. McGovern, attorney at law for the firm of Arnold, Fortas, and Porter, the renowned firm which has presented lawyers for the defense in most of the recent congressional civil liberties cases.

Both men will arrive October 19 and be guest speakers at various places in Chapel Hill on the 20th. Then the morning of the 21 and 22 they will visit class rooms as speakers and discusion leaders.

During the afternoons of these two days each of the two men will lead a forum. These forums will take place in the upstairs rooms of Graham Memorial.

Morgan's subject will be "The Responsibility of Mass Comunication to Freedom" while Mr. McGovern's subject will be "The U. S. Government's Loyalty Program As Related to National Rights and Government Security".



The whole forum is being brought to Carolina through the Public Affairs Committee of the YWCA whose chairman is Betty Carolyn Huffman.

"The subject of human rights is a very controversial one," says Miss Huffman, "for now so many things are happening in our government that many construe it being against our constitutional rights." As examples of this she cited the current congressional investigations which many seem to think of as "witch hunting" and the question of jury trials and the use of confidential F. B. I. records.

Morgan is not only a well-known commentator but also has an ABC television show, "Open Hearing". He also has served as editor and producer of Ed Murrow's "This I Believe" program. In April of this year he was the recipient of radio's highest award: The George Foster Peobody Award, for the best radio news broadcasts during 1956.

McGovern, a graduate of Yale, was Special Assistant to the Attorney General at one time.; was on the Board of Economic Warfare in Chungking; and was the specially appointed Deputy Assistant Attorney General of Georgia for trial of interrocial cases.

The Y is now preparing to draw up a slate of students to atend these forums All interested students are invited to notify the Y immediately.

World In Brief

Rumbled Down

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y, Oct. 3—(AP)—Egypt called today for a cooling off period on the middle east, but served notice it would not tolerate that "a hair of Syria be ruffled by any aggressor."

Egyptian foreign minister mahmoud Fawzi, in a policy speech to the 82-nation general assembly, declared that the "huge clamour made about dangers to peace in the middle east has, by now, rumbled down and screeched into nothing at all."

Top Spy On Trial

NEW YORK, Oct. 3—(AP)—The government today began trial of Rudolf Abel, allegedly the topmost Russian spy ever snared in this country, but there were indications the first testimony may not be heard for days or weeks. The defense has pleaded for more time to prepare.

The case was called in Brooklyn Federal District Court before Judge Mortimer W. Byers. During the next half hour government and defense attorneys held a whispered conference with the judge.

The nature of the parley was not immediately disclosed, but possibly concerned defense moves to delay the case.

Brucker Denies

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3—(AP)—Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker said today he is "unaware of any instances in which members of the Armed Forces have used unnecessary force against individuals in Little Rock."

Brucker made this assertion in a statement which he said was issued because "so many loose and irresponsible accusations" have been made against troops of the 101st Airborne Division.

'Real Concern

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 — (AP)—President Eisenhower said today he views Syrian developments with "real concern" even though four Arab countries seem less alarmed than previously.

He gave this newest assessment of pro-Communist moves in Syria in commenting on a strongly worded anti-Western speech at the United Nations yesterday by Saudi Arabia's delegate.

At a news conference, Eisenhower clearly showed he was surprised and somewhat bewildered by the Saudi representative's attempt to blame the West instead of Russia for Mideast tensions.

Little Rock School 'Walkout' Fails

Negro Is Hung In Effigy; Ike Blasts Faubus

Compiled by Paul Rule
DTH Wire Editor

LTITLE ROCK, Ark. — (AP) — Federalized National Guardsmen, rifles across their chests, yesterday broke up a menacing throng of 75 white students who walked School here.

The demonstrators had hoped to pull out with them most of the school's 2,000 white students in a forceful protest against Negroes in their classrooms. But ringleaders admitted the demonstration was a flop.

For an ugly split-second it appeared a new riot might be build-out of integrated Central High ing up on the street before the school where blood was shed in adult riots and demonstrations last week.

A Negro was hung in effigy and the straw-filled dummy set afire. The demonstrators shrieked and shouted in angry near-hysteria. They milled about seemingly in search of leadership that would point a course of action.

Sixty National Guardsmen quickly formed solid ranks. With rifles aslant across their chests they moved silently and inexorably on the demonstrators, for a moment, the students seemed inclined to resist. Then they grudgingly gave way.

Within 30 minutes the street in front of the school was deserted and quiet. Barricades were restored in the area for the first time since last week. The smouldering dummy was removed by soldiers.

President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas debated the Little Rock school integration crisis at long range and the question of withdrawal of federal troops was still far from solved.

At his first news conference in more than a month, Eisenhower said he believes Faubus is "mistaken in what he is doing, and is doing a disservice to the city and to his state."

In Little Rock, Faubus told a news conference he had given the President "unequivocal" assurances that he would maintain order and not obstruct integration if federal troops are withdrawn and the Arkansas National Guard returned to State control.

Housing Head Compliments Cooperation

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Interdormitory Council initiated its 1957-58 year with its second annual kickoff banquet at the Carolina Inn last night.

Those present at the dinner included: members of the administration from the Division of Student Affairs, the Housing Office, student government officers, IDC representatives and dormitory presidents.

Tom Walters, president of the IDC opened the meeting with a greting to all those present and expressed his desire to make this year's IDC a great organization.

At the conclusion of the meal Bob Carter, vice president, conducted the installation of the IDC representatives. The new representatives repeated the oath of office as it was read by Carter and were given certificates of membership in the IDC.

Administrative and student guests were recognized by Mike Hayes and Neil Bender, IDC officials. Mr. James Wadsworth, director of student housing and main speaker for the evening, was introduced by Sonny Hallford, former IDC president.

Mr. Wadsworth gave a brief history of dormitory life on the campus. He stated that in 1833, room rent was charged at the rate of one dollar per semester.

He stated that housing problems had increased tremendously at the University in the past twenty years. After World War II, married students housed in Alexander until the completion of Victory Village; while single students resided at the Tin Can.

Mr. Wadsworth expresesd his gratitude to the IDC for helping to ease the everyday problems of dormitory life, saying, "the work of the housing office would not be nearly so effective without the wonderful co-operation of your organization.

"I commend the IDC for its constructive leadership and its handling of dormitory life. The doors of my office are always open to any member of the IDC."

President Walters had this to say at the conclusion of the meeting, "I feel that we have a fine group of boys to work with this year. They have all individually pledged their complete support to the IDC.

"We will try and emphasize the roll of the dormitory this year. We plan to also work in close conjunction with the Interfraternity Council. We sincerely hope for the greatest year in our history.

Car Stickers Must Be Displayed By Oct. 15

Students who do not have their car stickers displayed by Tuesday, Oct. 15, will be subject to disciplinary action, according to Ray Jefferies, asistant to be the dean of student affairs.

Jefferies said some 300 cars on campus either have not been registered or belong to freshmen.

Automobile regulations passed by the Student Legislature require that all students cars be registered with the dean of student affairs and that registration stickers be displayed on the cars.

Freshmen who attempt to possess an automobile on campus will be subject to the removal of their car privileges for a certain period of time. The length of this period will be left to the descretion of the Student Traffic Committee. Sophomores who do not have a "C" average are also subject to this ruling.

Juniors, seniors and sophomores with a "C" average who have automobiles on campus are subject to only one regulation: they may not park on campus between 7 a. m., and 3 p. m, Monday through Saturday.

If a student receives as many as five tickets for parking on Campus, he will be required to appear before the Traffic Committee and will be subject to the loss of his automobile privilege.

The student must pay a dollar fine for the ticket. But this payment does not excuse him from Traffic Committee discipline.

The necessity for regulations arose during the past few years because the number of automobiles owned by students increasted greatly. In an attempt to provide an adequate solution to the problem, the Student Legislature set up a series of regulations and approved the creation of the Student Traffic Committee to enforce these regulations. These rules and the Committee were approved by the UNC Board of Trustees.

ROTC Honor Society Meets

"L" Company, eighth regiment, of the National Society of Scabbard and Blade, held it's initial meeting of the school year in the Naval Armory Tuesday afternoon.

J. R. Alexander, captain, outlined plans for the coming year and lead a discussion on proposed projects for the company.

It was decided that representatives of the company would help greet midshipmen from the U.S. Naval Academy at the reception to be held in their honor at Graham Memorial immediately after the UNC-Navy game Saturday.

Dwight Brown, AFROTC, was elected first lieutenant of the company filling a vacancy created when a member resigned from the ROTC program.

Scabbard and Blade is a national honorary military society composed of members of the Air Force and Naval ROTC elected to membership on the basis of military excellence and scholarship.

Pep Rally Set Here Tonight

Six coed queens representing UNC's six sororities will take part in tonights' pep rally slated to get underway from Emerson Field at 8:30. Originally scheduled for 6:15, the rally will take place at this later hour in order to allow rushees and fraternity men to participate.

Highlighting the event will be a speech by UNC's first All-American George Barclay.

Head Cheerleader Frankie Black predicted that tonight's rally will be "the most sensational yet" and urged all students to participate.

"Carolina spirit at the game last Saturday was the best we've seen in years," Black said, "and we hope it will continue to grow beginning Friday night.

"Our spirit is the team's spirit; and a pep rally, such as the one Friday night, is one of the only ways we have of instilling the student spirit into the team."

Meeting the team at Emerson Field, students will proceed in a torch-light parade to Woollen Gym, where a large bonfire will be ignited. The six sorority queens will accompany the procession in six decorated convertibles.

The University Club, which is sponsoring the rally, will also distribute 800 boxes of confetti and 200 noise makers among Carolina fans at the game Saturday.

Library Doors

Library officials recently announced that early arrivers at the library will no longer be required to climb the steps leading to the main entrance of that building.

Henceforth the east and west doors (ground level) will be unlocked daily at 7:45—the same time the front doors are unlocked.

As an additional convenience, the warning bell will now be rung at 10:40 p.m., five minutes before closing time.

UNC Now Offers Degree In Physical Therapy

By PATSY MILLER

The University of North Carolina has become the second school in the South to offer a B.S. degree in physical therapy as it opened its program officially this fall.

Miss Margaret Moore, a native of Greensboro, will be in charge of the program here. Miss Moore has studied at Madison College in Virginia and at Walter Reed. She did her graduate work at Medical College in Richmond, Va.

The physical therapy curriculum consists of a four year program —two years in general college and two in the school of medicine. At the present time, the junior year is restricted to 12 students, male and female, on account of lack of space in anatomy and physiology classes, according to Miss Moore.

Eventually the program will expand to a capacity of 25 to 30 students.

Students desirous of working in phisical therapy are advised to contact the school here as soon as they become interested, so that they may be advised about the curriculum.

Undergraduates in general college take mostly science courses, and for that reason it is important that they be advised accordingly, Miss Moore said.

The only other school in the South to offer a degree in physical therapy is located in Richmond, although Duke University offers certificates.

The physical therapy program is one of the few exceptions admitting freshmen women to the campus.

Students are selected to enter the curriculum on a competitive basis. A sincere interest in physical therapy is the most important qualification, followed by academic status, Miss Moore stated.

Miss Moore, who has taught physical therapy ever since she entered the field, has long been interested in setting up a program in the South. "I have been convinced that the South needs such a program," she commented.

One of the goals of the staff at UNC is to eventually help the distribution of physical therapists. There are only 86 physical therapists in North Carolina, which ranks the state 35th in the nation, according to the number of physical therapists in relation to population.

Other students are still being advised as to the curriculum.

'Law Day' Set Here Saturday

Top hats, canes and half-time antics will add a dash of unusual color to the Carolina-Navy game Saturday as law students and alumni join in celebration of the traditional "Law Alumni Day."

Friday night, present staff members and alumni of the North Carolina Law Review will hear an address by State Attorney-General George B. Patton.

Patton's address will highlight a banquet to be held in the Carolina Inn and will follow a social hour slated to begin at 6:30.

Following the banquet the annual Barristers Ball will be held at the Chapel Hill Country Club from 8:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Saturday at 11 a.m. the Law Alumni Corporation will meet in Manning Hall Court Room. The main topic of discussion will be the law school foundation.

Immediately after Saturday's' game, a reception will be held for all law students, alumni and their wives and dates.

Faubus's Intelligence Thoroughly Exploited; All Gray Matter Listed

Greater Than Fanatics Ol' Huck & Jim, Yes'um;

You just can't do nothin' that'll erase the literary significance of figures like Ol' Huck and Jim.

And the humor of scenes like Huck's description of a river boat explosion which didn't hurt nobody:

"No'um, just killed a nigger."

Will be long remembered, long after the fanaticism of racially hyper-sensitive censors is put down—as low as a catfish swimmin' in icy winter-time water.

It 'shore seems sensible that any brand of folks would be proud of their heritage—their grand-daddies and great — grand-daddies, and what they done—and not try to put all that down to shame.

Times are right much better now. And it looks like they're gonna' keep gettin' better if folks will just keep their heads screwed on, and not go rantin' and ravin' 'bout the least little sign of one brand of folk gettin' treated better than another brand.

You've just got to keep your head. Nuthin's gonna' be solved by trying to kill everything your ol' man and his man and so on done. It's really kinda' sumthin' to look up to. Everybody's gotta' have sumthin' to look up to.

In more current dialogue, we reprint an editorial from The Wall Street Journal:

The New York City Board of Education has removed "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" from approved textbook lists for elementary and junior high schools, and the New York Times reports that one publisher says he was told by school officials that his contract would not be renewed for the book because it contained passages that were racially offensive.

Well, we once knew a man named Finn who didn't think very highly of the way Mark Twain portrayed old man Finn as a drunken, worthless tramp. Wasn't fair to the Finns, he said. But then the way Mark Twain made Huck such a fine youngster pleased him mightily and he figured things came out pretty evenly for the Finns.

As most everyone now knows (though we can't predict the future if others follow the New York educators lead), Huckleberry Finn tells the story of a youngster's life along the Mississippi in the 1840's, when things were quite different from nowadays. For one thing, there was slavery in those days and for another people were not as careful about their speech as they are nowadays.

The book is written in dialect, and it ranks pretty high among American classics because it is an accurate portrayal of the history of the times.

You can't do away with history, unless you want to make things seem different than they were, even if all Mark Twain's books were banned and burned.

But you might do away with some pretty fine literature, to say nothing of a pretty important freedom, if that idea that books ought to be written in a way to please everyone who reads them ever takes hold. And in the book at issue, you can do away with a very wonderful character.

We mean Jim. Jim was a Negro slave and despite his status and handicaps Jim was a man whose inner strengths made him for us the finest character in the book.

Maybe those who want to blacklist the book ought to remember that Mark Twain created Jim and that Mark Twain created old man Finn.

To want to destroy Jim because Twain portrayed faithfully the customs and dialect of the age and place Jim lived in strikes us as pretty senseless. Further, it's pretty senseless for any minority to want to destroy a book that's actually a powerful tract for human dignity.

It's about as senseless as suggesting that libraries and schools ought to blacklist Gunga Din on the ground that Kipling didn't dress him in the same British uniform as the men Gunga Din was better than.

Ath. Dept. Blindfolds

Student representation on the Athletic Council is purely figurehead—for appearance sake.

It is increasingly appalling to find that the small three-member student representation on this all-important committee is sworn to silence and utter secrecy—through a blood oath or some other ritual.

And the student body is elbowed into a dark corner—from which no illumination is cast on the actions of the athletic department.

The small student delegation on the council, to make matters worse, is denied representation on the Coaches Committee which lets coaches' contracts.

Yet students pay huge athletic fees into athletic department coffers.

It's the equivalent to emptying your wallet while blind-folded.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

Mobile Capital, Or Ike's A... Prexy on Wheel

Whit Whitfield

The Press has once more struck out at President Eisenhower because of his numerous and lengthy vacations. This last terse verbal attack on the editorial pages of The Daily Tar Heel was most uncalled for. Why, he had only twenty seven days this last time, and the Arkansas fiasco wasted quite a bit of this for him. Not only that, but the Southern Governors' Conference committee cut it short.

The headline of a UP story in The Durham Morning Herald read "Ike Ends Disrupted Vacation For Southern Governors Talk." Now isn't it a sad state of affairs when he has to interrupt his vacation to attend to the affairs of the nation? Who wouldn't call out the Airborne if he couldn't have his vacation in peace and quiet?

* * *

As we have said on another occasion, a good president needs plenty of rest to give him the much needed strength he needs to administer to the affairs of the nation. On purely this basis, Eisenhower must be a great president, for he certainly takes enough vacations.

It can't be too difficult to deal with the nation's problems from Augusta, Denver, Newport, or wherever else he may be on vacation, for if it were, conditions in the nation would not be so serene.

Since the nation can operate smoothly with its chief executive on the move so often, it may be a good idea to move the capital with him, allowing other cities (with good accommodations for congressmen, newspapermen, and staff counsels) to have the distinction of serving as capital of the United States. Let us not be selective and just use Newport, Augusta, or Denver. Move it around. Give the other cities a chance. After all, that's the democratic way to do things. If all men are created equal, then why not all cities? Why discriminate?

If this idea were carried to its logical conclusion, then we could have a summer government in the Catskills and a winter government in tropical Key West. Quite possibly the Riviera might even be a better idea. The climate in southern France is reputed to be conducive to good health (among other things).

(Special footnote to The Southern Governors' Conference Committee:

* * *

The action you have taken by pressuring the chief executor for a meeting concerning such trivia as the withdrawal of troops from Little Rock is most inconsiderate. Ike's vacation was to last on into October had it not been for you. Eisenhower was most thoughtful in coming home to mind the shop for a while. For this he should be commended. It is always nice to have the president in Washington, whenever posible.)

"It's Getting So You Can Hardly Stone People In Peace Any More"

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Stevenson's Wrinkled Forehead & Adlai's Brilliant 'Interlect' (sic)

EDITOR:

Now, please, don't get me wrong—I AM a Stevenson fan, and like the other college students, I consider him the darling of the political world—the only (if you'll pardon the expression) politican who understands those of book learning.

Consequently, when I heard I would actually get to see in person, in color, in flesh, blood and sweat, the man who's "greater in defeat than most men are in victory," I dashed over to Memorial Hall and camped there, missing three days of class. But it was worth it to obtain a choice spot in which to view every brilliant wrinkle on that magnificent forehead.

I cannot express my admiration for the immobility of his disinterested expression during the speeches, especially as I realize he was absorbing every word like a sponge (Dupont, of course).

When he was finally given the opportunity to arise, I was surprised to see he was a little man—no matter, he grew bigger as he spoke with charm, he complimented Gov. Hodges, whose face turned a shade pinker as, in happy modesty, he nestled deeper into his chin.

Stevenson's sense of humor was as witty as ever; no one was more aware of the fact than he. Along with the grateful audience, his face broke its usual composure and acknowledged this gift. The subject being education, the audience was warned against producing non-thinking students who might misunderstand future Stevensons.

When Mr. Stevenson mentioned audio-visual aids, the loudspeaker system (as if responding to roll call) came to a brief moment of life. It was stated that the two major problems in education today are federal aid and segregation; the former was said to have been a lost battle, the latter question was carefully avoided.

A brillant dissertation was heard on the inability of the student to gain adequate knowledge of todays complex system of government. This was followed up by the suggestion that the schools stress independent thinking.

In a strong finally, Stevenson proclaimed that he "didn't mean to criticize."

To tie things together nicely, the master of ceremonies again arose, issued a joke, and further reinforced the impact of the discussion by stating that, "we don't propose to tell you how to run your schools."

Joyfully, I left the auditorium, confident that my mind had begun to be filled with worthwhile information at last.

SINCERELY

EDITOR:

When such a distainguished distinguished gentleman, in his own rights, as Adlia Adlai Stevenson will make a visit to any place and particularly to Chapel Hill and to the campus of North Carolina, anyone with any sense will take the very pleasant opertunity opportunity to listen to such a man.

I believe that it is almost sinful for the administration of this University not to suspend class to give those people who value Adlia Adlai Stevenson's interlect, interlect or what ever the Daily Tar-Heel may call it, a chance to hear him.

Adlia Adlai Stevenson's experience and knowledge far surpasses that of anyone who is now connected with the present administrtion; and although the editor of the DTH may consider Adlia Adlai Stevenson as a gentleman or as anything, the un-cultural editoral printed in DTH Sept. 26, 1957 edition can go to hell.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

Cliches: Faithful As Mother Earth

Al Walker

Today I shall write an example of what a good theme should look like for you Freshman who are about to be depressed by the grades on your first theme.

A COUP DE GRACE TO CLICHES

Sooner or later a step in the right direction would have to be taken, to stem the tide of a large school of thought, who with all their might and main are trying to make cliches a thing of the past.

A cliche, rich beyond the dreams of avarice, should not be buffeted by fate, as has been the case in the past. Most dictionary definitions of cliche leave much to be desired. Contrary to my belief, dictionarys always say that cliches are trite and hackneyed expressions. It seems to me a cliche is a word or group of words which are constantly in the public's eyes. Some are old as the hills, whereas some are relatively new.

* * *

A striking example of this is the men of the working press's overuse of certain idioms. As a matter of fact, the situation got so out of hand in one big tabloid's office, that the editor was forced to give an ultimatum to his newshounds, straight from the shoulder. He said, "Within limits, cliche's aren't so bad, but mark my words, woe betide any man or beast who uses the phrases—'foremost authority,' '...spectators lined the curbs,' 'unconfirmed rumor,' or the hackneyed headline—'Thousands Flock to the Beaches for Relief.' And I don't mean maybe."

Many politicians would be like a ship in a storm if they were not armed to the teeth with thousands of these helpful phrases. Although you couldn't get a true politician to own up to it, it is an established fact that any public speaker who knows the ropes will lower his intelligence level to prevent his words from falling on deaf ears.

Two sterling examples would be Sir Winston Churchill and Adlai Stevenson, passed masters at the art of words, both of whom rely heavily on cliches to win their points.

Subtlety and cleverness would go in one ear and out the other of the average audience, and so a good speaker often employs cliches to give the listener the impression that he is a good down to earth fellow who knows how to express himself.

* * *

I hate to mention it, but English teachers and English books are the cliche's foremost aggressors. Everyone knows that the last words on any English teacher's lips are, "Get some originality into your writing." May it rest in peace.

Nevertheless, cliches are here to stay. They fulfill a definite need in the English language. A day's vocabulary not blessed with a single cliche would be rather scanty indeed.

And so I say to you—lend me a helping hand. Step by step we shall restore cliches to their rightful position. Leaving no stone unturned, we shall put ouh shouldess to the wheel and as I live and breathe, in less than no time we shall make our enemy, the English teacher, see the writing on the wall.

I thank you.

Squirrel In The Gray Flannel Suit

Nancy Hill

All the creatures in Chapel Hill don't reside in The Ivory Tower. There are some who live as mundane a life as the man on Madison Ave. or Main St., U. S. A.

The Squirrel in the Gray Flannel Suit is one particular Madison Ave. type. Squirrel lives in the tree at the corner of Saunders and works in the Law School. He commutes every day to and from work. Unlike most commuters, however, he goes home for lunch.

He probably thinks Chapel Hill is New York, and may well consider in his furry way that his well-travelled path is the Long Island Railroad.

If he spoke with the tongues of men—and had time to speak—he might be quoting shelley: "Look on ye mighty and despair."

The Carolina Quarterly, according to Editor Christian Lefebure, is on the lookout for poetry and fiction copy readers—and writers.

Quarterly offices are located on the landing on the lefthand side of Graham Memorial.

As we stated in this column Sunday, the Quarterly is interested in seeing any fiction, poetry, or articles on the humanities from Carolina students. Lefebure stated that any art work in form suitable for publication, including photographs of sculpture, will be considered.

The Fall, 1957 issue will go to press in late October or early November.

World In Brief

A Public Health Service spokesman today said Asian Flu is regarded as having reached epidemic proportions in five states—New York, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi and Utah.

The spokesman also said the disease probably has reached epidemic proportions in Alabama, Illinois, Michigan and Oregon and possibly has done so in California.

He made the assessments on the basis of reports from State Health authorities.

'We Expect To Stay'

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Oct. 3 — (AP) — Teamsters Union bosses made clear today they are going to fight and expect to beat an AFL-CIO ouster move when James R. Hoffa is elected teamsters president.

Hoffa, whose election in convention balloting tomorrow is considered sure, told reporters: "We expect to stay in the AFL-CIO."

The 44-year-old Detroit labor boss—with his lieutenants in full command of teamsters convention machinery—said the Wayne County (Detroit) Federation of Labor, an AFL-CIO affiliate, has unanimously asked the AFL-CIO to rescind its condemnation of Hoffa as a corrupt labor leader.

Can't Federalize

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 3 — (AP)—Maj. Gen. Mark Lance, adjutant general of Florida, said today that the President cannot federalize the Florida National Guard when it is on active state duty on call of the governor.

"What would happen if the Guard was under the state and the President thought the governor had called it for an improper purpose and sent in federal troops?" asked Rep. James N. Beck of Putnam.

"Well, we could have another Fort Moultrie as in 1861 when the South Carolina militia fired on federal forces," Lance answered.

The Florida Guard commander said he agreed that President Eisenhower had gone too far in federalizing the Arkansas National Guard.

UNC Will Get Service Award

Rear Admiral George C. Crawford will award a certificate and pennant for "distinguished national service' to the University of North Carolina here today at the Carolina Inn at 12:45 p. m.

Secretary of Defense Wilson has authorized the symbol of appreciation to the University for the role the institution has played in the national defense, particularly in relation to the maintenance at Chapel Hill of the Naval ROTC unit and the Air Force ROTC unit.

Admiral Crawford, a native of Old Fort, is Commandant of the 6th Naval District, at Charleston, S. C.

The award will be made to Chancellor William B. Aycock and past-Chancellor Robert B. House.

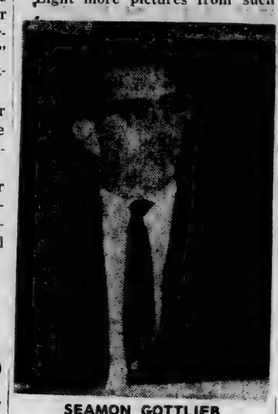
Others to be present for the ceremony will include President William C. Friday, Vice President W. D. Carmichael Jr., Captain A. M. Patterson, commander of the Naval ROTC at Chapel Hill, Colonel Frank Swann, commander of the Air Force ROTC, General Carlyle Shepard, Captain H. D. Crockford and Commander James E. Wadsworth of the Naval Reserve.

Society Offers $1 Membership

The North Carolina Symphony Society announced today that student memberships in the Symphony Society can be purchased for $1. For this price the student is entitled to attend not only the Chapel Hill concert, but any of the nearly 50 state-wide concernts of the Symphony.

The North Carolina Symphony is a professional symphony orchestra with a nationwide reputation as an outstanding musical unit. Each year it tours the state from February to May. Its programs, arranged by Conductor Benjamin Swalin, include traditional, classical, romantic and modern music.

The campus director of the UNC membership drive is Dean E. L. Mackie. Students can purchase their memberships at Symphony headquarters, Bingham X.



Seamon Gottlieb Is Chairman Of GMAB Foreign Film Group

Who is it that makes the Graham Memorial Activities Board meeting hilarious? Seamon Gottlieb, of course, with his entertaining descriptions of the next foreign movie that his committee will sponsor.

Seamon, a junior history major from Hampton, Va., is chairman of the Foreign Films and Drama Committee. He is also distinguished as the student who brought Petite Dramatiques, a chamber drama group, to the UNC campus.

Seamon, noted for his unique sense of humor, already has a whole slate of foreign films lined up for this fall. The first film, an Italian one called "Paisan", was presented last night in Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Eight more pictures from such countries as Japan, Britain, France, and South Africa will be shown throughout the fall. Then at the end of winter, an evening of weird, experimental films will be presented.

SEAMON GOTTLIEB
Chairs Foreign Movie Unit

Season tickets for all nine programs will be two dollars. Tickets may be obtained at the door of any performance.

Seamon will be working with Petite Dramatiques later on, and still has room on his committee for interested students. Students may apply for the committee by coming to Graham Memorial and filling out an application blank.

Educational TV Pipes Courses To N.C. Youth

By ANN FRYE

Educational television designed to help alleviate enrollment problems on the high school and junior high school levels is currently underway in North Carolina schools two hours a day.

Initiated this fall semester, the program includes two courses for high school students (American and World History) and two courses for junior high students (general science and mathematics).

While the enrollment problem is acute on the secondary school level, the situation in colleges and universities is likewise a growing concern to educators and citizens at large.

With an eye on the ever-increasing college enrollments, members of the Southern Regional Education Board (SREB) earlier this month focused attention on the utilization of educational television instruction in the college and university classroom.

The SREB completed the planning and took the first few steps toward organizing three Southern states into an experimental compact.

These states, Georgia, Florida and Alabama, are charting a two-year study of network operations which may one day encompass 16 states in the eductaional compart.

John Young of the UNC studio of WUNC-TV (Channel 4) said the University television station is watching the experiment with much interest.

Similar teaching methods being used in educational television on the secondary level now could be utilized for educational television in the college classroom, he said, but on a closed circuit basis.

Any home having a television set now can tune in to the secondary school classes conducted every day.

Young said that a closed circuit (not available for viewing by the general public) would be necessary on the college level to insure telecasting of different courses at all times during the day and to guard against conflicts.

In addition to the public school classes conducted over WUNC-TV, the University station is sponsoring three extension courses over Channel 4 for undergraduate and graduate credit.

Two of the courses originate from the UNC studio: History and Interpretation of Painting (Art 43-TV), which began Sept. 24 and will continue through Feb 6.; and Contemporary Issues and Trends in American Education (Education 146-TV), which started Sept. 25 and will continue through April 23.

The art course, taught by Dr. Clemens Sommer, professor of the History of Art at UNC, is held twice each week, on Tuesday and Thursday from 8:15 to 9 p.m.

Dr. W. Carson Ryan, Kenan professor of education, teaches the education course at 4 p.m. on Wednesday.

The third extension course is Mental Hygiene in the Classroom which originates from the Woman's College studio of WUNC-TV.

No one has attempted to make any early evaluation of the novel television courses for secondardy school students in North Carolina, but it is known that 19 school systems in North Carolina are participating officially in the program and some 50 to 60 school systems are participating on an unofficial basis; that is, the school systems participating unofficially have not secured certain material available to supplement the courses.

However, from all reports so far, the experiment is being accepted favorably.

Recruiter

Mr. Joe Galloway, Director of Placement, will explain how his office helps students and alumni find jobs and how students can use the service effectively.

Mr. Caine, a native of Ames, Iowa, has been recruiting for General Electric on the UNC campus since 1952. Only two years earlier, diploma in hand from Iowa State and three years Air Force service behind him, he began his career in the General Electric Business Training Program.

As soon as he completed this training program, he took over the responsibility for the course in the Louisville area.

Yesterday's Answer

Yes, we want engineers,

BUT

. . . we don't want just any engineer. We want engineers with ideas, engineers with drive, engineers who can stick with a job and work with other people to get it done. Scientists, business and liberal arts graduates, too.

Union Carbide has a marvelous potential. It's a top producer of many things, from petrochemicals to titanium, from molecular sieves to flashlight batteries. Its sales have soared from a half a billion in '47 to one and a third billion in '56.

And we plan to keep on growing. That's where you come in.

We need creative people. We spend a good portion of sales profit on research, but it takes creative people to make research effective.

We need people with initiative. They are the key to opening up new markets and to get production rolling. We introduce new products at the rate of two a month, and the rate is accelerating.

President Evans Not Completely Happy

Student Body President Sonny Evans is not completely satisfied with things on the athletic front at Carolina — student committee representation in particular.

Little known to most students is that the Athletic Council met Wednesday night and one of the items on the agenda was the much-publicized McGuire contract. The Council's action is, and will not be known until the matter is acted upon by the Chancellor.

The meeting, however, was only formality since the committee meets the first Wednesday in each month. Evan's main concern stems from an incident which arose before the beginning of the current semester.

At that time a meeting of the "Coaches Committee" was held, apparently to discuss Coach McGuire's contract plus other items. Evans was of the opinion that he, as a member of the Athletic Council, was supposed to attend the meeting. He was informed before the meeting that this was the Coaches Committee and did not include student representation, only three faculty members, the closest living alumni and a chairman.

In Whose Name They Speak

According to Evans, The Athletic Council, composed of three faculty members, three alumni, 3 students and Athletic Director Chuck Erickson who is ex-officio (non-voting) appoints the Coaches Committee. The Coaches Committee, in turn, selects, interviews, and recommends a new coach and contract renewals to the Athletic Council.

Evans feels that the Coaches Committee is very vital since it performs the aforementioned tasks and wonders why there is no student representation on that committee.

"They do it in the name of the students," Evans stated yesterday, "so why exclude students from the most important committee?"

Evans concluded that he had asked in the Wednesday night meeting that the matter of student representation on the Coaches Committee be included on the agenda at the next Athletic Council meeting.

Don't Give Up On Those Tar Heels

A veil of silence has hung plaicdly over the Carolina football camp this week and many Carolina followers are wondering if Jim Tatum might not be brewing some potent concoction to shove down the throat of Navy when the two clubs clash here tomorrow.

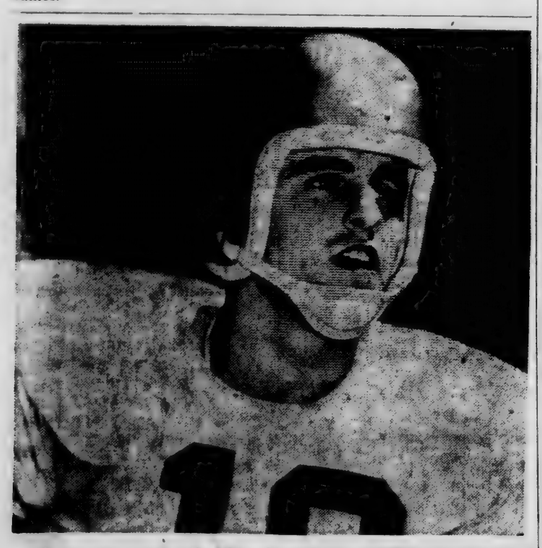
Strong this concoction will have to be if the Tar Heels expect to shake the high-flying Sailors from Anapolis, one of the nation's most powerful and experienced ball clubs.

But one victory can penetrate deep into the souls of football players and fans, especially when their club hasn't been winning much, and last week's victory over the Clemson Tigers came at a very strategic moment—Consequently, there seems to be a distinct air of optimism around the Carolina camp this week.

Every odd in the books will favor the Middies over the Tar Heels tomorrow. You can probably get as much as four touchdowns in some quarters. But the fans around here, seemingly, are not giving up on their Tar Heels. The Clemson game has given them hope.

Tatum himself said earlier this week that, after the Clemson game, the boys seemed anxious to get out and work. One of his main concerns was the bad weather which was prevelant during the first of the week, but the elements cleared up and the Tar Heels have been out-of-doors since Tuesday.

All things considered, the Middies will be tough, but don't sell those Tar Heels short.



Pep Rally Facing Problem

Quick sports shots:

We at Carolina are facing a meticulous situation as regards the scheduled pep rally tonight at 8:30. Nothing would be finer for the team than a tremendous turnout at the rally, but the fraternity rush situation creates a problem.

Although rush is over at nine o'clock, the fraternities will have to hold short meetings following the rushing hours—Thus it will be hard on the fraternities and the rushees to get to the rally. Here's hoping that some last minute arrangement can be made which will give every student a chance to show the ball club they're behind it.

The World Series is all even now after Lew Burdette stopped the New York Yanks yesterday. It should be a good battle from here out, but we're still looking for the Yankees to end it in less than seven games.

Tar Heel Problem

Navy quarterback, Tom Forrestal will pose a big problem for the Carolina Tar Heels tomorrow in Kenan Stadium. The husky senior has been a passing wizzard in the Middies's first two games and has been tabbed All-American material in many quarters.

Braves Clip Yanks, 4-2

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR

NEW YORK (AP) — The Milwaukee Braves defeated the New York Yankees 4-2 in the second game of the World Series today before 65,202 spectators and squared the series at one victory each. A two run fourth inning broke a 2-2 tie and sent Yankee pitcher Bobby Shantz to cover.

Milwaukee pitcher Lew Burdette limited the Yanks. 3-1 winners of the first game, to seven hits, including a game-tying homer by Hank Bauer.

Bauer's wallop into the lower left field stands in the third innning made the score 2-2 after the Braves Johnny Logan had hits a homer in the first half of the inning.

The straight hits and a costly error by 20-year-old Tony Kubek at third base gave Milwaukee the deciding runs in the fourth and ended Shantzs hopes for a World Series victory.

The third game will be played in Milwaukee Saturday, starting at 2 p. m., Eastern Standard Time, after the teams take a day off for travel tomorrow.

Frosh Basketball Preps Set To Start Oct. 15

Although football season has barely gotten underway it is almost time to start thinking about basketball, a favorite subject around this town.

On October 15, at 3:45 in Woollen Gym candidates for this years freshman basketball squad, the Tar Babies, will hold their first practice. Coach Buck Freeman, Frank McGuire's first mate, has invited all boys interested in coming out for the squad to come by the basketball office in room 202 of Woollen Gym and fill out an application form prior to the first practice.

There are three players on basketball scholarships this year. It is expected than many times that number will be out for the first practice in an attempt to be one of "Them wonderful Tar Heels."

Goff Is Tatum's All-American Boy

By JAKE WADE

When the Carolina Tar Heels entertain Navy's mighty Middies in Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon, one of the key men in their attack will be a handsome 21-year-old halfback from Dunn, N.C.

He is Daley Goff, a senior in his class work with a light load the rest of the way but who has had another year to eligibility in the event he cares to use it.

Goff has been the team's busiest and most effective back in the two games the Tar Heels have played so far.

He has run 20 times, oftener than any of his mates (Jim Shuler is runner-up with 15 carries) and he has collected 82 net yards with not a single loss. He has averaged 4.1 yards per carry. Sophomore Don Coker, with 32 in eight carries and no losses, is next best.

What makes his performance more remarkable is that many of his running plays are options, for he is a fine passing halfback, and his running-pass plays have been a deadly Tar Heel weapon, in addition to being exciting in artistry.

Goff, a Morehead Scholar and therefore not on a regular football grant-in-aid, has actually gotten off four passes, completing two of them for 37 yards. Thus, he is running second in passes (behind quarterbacks Dave Reed and Jack Cummings.)

He has been on the receiving end of one pass, good for 12 yards. He has punted three times for 80 yards. One badly sliced punt cut down his yardage. After that one, he told the coaches to keep on letting him kick because he had always been able to kick and this one miscue was something he couldn't explain, but not to worry about it.

Coach Jim Tatum calls Goff his All-American boy, a coaches' player, not only because of his fine skills but because of his invariable top notch attitude, on and off the field.

Goff is 21 years old, weighs 185 and is 5-11. He is dark, well-mannered, exemplary in all his campus and football habits. He bagged a starting job early this fall in a field of hot competition.

Frosh Cage Star Larese May Not Play This Year

Carolina's varsity basketball team, the nation's best last season, has had the unpleasant arm of injury strike one of the teams most promising sophomores, forward York Larese.

Larese, who was a top scorer on last seasons freshman squad has had to have an operation on his left knee. A loose piece of cartledge in the knee caused the surgery.

Assistant basketball Coach Buck Freeman said yesterday that it is not known now when Larese will be able to get on the court this year. A knee injury heals slowly taking at least three months and sometimes more, usually depending on the individual.

Carson Says Tar Babies Ready For Tough Test

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The U.N.C. Freshman gridders kick-off their '58 season today against Maryland's Baby Terrapins at College Park, Maryland, with the action set to get underway at 2:00 (1:00 p.m. our time) p.m. in Byrd Stadium.

Although rain halted outdoor practice for several days, Coach Bud Carson expressed the opinion that "We are as ready as could be expected." The prospects of an excellent game are predominant, since both Maryland and Carolina should field one of it's better teams.

Strongest point in favor of the Tar Babies will be tremendous depth at practically every position, with some positions as much as three or four deep. Another standout quality of the freshmen should be defense, since they have scrimmaged with the varsity on numerous occasions. In the offense department, Coach Carson stated that "although the offense is untried, it has great potential and we will be able to tell a lot more about it after the Maryland game.

The U.N.C. mentor is expecting a tough battle with Maryland. "Coach Whitey Dovell and his assistants have a very good group of boys to work with, and from all reports, they've done a superb job in developing a strong all-round game there," he stated.

The first game is always a big one to win from a morale standpoint and this game could very well be the making of the Tar Babies. Carson remarked that he expected the team to make some mistakes, but he hoped they could be held to a minimum.

Tremendous competition for starting berths has been prevalent since the first day of practice and some of the positions will probably be in doubt right up to kick-off time. At left end, it is a toss-up between Carl Eanes and Tom Hunnicutt. Left tackle belongs to Bill Crabtree, with Dick Benzie and Gene Massey close on his heels. Left guard is another closely contested spot between Pete Modrow and Rip Hawkins. At center, the nod will go to either Larry Roberts or Bill Talley. Jim Schumate will start at right guard with Jim Joy to spell him. Joe Kulpa will probably start at right tackle with Danny Bardy to back him up. The right end slot is still undecided between Bob Campbell and Bob Hawkins.

The backfield is a little more settled, but a number of excellent subs make competition keen in this department also. Russ Hollers gets the nod at quarterback, the number two man is Dick Detanna. At left half it looks like Bill Welch, followed by Lenny Beck and Joe Olejnick. Sonny Folckomer and Conrad Sloop are both possibilities at right half with Roy Wall close behind. Frank Riggs will start at fullback with Jim Graham to back him up.

Music for the reception will be furnished by The Music Makers, a well-known local combo, and refreshments will be served.

All interested students, faculty, and alumni are invited to come.

Tonight a dance is planned for the midshipmen. The dance, which is sponsored by the Quarter Deck organization and the Scabbard and Blade, will start at 8:30 p. m. and will be in the Naval Armory. Girls from W. C. will be brought in for the dance.

NSA Holds First Meeting Of Year

The National Student Association had its first organizational meeting of the year yesterday at 2 p. m. in Graham Memorial Student Union.

Elected to the position of assistant coordinator was Gary Greer, sophomore from Spindale. Among the items of business discussed was the Desegration Subcommission located here.

The final decision as to the fate of the subcommission has been postponed until the next meeting.

Executive Council Of Symposium Meets To Plan For Current Year

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Executive Council of the Carolina Symposium and its faculty advisor, William M. Geer, met yesterday afternoon to begin organizing for the coming year.

Six faculty members will be included on the program committee of the symposium. Professor John Saunders of the Institute of Government is the first faculty member to accept a position on the committee.

During the weekend other faculty members will be contacted. Other professors will be needed to work in an advisory capacity on the other committees.

The full program committee will meet next week in order to determine the area or philosophy in which the symposium will concern itself.

The symposium will extend an invitation to Chancellor Aycock to become the honorary chairman of the organization.

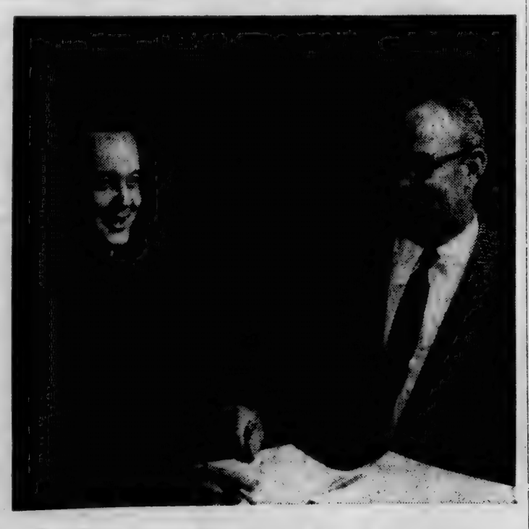
Hugh Patterson has been asked to be a member of the executive council.

The symposium received $1000 from the Student Legislature and already had $459.

"The Carolina Symposium has proven to be one of the most stimulating intellectual forces on the University campus," said Advisor Geer.

"The symposium attempts to bring to this community outstanding spokesmen for advocates and analysts of various viewpoints relating to the critical issues of our day," he went on to say.

Seven times before World War II important speakqrs were brought to the campus under the sponsorship of the Institute of Human Relations, the symposium's predecessor.



The speeches are given during a week in the spring. In 1956, when the last symposium program was presented, among the noted speakers who came to the campus were Ralph Bunche and Carlos Romulo.

"At every point, planning and participation, this is a community-wide effort, including faculty, students, and the public," commented Advisor Geer.

After the program committee meets, there will be later in the week a meeting for all interested in working for the symposium.

"I can't emphasize the amount of work that has to be done," said Chairman Sonny Hallford.

The work is expected to involve around at least 75 people. All students including coeds will be eligible to work on the symposium. A number of the faculty will also be needed.

Tension Eases At Little Rock School

Faubus Denies Comment; Ike Not Budging

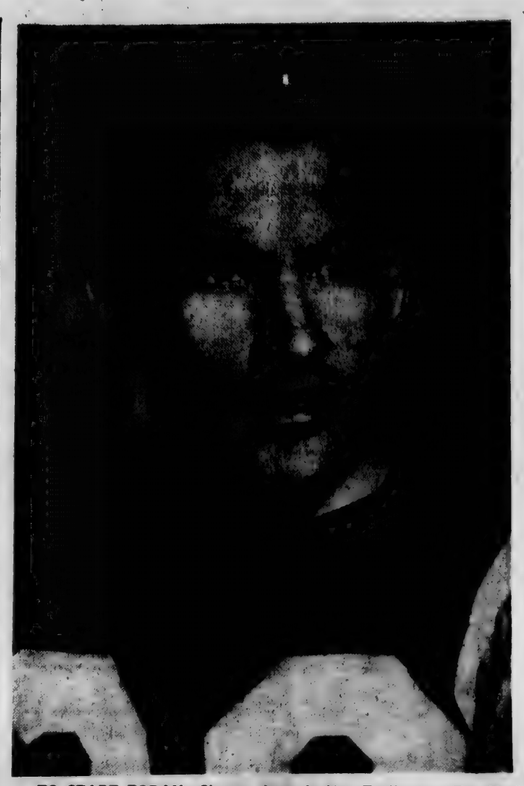
LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 4 — (AP)— The white student body of Central High School today quietly admitted nine Negroes into their midst for a 10th day of integrated education.

Gone were the outward signs of teen-aged restlessness that built up all week and reached a climax in yesterday's walkout of 75 anti-integrationist white students. The demonstration was an admitted failure and there was no attempt today to push it further.

The demonstrators were suspended for three days. Nevertheless, attendance was reported at 1,725 out of the maximum 2,000, only 58 below Wednesday's peak figure.

There was silence, too, on the political front.

Gov. Orval Faubus, storm center of one of the greatest southern crisis since reconstruction days, had nothing to say to reporters who waylaid him on his way to his office.



In Washington, President Eisenhower apparently stood on his mandate to Faubus issued earlier in the week. The White House demanded that Faubus unequivocally guarantee law and order in Little Rock and pledge no further obstruction to the first integration program in the city's history.

In return, the President said, he will withdraw regular Army troops from Little Rock and turn back to Faubus the Federalized Arkansas National Guard.

The crisis began Sept. 2 when Faubus used the guard to keep the six Negro girls and three boys out of Central. He withdrew the soldiers Sept. 23 in compliance with a court order against further obstruction of integration.

Adult white mobs rioted outside the school Sept. 25. The next day Eisenhower federalized the guard

Unique Stunt Planned Today

The UNC Cardboard will present "one of the most ambitious stunts in UNC Cardboard history," an exploding rocket, today during the halftime, the Cardboard announced yesterday.

The exploding rocket will feature six flips of the cards. A rippling American flag, the finale, will be produced by waving the cards.

An exhibition will salute the observance of Law Day. The UNC band will play "Off We Go" while the students make a golden airplane and then "Anchors Away" as the students produce an anchor.

"The organization is grateful to the students, who cooperate so well each week to make the stunts a success," the Cardboard said.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 — (AP)— — Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) today called James R. Hoffa's election as President of the Teamsters Union a challenge to Congress to enact laws that will protect rank and file union members from "gangsterism and racketeer control."

"I firmly believe the Congress will accept and meet the challenge," said McClellan, chairman of the special senate committee to investigate illegal and improper activities in the labor-management field.

Navy Is Picked By 2 Touchdowns

By BILL KING

The potent U. S. Naval Academy invades beautiful Kenan Stadium this afternoon as the Carolina Tar Heels play hosts for the third straight Saturday. Kickoff time is slated for two o'clock.

The Middies, fifth ranked in most national polls, bring an outstanding aggregate of speed, size and experience to Chapel Hill to challenge Jim Tatum's Tar Heels who now sport a 1-1 record. Navy has taken easy victories over Boston College and William and Mary thus far.

Carolina's main problem today will be of a defensive nature — mainly to stop a ball club which rates fourth in the nation in both offensive yardage and passing yardage. Chief ground-gainer among the Midshipmen is senior quarterback Tom Forrestal, rated one of the outstanding signal-callers in the country.

The Navy line will give about five pounds per man to the more inexperienced Tar Heels. The Middie middle averages about 215, while the Tar Heels approximate 220.

Should the Tar Heels stop the strong Navy air attack, the Middies might open up with a ground game which has averaged over 300 yards per game.

But the Tar Heels are not without the horses to halt the Sailors and do a little ground-gaining of their own. Jim Tatum's club showed its ability to move the ball a week ago when it handed the Clemson Tigers a 28-0 defeat.

Carolina also has fine passing prospectus to counteract the Naval attack. Quarterback Dave Reed will probably bear the brunt of the Tar Heel's aerial exploits but Tatum is a charter member of the "let the halfbacks throw" club.

Both clubs are deep, but here again the Middies hold the edge, experience-wise. There are only six juniors on Navy's first two units; the rest are seniors. The Tar Heel roster is composed of a smattering of practically every classification.

Navy Coach Eddie Erdelatz would like nothing better than to stop a Tatum-coached team since the head man at the Academy has dropped three decisions to Sunny Jim. All of the games were played when Tatum was at Maryland. The Middies are reported to be out to take this one for their coach.

The Tar Heels, however, will probably have a few qualms against any landslide for the seaminded Midshipmen. Optimism is high in the Carolina camp and reports have it that the Tar Heels are not awed by the supposed power of Navy. Their task, to them or to most Carolina followers, is a rugged one but certainly not an impossibility.

As regards the oddsmakers, the Navy club will come into the game as a two-touchdown favorite.

Only change in the Carolina lineup of a week ago is at fullback where junior Ed Lipski has won himself a starting post after his fine performance against Clemson. Along with Reed and Lipski in the

THE AYCOCK STORY

Professor Traces The Biography Of University Chancellor

(Editor's Note: Following is the first in a series of articles which will comprise a three-page section to be published next week in "Popular Governorment." Written by Prof. Albert Coates of UNC, it relates to Chancellor Aycock, who will be officially installed here next weekend.)

Friday evening the fifteenth of March, 1957 was a gracious evening in the town of Selma.

Hometown people came together in a hometown for a hometown boy and allowed a few people outside the hometown limits to come and look and listen in the fellowship of friends. Three hundred neighbors crowded into the high school cafeteria for home cooking, home serving, home talking, and home singing.

It had started in an open session of the city council on Feb. 25 when the mayor went out to get a drink of water and came back with the news that William Brantley Aycock of Selma had been elected by the Board of Trustees as the Chancellor of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

HOME AND SCHOOL

These friends and neighbors had seen him growing up among them; going to school, playing baseball and debating; delivering milk on his pony; and in vacation time working in Hub Brown's grocery store, Woodard's drug store, Dan Hayes' filling station and Jesse Barden's livestock farm.

They had seen him leave home to work his way to leadership of the student body at N. C. State, and go on to graduate study in the University of North Carolina, Duke and Harvard; teach history and coach football in Greensboro High School; and become Chief of Project Planning and Control for the National Youth Administration in North Carolina.

SOLDIER

They had followed him with neighborly affection and concern as he climbed from Lieutenant in the Infantry to Captain in 1942, Major in 1943, Lieutenant Colonel in 1944, and Colonel in the reserve component of the Judge Advocate General's Corps in 1956.

They had heard the story of his flying to duty overseas in January 1945; arriving at Third Army Headquarters in the morning, Division Headquarters at noon, Regimental Headquarters at 4 p. m.; assuming command of the Third Battalion of the 346th Infantry in the basement of a blown-up building at 6 p. m. with the shortest briefing on record —"Good luck, Buddy"—from the officer coming out of the basement as he was going in; and under orders to "move forward" two hours later going into the Battle of the Bulge around Bastogne.

They had read with pride the successive citations awarding him the Bronze Star Medal "for meritorious service" in leading his battalion in the breakthrough of the Siegfried line; the Silver Star Medal for "gallantry in action" leading his battalion across the Kyll River near Junkerath under "intense enemy fire;" the Legion of Merit" for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services" throughout his months of service on the battlefront.

One citation refers to Lieutenant Colonel Aycock skillfully leading his "battalion to its objectives against stiff enemy resistance, heavy woods, steep grades, mud and heavy mine fields" with "efficient planning and tactical skill in keeping with the highest traditions of the military service."

Another refers to him as "disregarding personal safety in leading his battalion across the Kyll River with initiative, courage, and devotion to duty exemplifying the highest traditions of the United States Army."

Sorority Quotas Obsolete: Remedial Action Necessary

The University's women enrollment continues to increase—1320 this fall as opposed to 1215 last fall—yet sorority rushee limitations remain constant.

This, of course, must mean that many University coeds are being denied the advantages of Greek affiliation.

Consequently, The Daily Tar Heel urges that:

(1) Current sorority facilities be increased and optimum 55 places per sorority be increased proportionately.

(2) Or that an additional sorority be added to the ranks of those on campus.

We have heard that many very excellent coeds were denied Greek affiliation privileges purely due to the outmoded and archaic quota system.

Thus extension of quotas might be a feasible solution to the problem.

Or an additional sorority might provide the necessary, we feel, facilities for adequate Greek affiliation opportunities.

According to Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, there was an "all out demand" for an additional sorority when Kappa Delta made its campus debut in 1950.

Dean Carmichael also said the Panhellenic Council is currently deliberating the problem. It is slated to appear before the Advisory Committee on Special Sorority Problems.

W urge that an additional sorority be allowed to establish on the campus.

Women are naturally more sensitive to seeming social ostracism than men. Of course, there are many advantages in independent life. But the opportunity for Greek membership should be denied no University coed.

Equal opportunity for all . . .

Dean Carmichael has said the administration is perfectly willing to negotiate for an additional sorority if there is an "all out demand" for it.

We should like to urge that the Panhellenic Council endorse and support the movement for another sorority.

Equal opportunity for all . . .

Eulogy To 10th Amendment: States No Longer Right

The inevitability of Ike's decision to "federalize" Arkansas education becomes increasingly evident in light of Oligarchic Orval's duplicity-ridden statement concerning the removal of federal troops.

But it is always admirable to see the tenacity of states' righters such as The Davidsonian of Davidson College. As an eulogy to states rights, we sadly reprint this excellent editorial:

It is unfortunate that the integration problem has overshadowed the real question in the current Little Rock public school problem.

The argument in Arkansas has not been whether or not there shall be mixed schools. Integration is already a fact in some parts of the State.

The real issue, however, is State versus Federal authority.

We are engaged in a Constitutional crisis.

The United States are faced with the fundamental question of what powers belong to the national government, and what powers are reserved to the State governments.

Simply, who has jurisdiction over the public schools of Arkansas, and more specifically, who is responsible for the safety, welfare, and protection of the people who attend those schools.

Historically, the several states have jurisdiction over the public schools. Even the present Suprme Court admitted this when it declared, "Today, education is perhaps the most important function of State and local governments." Moreover, the States have always been the legal guardians over the safety of its pople. The right to maintain a State police force is fundamental.

But now we see these rights being crushed by the most powerful military force in the world—the United States Army.

By sending fedral troops into Arkansas, President Eisenhower has broken faith with the spirit and meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

Perhaps Mr. Eisenhower doesn't really understand the American system of dual powers.

Perhaps he doesn't know that the Constitution was conceived so that both the States and the national government would have sovereignty over particular governmental functions.

One of these State functions is the right to run the public schools and to preserve good order in the States.

But now Mr. Eisenhower has denied the State of Arkansas the right to handle its own affairs. He has prevented a State from performing one of its natural functions.

Therefore Arkansas stands helpless with its State militia nationalized and its right to manage its own affairs seriously limited.

Eisenhower's action in Arkansas may be explained by the fact that the President is a former Army general. He is now doing at the point of a bayonet what he was unable to do through ordinary political channels.

Perhaps the man from Abileen is impatient with constitutional processes. Instead, he prefers the much quicker method of guns and bullets—the art he knows best.

And so we have now reached the point where we must determine just what kind of political system we are going to have in this country. Does a State any longer have the right to handle its own affairs? Must a State first get Federal approval before it can use its own methods in meeting violence and disorder?

In short, who is going to run the State of Arkansas? Will it be the government of Arkansas, or the government of the United States?

Unless statesmanship soon overtakes political expediency, this generation of Americans may be witnesses to destruction of the American Republic as we have understood it.

Unless the power-hungry and vote-conscious men in Washington come to their senses, Arkansas, as well as New York, North Dakota, and Kansas, will soon be mere goegraphical districts within an all-powerful and centralized dictatorship.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Mythical Maid, Carolina Coed & Tilted Nose

Gail Godwin

Obviously a fallacy has arisen concerning the coeds which has poisoned the minds of all susceptible males on campus, including all classifications: the freshman and the senior, the fraternity man and the independent, the "not-right-bright" Joe who has been here six years instead of the allotted four and the Phi Bete law student who should be above it all.

Once upon a time, many years ago, a shy young man called a Carolina coed for a Saturday night date. Alas! She already had one. Aflame with humiliation, the rejected one slammed the phone down and set down on a midnight ride to warn all his fellowmen about the fickle Carolina Coed. At the time, she was the only Carolina coed, but even today when there are 1,306, the myth still holds.

* * *

So it is taken for granted that the little blonde in lab or the redhead with the wicked eyes at Y-Court is all dated up and to ask her for a date anytime in the next year would be hopeless. As a result of this cruel misconception, a number of dateable, loveable, presentable, ... able coeds listen to the football game over the radio on Saturday afternoon, or turn in despair to the wolf-whistle of N. C. State or the call of the Dook Devil.

A census taken last Saturday showed the number of undated, dateable, co-eds exceeded 100 on that evening.

Now is the time for action men! Let your fellow students who wear skirts disprove this silly myth.

Ask the girl of your dreams to split a pizza with you, observe plant life with you, ride bicycles with you, or do SOMETHING with you. So maybe she just might have made a date for this particular evening four years ago.

Perservere! Ask her for another one and another one and another one until you get up to two weeks hence. Then if she says, "Goodness! I just nevah make playans that fah ahead!" you know she is evading you.

Besides, she's probably not from Carolina anyway.

"It's Getting So You Can Hardly Stone People In Peace Any More"

READERS' REPOSITORY:

'Hypocrites, Crucifiers Of Christ:' Reader Lampoons Greek Blackball

EDITOR:

There is not one person on this campus who will not be envolved in the vital decisions that are made during the sorority and fraternity rushing season. When the blackball is thrown on Jim Doe, we are all in there pitching; we are all saying, tongue in cheek, "Jim, were sorry, we think that you'll be happier and fit in better somewhere else," and then behind his back muttering, "Thank God we're rid of the jerk. Man! He'd be a real drag on the house."

Our lives are determined by the relationships that we allow ourselves to enter into; and when we deprive another of our friendship or prevent him from growing by denying him the right to give of himself, then we alone are responsible for whatever our neglect incurs. I am responsible for you and what happens to you, and you are in no way less responsible for what happens to me. And so we are both completely responsible for what happens to Jim Doe and what effect his being blackballed will have upon him.

If there has been but one person who has been made to feel inferior to another, who has been forced to consider himself less a person, in whose life the superficial dropping of the blackball has added to a series of toll-taking prior defeats, who has suffered mental and emotional injury from this discrimination against persons of questionable inferiority, then it would be a flagrant wrong. However, this is not the case, and the damage is greater than any statistics could prove. The passing off of the casualty list as negligible is a ridiculous and gross rationalization.

And, all of us on this campus stand, highly inadequately, in the position of playing God. As the gods in the fraternity and the sorority "cutting" sessions deliver their judgment on whether John or Mary is the right kind of guy or gal, and whether he or she is good enough to be one's friends, good enough to live and eat in fellowship with, good enough to share him or herself with another, and good enough for one to share with them, we who stand outside the Greek border raise our voices in unanimous consent to the action taken. So then we all agree that John and Mary are not good enough to be members in this or that particular fraternity or sorority. They are really less persons and have less worth than others. We don't blame those who blackball. What the hell, who'd want to be seen around with those creeps anyhow.

As we condone and thus become a part of the exclusiveness of the sororities and fraternities we are exclusive in our attitude toward all. We are setting ourselves apart from the campus for we are really too good to be included in a University community where all are equal and where people are not excluded for the impression that they give over a period of a few evening meetings, in a crowded room of strangers, surrounded by smoke and punch in an atmosphere of dense superficiality, and where individuals set themselves up as gods in endless judgment upon the characters and destinies of others.

And just as little was heard from the Church in Little Rock, little will be heard from those of the Christian Faith on the Carolina campus. We are a generation of nominal Christians, we are the hypocrites of the hour, the drags on the Church, the crucifiers of Christ.

PRESIDENTIAL MEMO:

Congratulations, Representation

(Editor's Note)

(We felt the student body president was entitled to expression space on this page. Thus we will publish periodical memos from his desk. The views expressed will be those of the executive and not of this newspaper. We gladly pledge ourselves toward establishment of a closer working arrangement with student government . . . remaining, however, always independent of influence from it or any fact or organization conceivable. Welcome aboard, Sonny. The Editor).

Sonny Evans

It has always been my opinion that student government should use the page of The Daily Tar Heel to let the students know the progress being made and the hopes for the future. I hope that this will be the first in a series of such articles from various members of student government.

The arrival of William Aycock as chancellor, Mr. J. A. Branch as business manager, and the return of Dean Fred Weaver to the campus have already given us unprecedented progress in many fields. Although Mr. Aycock insists that it was only the fact that the time was ripe on July 1, for progress to be made by the University, I have to take issue, for it was his wonderful enthusiasm and sincere interest that provided the impetus for any progress that was made.

The news columns of this paper have carried the results of a great deal of effort by the people who participated in student activities during the summer sessions. Such things as dormitory television set repair funds, lower prices for date tickets on Germans' weekend, background information on the parking situation, planning of United Nations Day and, after three years of effort, the status change of Graham Memorial could not have been accomplished without their aid.

The orientation program for new students was accomplished with more efficiency and planning than ever before, and Jerry Oppenheimer and Miss Susan Mayhue can never receive as much praise as they deserve. It is my hope, however, that this coming year will bring a very careful re-evaluation of the program, and that the results will be a single orientation committee with one orientation chairman to plan the week for both men and women.

Last night, I went to the first Athletic Council meeting of the new year. Though the council is made up of faculty members, alumni, and students, there is no student participation on the all-important Coaches Committee, which is appointed by the council to interview and arrange the contracts of coaches. There is no rationale for the exclusion of students from this most important committee, and we have submitted a request to have this considered on the next agenda. Since they are our coaches and are hired in our name, I think it is an injustice to exclude all student participation on the basis of tradition.

I agree with those students who have felt that, if student government was ever to justify its existence, it would have to some day seek to consider those things which are important to the future of the University regardless of whether or not they are controversial. This means that the individuals in all phases of student government must begin to think on a much broader level on such significant problems as curriculum, providing a tradition of study and academics in the dormitories, the dormitory counselling situation, segregation in the housing of athletes, discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters, rights of the student to a fair trial, the drinking rule, and the broader problem of academic freedom in our community.

The administration has given us the opportunity to move in the right direction by their invitation for periodic meetings with the Chancellor's Cabinet, and, if we show our concern for the significant things, I am certain that we can earn our way to participate in the long-range planning of the University. Only when this is accomplished will we begin to truly emerge as the "junior partners" in the University.

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Whitey's Success Now He Belongs..

Gary Nichols

Whitey was a piece of paper. He came into the school supply room a pure virginal white. Whitey wasn't satisfied, however. He longed to have a water-mark, but he realized it was too late for that. So he "played the role" and today he is a carbon copy. Now Whitey is happy—he belongs.

I read the other day that some enterprising individual is going to put Confederate Army belt buckles on sale here soon. I'm anxious to see whether the greek letter hierarchy will approve or not. Herein lies the success or failure of another fad. It seems to me it might be a little more practical if they were to sell the belt and a civil war saber with it, but you never know, do you?

There once was a lad, who was his own Number One fan. This would not have been such a grevious fault if it were not that he insisted that everyone else in the world should be battling it out for the Number Two spot.

One day our hero was caught with his hand in the cookie jar. He could not understand why the cookies were not there for his personal benefit and was much surprised and chagrined when he was rapped sharply across the knuckles.

Although there was no visible wound, he promptly bandaged his hand and put his arm in a sling. Then, still visibly shaken, he proceeded to tell everyone how he was hurt in the war. No response.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—(AP)—Another sharp rise in the number of Asian flu cases around the country was reported by the Public Health Service today in its weekly summary.

The service estimated there was a jump of 200,000 new cases last week, bringing the cumulative total snice early June to 422,650. The previous week's summary listed an increase of 100,000 cases and the week before that, 50,000.

Thus the number has doubled itself in each of the last three weeks.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., Oct. 4 — (AP) — President Eisenhower flew here today for the weekend and quickly got in a fast 18 holes of golf at the Gettysburg Country Club.

Taking advantage of a lull in the Little Rock school integration crisis which occupied him much of the week, Eisenhower took off from Washington in his light two-engine Aero Commander plane at 9:18 a.m. EDT and landed here at 9:44. The White House said there was nothing new on the Little Rock situation and Eisenhower was only 45 minutes away if anything important did come up.

Wilson Grant Data Is Listed For This Year

Perhaps as many as 1000 fellowships will be awarded this year to college seniors by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. A significant grant from the Ford Foundation in the spring of 1957 has made it possible to increase the number of fellowships to this figure from the 300 granted last year, so opportunities have multiplied more than three-fold.

Last year the University of North Carolina had four winners out of the thirteen first-choice winners chosen in the whole region. One of the Davidson College winners, Emory Kimbrough is now a graduate student in sociology here at North Carolina.

These fellowships, which carry a stipend of $1400 plus tuition for unmarried students and special consideration beyond these for married students, will go to those students who are willing to consider seriously the academic profession as a career. Fields of graduate study covered by the Program are the Humanities and Social Sciences, and the Natural Sciences and Mathematics when the candidate is mainly interested in college teaching.

Fields such as Law, Medicine, Engineering, Business Administration, and Education are not considered to be within the scope of the Program. Fellowships are awarded for one year and any which go to nominees who later find it necessary to enter the Armed Forces will be held for them until they return to civilian life.

Students must be nominated for award competition by a member of the academic profession. Either the student can initiate action by asking one of his professors in the field in which he wants to do graduate work to nominate him, or a professor can take the initiative by inquiring of a promising student whether or not that student is interested in having the professor nominate him.

The nomination should be presented by sending the name, college and address of the candidate to the Chairman of the Region in which the student's undergraduate college in located.

The University of North Carolina is now in Region V, consisting of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and the District of Columbia. Until this year North Carolina has been in a region with South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi.

Letters nominating students at the University of North Carolina should be sent to Professor Fredson Bowers, Department of English, Cabell Hall, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Virginia.

Professor William Noland, Chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropolgy here at North Carolina, is a veteran representative of the Regional Committee and is available to answer any questions about the Program—but nominating letters are not to be sent to him.

Professor Noland has already distributed to the chairmen of eligible departments brochures describing the Program in minute detail. There is a sufficient number of such brochures to supply every interested professor with a copy of his own.

Since the number of nominees in Region V is likely to be well in excess of three hundred, a preliminary elimination will be made on the basis of credentials. The Regional Committee will then summon to a personal interview as many of the nominees as they find it possible to see. These personal interviews will be scheduled about mid-January, 1958, and no Fellow will be selected without such an interview. The place of the interview has not yet been announced.

The credentials of nominees successful at the Regional level will be forwarded to the National Committee for final selection. Selected candidates will be notified about the end of February, 1958, and will be assisted in gaining admission to graduate school. Announcement of the Fellowship awards will be made by the National Director about April 1, 1958.

Jewish Feast Is Observed

From sunset Friday through sunset Saturday the Jewish students, faculty and business community will be observing Yom Kipper (Day of Atonement), the holiest day in the Jewish calendar.

Dating from biblical times, the occasion is observed with fasting and day-long worship services.

Yom Kipper marks the end of a ten-day period which began with the New Year (Rosh Ha-Shanah). The Jewish faith holds that on this day the Book of Life is sealed for the coming year, but that righteous living can avert the evil decree.

Services will be held at 10 o'clock this morning in the Hillel House, 210 W. Cameron Ave.

Press Groups Plan Meeting

The Matrix Society, women's honorary journalism society, and the Press Club will hold a joint meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Mt. Bolus Rd. home of Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the School of Journalism.

All those interested in joining either organization have been urged to attend Monday's meeting, according to Matrix Society President Jackie Haithcock. The memberships of the organizations include journalism and pre-journalism students.

Monday's meeting will be primarily a planning session, according to Miss Haithcock.

People not having rides to the meeting have been asked to meet at Bynum Hall at 7:15 for transportation. Dues of $1 will be collected at the meeting.

Presbyterians To Hear Dr. Taylor

Dr. George Taylor, UNC professor of history, will speak to the Westminister Fellowship Sunday night at the Presbyterian Church.

The subject of his talk, which will follow the 6 p.m. supper, is "Are We Student Christians or Christian Students?"

Dan Southerland, chairman of the study commission of the Presbyterian college group, will introduce the topics of study.

Tension Subsides At Little Rock

and sent Crack Infantrymen of The 101st Airborne Division into Little Rock to open Central High to the Negores.

Central's campus quieted down for a few days. But earlier this week the Negroe students were abused inside the school and two of the boys kicked and struck. Yesterday's abortive white student demonstration was quickly squelched by guardsmen before it reached the riot stage.

Sixteen rifle-carrying guardsmen escorted the nine Negroes half way across the campus this morning. There four paratroop regulars met them and escorted the youngsters through the main entrance.

As usual, about 100 white students lounged on the steps leading to the entrance, awaiting the opening class bell. Yesterday and the day before, they hooted and jeered the Negroes, and even sought midly to block their entry.

Today, although three or four of the white children waved Confederate flags, there was no hooting. The white students moved aside and made no attempt to block the Negroes.

One of the Negro girls, absent yesterday, reportedly because of illness, returned to classes with the others.

A military helicopter circled above the school area occasionally, apparently on the lookout for any concentration of anti-integrationists. But none were apparent in the vicinity.

One of the ringleaders in yesterday's demonstration left Central shortly after the class day began. She has identifired herself to reporters only as "Jane."

A brunette, wearing glasses, she said she had gone in to try to arrange a return to classes when her suspension ends. Jane claimed a teacher falsely accused her of taunting the Negroes. She added:

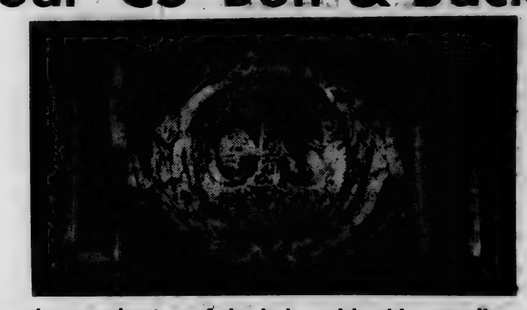
"He told me he'd slap me down the front steps."

She left in a temper. Two other Bobby-Soxers—a short, stocky brunette and a cute, mazel-eyed blonde—walked out in sympathy with her. Both said they were not involved in yesterday's disorders.

Jane said she intends to try to return to classes next week. She declared:

"No nigger can keep me from my education."

Program Offered Reserve Officers



Carolina students who are Army Reserve officers are being offered the opportunity to participate in the United States Army Reserve Schools program while enrolled in the University.

The students can attend evening classes, similar to those offered by he service schools and can earn retirement points and qualify for promotion and summer training, in addition to enhancing their military education.

KING'S KORNER

DTH Sports Editor

Middies Are Fourth In Two Departments

How good is a football team which, in two games, has averaged 490 yards per game in total offense including 187 in forward passing?

We're referring to the U. S. Naval Academy, the team which will go against Jim Tatum's Carolina Tar Heels at two o'clock in Kenan Stadium this afternoon.

Yep, the Midshipmen rank fourth in the nation in both total offense and forward passing yardage. The nation's fifth rated ball club has compiled these statistics against Boston College and William and Mary, its only two oppponents this season.

Big, fast and experienced. That's the expert's book on the Middies. This team which performs in Kenan this afternoon is rated by many as the finest team ever at the Academy.

Tar Heels Need To Stop Air Attack

But Navy is facing an opponent which is still experiencing the thrill of winning a ball game after dropping eleven in a row. There is incentive enough for the Tar Heels this afternoon to go out and give Navy a battle right down the line.

The Tar Heels will have to be sharp, as sharp as they've ever been in order to halt the Midshipmen. Jim Tatum's boys, through necessity, will probably have to be the defensive ball club.

Tatum has worked endlessly on pass defense during the week and that's the thing which will come closest to stopping Navy. Of course the Middies will be tough on the ground. It's a wide-open ball club which will run over the ends a great deal.

Still, it is our opinion that if Carolina can thwart the passing of quarterback Tom Forrestal, it will be able to play on almost even terms along the ground.

Pigskin Predictions: Clemson Over State

Now that we have gotten over the embarrassment of our State-Maryland prediction of a week ago, we shall endeavor to test our prognosticative ability once again for today's Atlantic Coast Conference games.

At the risk of having to "eat our words" once again this week this corner will go way out on that proverbial limb and try a stab in the dark. Clemson to beat State, 13-7. Should the Wolfpack prove us wrong again, then we'll be more careful with our Consolidated Brothers, but the Tigers still have a fine ball club and we can't help feeling that State is almost the same unpredictable team it was a year ago. So it's Clemson by a TD and let's see how the cookie crumbles.

Duke, Virginia, South Carolina Get Nod

Over on the Duke campus, it's homecoming and you can count on the Blue Devils making the most of the festivities. Battle-worn Maryland is the unfortunate opponent and we look for another mutiny. Duke 40, Maryland 13.

The Virginia Cavaliers travel up to Winston-Salem for a conference encounter with the Wake Forest Deacs. This could be the closest game of the week since it's a battle of the "weaker sisters." Only the fact that Virginia has played one more game than the Deacs will we predict, Virginia 19, Wake Forest 13.

South Carolina, one of our favorites, is down in Texas for a night game with the Longhorns. Texas is favored by a touchdown, we'll take South Carolina by seven, 20-13.

Message To Footballers: Navy Up For Game

1948 alum Blount Stewart of Washington, D. C. sends along a short story from the "Washington Post and Times Herald" with the attached note. "Hope this will be of some use to inspire our Tar Heels Saturday."

Don't know if it made the team bulletin board, but somebody might rush down and tack it up right now. The article was written Oct. 1 and goes like this:

"Jim Tatum and Eddie Erdelatz meet once again when Navy takes on the North Carolina football team in Chapel Hill, N. C., Saturday afternoon.

"The angle of the two coaches opposing each other is gaining momentum at the Naval Academy.

"Now the folks who have been here for some time talk more about the chances of Erdelatz beating Tatum than they do about the unbeaten Middies taking the Tar Heels.

"As far as the deep-rooted Navy followers are concerned, this is Erdelatz' chance to settle some old scores with Tatum.

"It was Tatum and his Maryland team that gave Erdelatz his first beating as Navy's head coach. Eddie made his debut in the Navy-Maryland game that dedicated the Terrapins new stadium in 1950.

"That year Tatum filled in a 35-21 defeat on Erdelatz' first report card. The two teams met again in 1951 and 1952. Eddie came out on the short ends of 40-21 and 38-7 scores.

"The third game was a rough one. Seven players, including four Middies were ejected from the game. Other Navy players were helped from the field with injuries.

"Those were three bitter pills for Erdelatz to swallow. This is Erdelatz' eighth year at Navy and only one other team, Notre Dame, has beaten him more than twice.

"The players want this one for the coach. None of them were around for those three games, but they've been hearing about them.

"They're starting to talk in the locker room about getting this one for Eddie, urging each other to work just a little harder.

"They all feel the same about the game. They know that Erdelatz would like to have this one as much as any game on his schedule, except, of course, Army.

"Erdelatz hasn't said anything about getting this one for him or about his score with Tatum. He's been silent about the rivalry that was built up in those 1950-52 seasons and came out all in favor of Messa Jim.

"The Middies don't want to be too confident or be quoted on what they have to say about the game for fear their quotes will wind up on the North Carolina bulletin board.

"All they have to say for the record is that they're going to be ready when they go down to Chapel Hill."

INELIGIBLES WORKING HARD

There are three players on the University of North Carolina football team who, though ineligibe, are working just as hard as the rest of the squad. End Dick Schroeder, tackle Fred Mueller and guard Larry Donovan are all returnees from the service and won't be eligible until next year.

One of the major livestock shows of the nation is held at "Fairtime" in the Arena of the N. C. State Fair.

The N. C. State Fair Arena was designed by Matthew Nowicki.

SIMPLE MATTER OF RATIO

Ernie Williamson, University of North Carolina talent scout and executive secretary of the Educational Foundaton, Inc. was asked to compare North Carolina high school football with that of Pennsylvania. "A simple case of ratios;" Williamson said. "Pennsylvania has about 1,400 high school football teams, while North Carolina has only 250.

The colorful fireworks displays at the N. C. State Fair offer the finest opportunities to camera enthusiasts to get choice transparencies.

Folckomer And Beck Standouts

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — Maryland's freshman football team was in sight of pay dirt three times in the first five minutes of play but fumbled their chances away as the Carolina freshmen went on to win 14-7 here yesterday.

The Tar Babies took quick advantage of the Terps, mistakes and managed to hold their hosts scoreless until the final minute and a half of play.

Carolina's first score came after Mike Greenday recovered a Maryland fumble on the Tar Babies 49 yard line. The Carolina yearlings marched to the Maryland one in eleven plays. On the next play half-back Sonny Folchomer drove over left guard for the score. Quarterback Russell Hollers went around his own right end for the extra point.

In the third quarter Tar Baby Lennie Beck took Maryland's first punt of the game 59 yards up the field. Two plays later he scored for the deciding touchdown. Hollers kicked for the conversion.

The only Maryland score came after Bill Jones returned a Carolina punt to the Maryland 49. Ken Houser and Everett Cloud combined efforts in a drive to the Tar Babies 16 where Jones passed to Jim Loughmam for the score. Vincent Scott converted.

On the second play of the game Maryland halfback Wayne Fletcher ran 60 yards to the Carolina 20 where Maryland lost the ball on a fumble.

In the opening minutes Robert Gallaner recovered the ball on the Carolina ten after a bad Tar Baby pass from center, but Maryland lost the ball on downs.

UNC Cagers Meet Gophers In Tourney

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 4 (AP)—Defending national champ North Carolina meets Minnesota and Kentucky faces West Virginia in the opening of the University of Kentucky's Invitational Basketball Tournament Dec. 20.

The winners play Dec. 21 for the championship and the first night losers meet for third place.

"This tournament lineup is without doubt the finest field ever assembled in advance of the national finals," Athletic Director Bernice Shively said today in annoucing the pairings.

"We not only have the defending national champions who figure to be even more powerful this season," he added, "but also the Number three of the national last year, our own Kentucky club, the number eight outfit, West Virginia, and a perennially powerful and colorful Minnesota team."

The Kentucky tourney is recognized as the most lucrative in the country, each team picking up an equal share of the net proceeds generally better than $10,500 each.

LITTLE NAVY FULLBACK

Little Dick Dagampat, smallest fullback in Navy history, will be in the starting lineup for the Middies this afternoon. Dagampat is not a notorious runner but is considered one of the nation's finest blocking backs.

Changes Made In Caravan Plans

Frank Inman, president of the University Club, has announced several changes in the original plans for the bus caravan to College Park for the Carolina-Maryland game on the Oct. 19.

The main change is a new set of rates for the trip. As it now stands transportation and room rates will be included on the same ticket. There will be no sale on bus tickets alone. The purchase of a ticket assures the buyer of a reserved hotel room in addition to a seat on the bus.

The rates for the trip range from $23.50 to $15.50. A single room for both nights will cost $23.50. The same accommodations for one night will cost $17.00. Rooms with a double bed will sell for $21.00 for both nights and $15.50 for one night. A suite with twin beds is priced at available to take students back to $22.50 for both nights and $16.50 for one night.

The buses will leave Chapel Hill Friday afternoon and arrive in Washington that night. After checking into the hotels, students will have the night free to see the sights of the nation's capital. On Saturday morning the buses will pick up the students and take them to Byrd Stadium for the game which begins at 1:30 p. m. EDT.

After the game the buses will be available to take students back to Washington. Should students wish to return to College Park that night for parties and other social functions the buses will provide transportation at no extra cost.

Some of the buses will return to Chapel Hill Saturday afternoon. Those who are planning to spend both Friday and Saturday nights in Washington will return to Carolina on Sunday.

According to the athletic ticket office in Woollen Gym all the tickets allotted to Carolina students have been sold.

Victory Is 'Wonderful' Reed Says After Game

By DAVE WIBLE

Dave Reed, the Tar Heels co-captain and number one quarterback, looked up from his little corner in the Carolina dressing room and said with a grin that would befit Miss America when she was given the word. "Its just plain wonderful to be a winner."

Navy head coach Eddie Erdelatz must have felt far to the other extreme. Nobody knows, though—the press was told that he would meet with them in "fifteen minutes," but in fifteen minutes he was gone.

"He's on the bus," someone said. The good men of the press ran to the Navy bus. A big boy at the door said that they could not get on. No one tried to pursuade the big boy to the contrary.

Two midshipmen from the Academy were stopped just before going into Graham Memorial and asked how they felt. "Cruddy," was the quick reply. They preceded on in to drown their sorrows in the conversation of the Carolina co-eds in the building's Rendezvous Room.

Meanwhile, back in the locker room, a check with Jim Shuler and Dave Reed cleared up the question of who scored the first UNC touchdown. Reed tried to handoff to Shuler. They missed their connection and Reed had to follow the halfback into the hole for the score.

Tatum, sucking a finger he hurt while opening a window, cleared up another question. Although many students and alumni saw different, Tatum did see Shuler step out of bounds on his long, nullified touchdown run in the third quarter.

Although he gives Rus Savage full credit for his beautiful touchdown run after intercepting a pass, Tatum felt that Navy's quarterback, Tom Forrestal, would not have thrown such a bad pass had he not been pressed by the charging Carolina line.

Looking at the injured finger, Tatum commented, "It doesn't hurt as bad as it would have it we had lost." Tatum said that it was the most satisfying win he has had since he has been at Carolina.

The Tar Heels mentor claimed that a play that the team did not run hurt the Middes as much as anything. That was the running pass which Carolina used so successfully against Clemson. "The Navy backs kept shifting over towards the ends looking for that play, enabling us to hit the tackles and the center of the line."

Even the Tar Heels Remeses was empowered with fighting spirit of the Tar Heels. During the half he solumly held his ground against the rageing onslaught of goat Bill XIV the mascot of the Academy.

The men on the north side of the stadium in Navy dress were members of the Academy's Third Company which was the honor company last year. The one hundred and fifty midshipmen made the trip as a reward for their outstanding accomplishments as a unit last year.

The local NROTC boys looked very sharp before the game as they sounded out with a cheer for each of the opponents. The Carolina cheer sounded a little louder from the press box. The Battilion was under the guidance of midshipman Captain Bill Roth.

Jim Hathways injury in the game was not very serious. He was OK by the end of the contest.

Victory-Hungry UNC Takes Upset For Second Win

By BILL KING

A victory hungary Carolina football team, unawed by the publicized power of the U. S. Naval Academy, reached up and smote the high-riding Middies a mighty blow with a 13-7 victory before about 25,000 frenzied fans in Kenan Stadium yesterday.

The Tar Heels couldn't have been greater in upsetting the nation's number four (Associated Press) ranked ball club and giving Jim Tatum his fourth victory over an Eddie Erdalatz-coached ball club.

It was a repeat performance of the Clemson game one week ago in that it was a team victory all the way.

Carolina was a team possessed as it upset the equilibrium of the Midshipmen with a touchdown late in the first quarter and then applied the knockout punch when tackle Leo Russavage intercepted a Tom Forrestal pass and raced 32 yards for the second touchdown with 7:51 remaining in the third period.

Although Forrestal completed 11 of 20 passes, it can be safely said that the Tar Heels stopped the Sailors through the air. Navy had a total of 83 aerial yards and the Tar Heels hauled in five of Forrestal's pitches. The final interception was the needle which completely deflated the Middies as end Buddy Payne, who turned in another brillient performance, made a one-handed grab of a Forrestal pass with 1:17 remaining in the game and Navy moving toward the Carolina goal line. From there the Tar Heels were able to run out the clock and preserve what was probably one of Tatum's greatest victories.

The Tar Heels stuck religiously to the terra ferrma against the Middies, attempting not one single pass all afternoon.

The hird-charging Carolina line made things miserbale for Forrestal's Sigma All-American candidate. The slender senior could do nothing against the on-rushing Tar Heels who refused to be fooled by the Navy razzle-dazzle and highly-rated passing game. Russavage's touchdown run came as a direct result of the fierce Tar Heel front wall as he had to rush his pass.

Carolina showed the Navy it meant business when the Tar Heels, through the help of Navy halfback Ned Oldham, marched to a touchdown the first time it got possession of the ball after receiving the kickoff. Navy ran three plays after Carolina had failed to move after the opening kickoff. The Middies kicked to

Bond Bid Goes To Uncle Sam

The U. S. government Saturday purchased $2 million in revenue bonds to back construction of three boys' dormitories and an addition to Spencer women's dormitory here.

Bonds purchased Saturday also will finance construction of a dormitory at State College in Raleigh.

Interest rate on the bonds—which will be retired from rental fees once the dormitories are occupied—was set at two and three-fourths per cent.

Quick action on the purchase came during an Executive Council meeting attended by university officials in the Planetarium Building. It was a mere formality.

Approved by the North Carolina legislature in 1955, the bonds will back construction of three boys' dormitories which will house some 652 students. They are expected to be completed by September of next year.

The addition at Spencer Dormitory will allow quarters for some 75 more women students. That project is also expected for completion next September.

Big Crowd Assembles At Pre-Game Rally

By DAVIS YOUNG

The University's biggest and best attended pep rally in years was held Friday night.

It is estimated that up to 1200 faithful Carolinians were on the scene to give Jim Tatum's charges a rousing "SINK NAVY" sendoff.

The rally started on the lawn running alongside Emerson Field. With the band and 100 torch bearers leading the way, the spirited group wound its way down East Cameron St. to Raleigh and up to the field adjacen to Woolen Gym.

There was some delay as the team reached the field from an uptown flick. The interim was taken care of by the band and the students joining together for several verses of "Dixie."

The team was escorted to the front of the group by the cheerleaders. UNC Co-Captain Buddy Payne had this to say to the crowd: "I appreciate this tremendous turnout.

"It means a lot to me personally and to the team as a whole. We really feel that we are working for something when we see spirit like this. I can guarantee you a good game."

George Barclay, Carolina's first All American, was featured along with the team and spoke briefly. He remarked, "this is a fine group representing a great student body. We have been working hard and will give our every effort to insure a victory for you on Saturday."

Frank Black, head cheerleader had this to say to the Daily Tar Heel at the conclusion of the rally: "Tonight we experienced a rebirth of the true Carolina spirit.

"It was gratifying to the cheerleaders and I am sure to the team to see a wonderful turnout like we had tonight. Now that we have reached a position of true spirit, we must not slip back to the complacent attitude of the past."

"I would like to acknowledge the help of the University Club, the six sororities and their queens, the team and you the student body for making tonight's rally a great success.

"I feel sure that all of you will be present at the next rally with the wonderful spirit you brought with you tonight. Showing the team we are behind them can make a tremendous difference to the players"

Peaceful Undertaking

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5—(AP)—Prof. Anatoliy A. Blagonravov, a visiting Russian scientist, said today the Soviet earth satellite "is a peaceful undertaking in the interests of science" with no military implications.

He said this in answer to a question in one of many on-the-fly interviews he gave while attending an International Geophysics Year conference here.

The Soviet scientist also declared that scientific information gleaned in Russia's satellite program will be communicated to the rest of the world.

news in brief

Polish Students

WARSAW, Oct. 5—(AP)—Truckloads of militia men stood at the ready today as students massed outside Warsaw's shuttered polytechnic school. The city was calm but on edge after two nights of street fighting.

The students, protesting press censorship and rough police tactics, were joined by other Poles in a battle last night against club-swinging police. There were casualties and arrests, but no figures have been announced. The trouble was sparked by the Communist government ban on the student newspaper Fo Prostu because of its anti-party line policy. Today the party meted out punishment for the student editors: expulsion from the Communist Party.

Employers Next

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5—(AP)—Senate rackets probers said today they will start off their next round of hearings by looking into what they call the "anti-union activities" of some employers.

A central figure in the inquiry by the special senate committee set up to investigate alleged improper activities in the labor-management field will be Nathan Shefferman, a Chicago consultant to employers on labor problems.

UNC Military Role Lauded

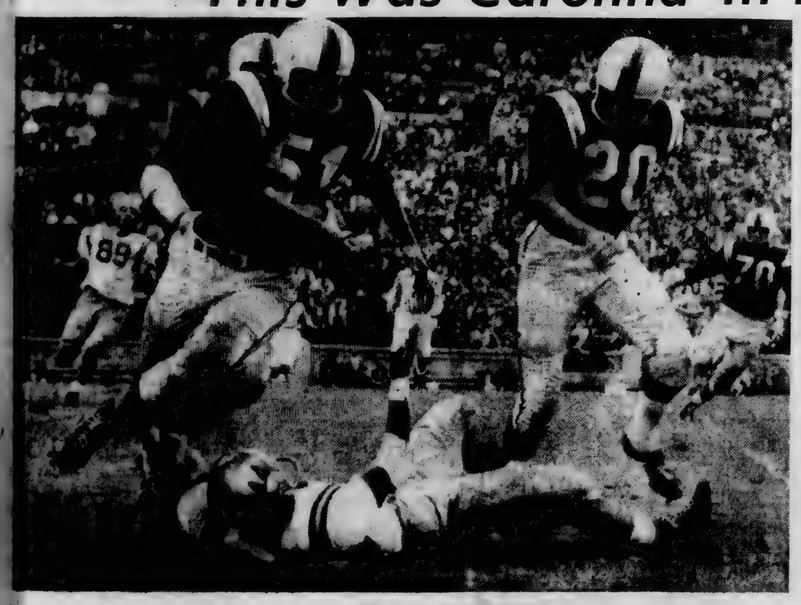
The University of North Carolina was recognized yesterday for "distinguished service that contributes much to helping the United States solve the military problem of remaining militarily strong without bankrupting ourselves"

An award commending UNC for its role in military strength of the nation was accepted by Chancellor William B. Aycock from the U. S. defense establishment.

Rear Adm. George C. Crawford declared that the university's policy enabels the nation to bolster its military posture—in readiness for war and peacetime.

"The University of North Carolina has taken the lead for a number of years now in encouraging and assisting the various military services with this vital reserve program," he said.

Admiral Crawford referred to the presence of Naval and Air Force Reserve training units among students and faculty at the university.

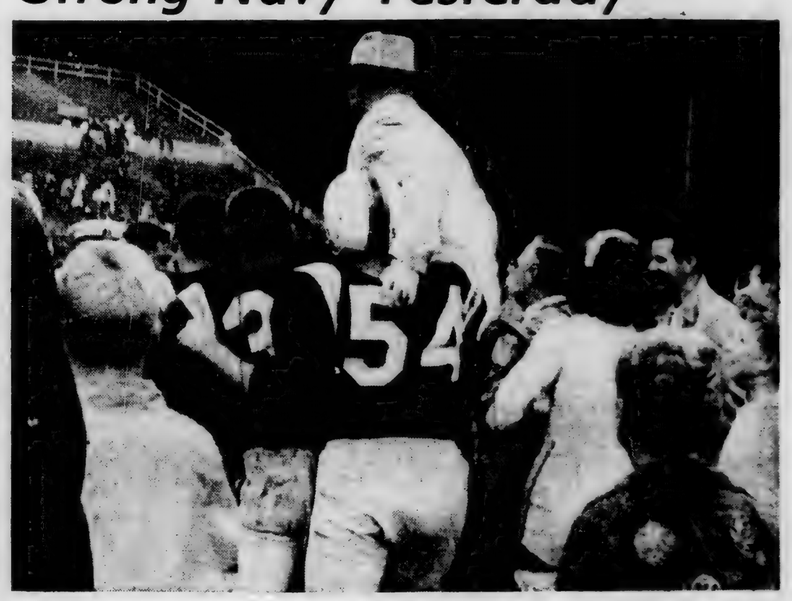


The university "permits use of its facilities and training aids by no less than six Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force Reserve units without cost to these units,' said Admiral Crawford.

He also pointed out that the university maintains a staff member as "co-ordinator of military affairs."

The purpose of the award, he stressed, is to acknowledge the effective support for the nation's military reserve program.

A certificate and pennant were given to the university. The ceremony was conducted during a luncheon at the Carolina Inn.



This Was Carolina In Impressive Win Over Strong Navy Yesterday

CAROLINA'S SWEARINGEN . . . drives for gain

UNC MAJORETTE . . . happy at halftime

TATUM HAULED OFF . . . after victorious game

Athletic Achievement Of Tatumian Forces Is Inspirational; May The Performance Duplicate . . .

The athletic forces of Head Football Coach Jim Tatum rolled to an exceedingly excellent victory over the middies of Navy yesterday:

13 to 7.

It was a truly inspirational victory.

The performances of the line and Quarterback Dave Reid are to be complimented.

And the performances of Interceptor-Scorer Leo Russavage and Interceptor Buddy Payne and Sparkling Halfback Jim Schuler and many others can hardly be discounted.

The Daily Tar Heel offers its hardiest editorial compliments to the athletic forces and the coaching performance of Jim Tatum.

If yesterday's strength and vitality had been consummated against the athletes fielded by Earle Edwards of the North Carolina State Wolfpack, the score would have incontrovertably been reversed.

We have consistently criticized the professionalism of Coach Jim Tatum, and we shall continue to criticize any form of curricular or extra-curricular activities which supercede the academic realm.

But we could hardly help absorbing the fighting spirit which permeated the play of Tatum's forces yesterday.

The Daily Tar Heel again offers its heartiest congratulations to the Tar Heel footballers.

May the vitality and excellence be reitterated against all such formdable foes —

May the Orange Bowl ambitions of Murray and Company be swamped by the University's superior prowess . . .

Bon Voyage and all that sort of rot . . .

Yes' Suh, Segregation Must Be Condemned

Although we of the Daily Tar Heel do not endorse this radical stand taken by the Iowa Daily, we must respect the thought of the editor and pass his condemning words on to Southerners who fail to recognize that racial segregation is obsolete and doomed to ignominious defeat. Thus we reprint his words. The Editor:

Governor Orville Faubus was granted, television time by the American Broadcasting Company Thursday evening to address the people of his state of Arkansas and the rest of the nation.

Faubus used every trick in the emotional book to convince the American public that Federal intervention in Little Rock was wrong. He quoted poetry, referred to God, the home, the children, and anything else that might win him favor from television listeners.

Yet his speech was brim-full of snide, irresponsible accusations and observations that deserve nothing but catcalls and complete rejection.

The Governor echoed the same old trite chant of "Give us more time!", and joined the ranks of Senators Eastland and Stennis of Mississippi by saying that the South can work out her problems alone.

Faubus is afraid that the Federal government will now intervene in labor and other matters — at least that is what he wants the rest of the country to believe.

The South has had years and years to work out a solution to their racial problems, but as of the Supreme Court ruling in 1953, they had not even attempted a gradual beginning! Violence and suppression were the only methods being used to solve any race problems below the Mason-Dixon.

Mobs led by "poor white trash" and imported White Supremacy advocates got away with murder in many instances while politicians heaped wood on the racial fire by taking tacit stands against any fair voting practices for the Negro.

No one in the North is in favor of Federal overruling of states rights, but as President Eisenhower has said, this is a country run by laws — not men. If we were to allow the South to flaunt the Federal government, mob rule would overtake our laws and dictate fear and bloodshed to every person in this country.

Let's take a look, by the way, at the "unjust, unfair and growing menace" that is called our Federal government.

Less than a month before Governor Faubus was granted time to plead his case on ABC he had called out his National Guard troops. He'd called them out to make sure that no Negroes entered the high school. He said he called them out to "stall for time" and "protect the peace", but the only thing we can go by is the fact that the troops were ordered to stand with their rifles in a ready position and turn away, indeed, push away, any Negro who attempted to enter the school.

The governor did this after the Supreme Court of this country had already passed a law giving these Negroes the right to enter the Little Rock school! He continued to leave the Guard on duty even after Washington and the Federal government asked him to reconsider.

He had used his troops to openly defy a Federal law. And yet he was granted time on a national television network to plead his case — even after he had publicly denounced the President of the United States and the Attorney General — and even after Negroes had been beaten and bullied while his troops looked on.

He had been granted television time because of the laws of this country. The laws that no man can refute; the laws that see all men equal — even when they are obviously doing things detrimental to the good of this country.

If Faubus can honestly say that there was no need for Federal intervention in Little Rock, then he must also say that there is no need for punishing those who have killed and injured Negores. The use of Federal troops in Little Rock was not aggression on the part of Washington, but the prevention of a bloody murder or hanging that would have set off a crime wave the South could never forget.

We sincerely hope the Federal government continues to intervene where ever American citizens are in personal fear for their lives because of the shortsightedness of a radical state official.

THE HILLTOP:

Oppression Of Polish Freedom: Lest We Forget

Nancy Hill

On a Friday night in Chapel Hill few people are afraid of anything. What they fear is perhaps a quiz the first of the week, or whether the team will win Saturday's game.

In Warsaw this Friday night there must be a fear of which few of our our student generation have any conception.

It is a nagging, persistent fear that possess men who have to defend their "right" against an official, totalitarian dogma. It is the sort of fear which few men here know, because few men are faced with almost certain retaliation for their revolt against authority.

There is, of course, the discouraging knowledge that the oppressor is utterly ruthless. He is infamous for his methods of exacting conformity. As of Friday night, the Western world knew that tear gas and noise bombs had been used to disperse crowds of students and student sympathizers and that students seeking refuge in alleys and doorways had been beaten with rubber hoses.

The portent of further retaliation is ominously stated in teletype stories of statements of the Polish government. 'Warsaw radio announced tonight that Poland's Communist party has ordered party penalties for card-carrying communists on the banned paper's staff."

What is an everyday occurence in The Daily Tar Heel and most college newspapers here was the instigation of the Polish Communist wrath. Po Prostu, a Warsaw university student paper, has recently been critical of policies of the government and of Communist party head Wladslaw Gomulka. As a result the paper was supressed.

Students met this week in protest against supression, and the meetings were broken up by riot squads. Tear gas bombs were used Thursday night against a crowd of 2,000 students, and this quiet Chapel Hill Friday, Polish red police joined forces with security troops and militia men from worker's ranks to supress what an Associated Press release termed "still apparently untamed students."

A communique in the Communist press stated, according to the AP, that riots Thursday were blamed on sensation seekers, and it warned that students who took part would be expelled.

The implications of the situation are limitless. How many people a year ago this October knew that the staunchest among Hungarian student Communists were plotting a revolt; that almost from the moment of their arrival a group of Korean students sent to Hungary to study technology were being indoctrinated against the Communist system? Those handpicked Koreans—the flower of North Korean Communist youth—chose to revolt on the eve of Oct. 24.

It might not be too long before Russian tanks are rolling across the plains of Poland, and the United Nations will be faced with another Soviet action to belatedly condemn.

We can only surmise as to the nature and intensity of the fear in Warsaw this Friday night, and hope that we may never experience it.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

Utter Futility And Desperation; Or The Night I Bowled A Big 299 . . .

Al Walker

The other night a friend of mine and I went over to Durham to bowl a few games. It was league night, and much too crowded for my friend and I to bowl a few games. They should have a bowling alley in Chapel Hill. Then we wouldn't have to go twelve miles to find out it is league night.

The disappointment which we felt when we discovered the alleys crowded reminded me of another disappointing thing which happened to me in connection with bowling. That is the time I bowled 299.

Two hundred and ninety nine is only one short of three hundred. To bowl a score of three hundred, one must roll twelve strikes in a row, with the first one coming in the first frame of a regulation game, and the last one coming in the tenth frame, three times straight. To roll a strike, you gotta knock down ten pins that are set up at the end of an alley.

I don't know any of the dimension, but it is a long way down to the pins from where you let go of the ball, and it has many opportunities to veer off course and not hit the head pin properly.

The reason why it is possible to knock down ten pins with one ball is the fact that the pins are arranged in an equilateral triangle, close enough to each other to have a falling domino effect if the head pin is hit correctly.

The scoring is more complex than the rules, and despite the fact that I have done a grand job of communicating the strategy of the game to you, as far as the scoring is concerned, let it suffice to say that if you roll twelve straight strikes you've done something, and also you have scored three hundred.

These three hundred games are rare birds. It is quite a feat.

I had had four beers. I felt good. My three bowling fingers nestled in the holes as I bowled a respectable 243 on the first game of the set. (A set is three games.) Eight strikes and three spares. The second best game of my life. Two fifty one was my best. I started my second game off with a strike. It was a good one—hitting the head pin a shade to the right and the pins dropped fast and clean. It was going to be another good game. I felt like I could bowl strikes all night. I walked over to the other alley and rolled another one. No sweat.

Six more times I took my position, took the run, the hop, the slide and let fly and six times I bowled strikes. Eight in a row. The ninth one wasn't too clean. One pin tottered for five seconds before it decided to fall. The pins have a mind of their own. These pins were sitting down at the end of the alley and grinning at me and saying, "Come on—you just roll that ball down here and we'll fall down. We don t know exactly why you want to knock us down because this man who sweats on us just keeps setting us back up again. But we can tell you like to have us fall down. Still it seems rather ridiculous."

The tenth strike was clean.

The eleventh one was another good one, and all the pins went down simultaneously.

The twelth one only got nine pins.

Damn it. I guess I'll have to go back to Durham next week and see if it is league night.

"Not A Race Riot"

BOSTON, Oct. 5—(AP)—Twenty-four persons—all colored but one—were in court today on charges rising out of fighting in a Roxbury dance hall last night.

Police Capt. John H. Cloran said: "It definitely was a colored dance which they have regularly on Friday nights. It was definitely not a race riot, not one iota of it."

Faubusian Tactics: Opinions, Please

Davis Young

This is the initial column in a weekly series that will run throughout the year. Each week we will bring a question of current interest to University students upon which they will give their personal opinions . . . The Editor.

Question: What is your opinion of the Little Rock situtation?

William Anderson — Cincinnati, Ohio — "Eisenhower could not have handled the situation any differently. This type of problem can only be solved through the bruising of feelings. Integration will come!"

Paul Carr — Hillsboro, N. C. — "Its a problem isn't it? I LOVE Oligharic Ozark Orval the pied piper of peace. Eisenhower should have come off the 18th green earlier. He had no conception of the problem."

Dick Frank — Greensboro, N. C. — "This whole situation resulted from the unthinking actions of Governor Faubus. Eisenhower had no choice except to send troops, for Faubus either wasn't able to or didn't want to cope with the problem. Some type of integration is going to have to come through the co operation of both races."

Hussein Nasser — U.S.N.S.A. Representative from Cairo University, Cairo Egypt. (This is Mr. Nasser's view as an official representative of the Egyptian students universities, and not necessarily his own personal opinion.)

"Egyptian students will be pleased when this entire problem is solved. A situation such as this can set back the spread of American democracy many years. Other countries cannot but question the sincerity of your democracy, when a situation such as this exists in your country."

Jerry Stokes — Rome, Georgia — "Governor Faubus brought upon the people of Little Rock, an ugly scandal that will not be easily forgotten. Upon the country he has put an ugly black smear, that Russian propagandists will quickly seize."

Tom Turnipseed — North Wilkesboro, N. C. — "The Little Rock situation will have far reaching effects upon the world. The sides are now clearly drawn between the all powerful central government and the states. Our forefathers did not mean for bayonets to be used against the citizens for the forcing of something they don't want."

Paul Richlands — Sylvester, N. C. — "Faubus has gone too far and is now trying to save face. Perhaps someday we will also realize that Ike infringed upon the rights of the states. Integration will not definately come either here or in the North."

Garner Bleviss — West Jefferson, N. C. — "The violence could have been stopped if the president had acted sooner. He should have studied the question more thourghly and found a better solution. Integration will come, but should not be forced from Washington."

Jerry Leonard — Charlotte, N. C. — "It is regrettable that federal troops were sent to Arkansas. This would not have been necessary if Faubus had not let political motives interfere with his obligations as a governor."

Norris Keever — Hiddenite, N. C. — "Two mistakes were made. Faubus's use of the National Guard before violence occurred and Eisenhower not working through Faubus when violence was imminent. The entire situation is a national disgrace."

GRUMBLINGS & GATHERINGS:

Medical Bugism: Peale's Peddle

Frank Crowther

Have you ever noticed how some of the medical students, those newly clad in their whites and others who should know better, parade down the street in their medical Ivy-Leagues?

I ma not claiming that this cultism or fetish is representative of all the medical students. Among my friends, I count several in each of the four years of Medical School, an interne, a few doctors and a psychiatrist. Of these, only one have I ever seen in Chapel Hill properly clad in his whites, and it was only then out of necessity. Never have I seen one of the doctors on the Infirmary staff in town with uniform.

Of the others, I will concede that there must be times when there isn't time to change. But this, actually, is not the distinction I am trying to make. I don't object to the whites personly, only a certain brand of individual who wears them.

You cna see him comingg pompous and haughty, almost screaming for attention. He has the air about him that some people have in a new Cadillac: the car drives them; they have hardly anything to do with it. Some of the very cute ones, instead of using a belt, have a piece of rubber tubing tied around their waist. And the ever present stethoscope has to dangle carelessly out of one of the side pockets. It's a wonder some of them don't wear rubber gloves to lunch.

★ ★ ★

I happened to run across several Norman Vincent Pealisms yesterday, and it was just too much in one day. I promised myself that I wouldn't get flustered or angry and that, come the monsoons possibly he would just float away. To coin the phrase of an old friend of mine, Ron Levin, "Man, he bugs me. He really bugs me!" Yes, Ron, he bugs me, too.

To put it succinctly, Peale is a incompetent nincompoop (here we go), who profusely and ignominiously lays his festered nits with obvious reckless abndon, decaying the masses who willingly swarm around him with open arms.

He has seemingly cultured these finite bits of diseased streptococci in his little Peale-pound where he must spend most of his time practicing one or another of the forms of necromancy.

Piano Recital Set Tuesday

The appearance of Lionel Nowak, American composer and pianist, here Tuesday night, Oct. 8, will mark the opening fall concert of the Tuesday Evening Series presented by the Department of Music.

In a piano rcital to be given at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall, Nowak will present a varied program, including some of his own compositions.

A faculty member at Bennington College since 1948, the composer and pianist has reflected in his compositions the fruitful teaching of Roger Sessions, Quincy Porter, and Herbert Elwell.

In piano he has been a student of Beryl Rubinstein and Edwin Fischer. Nowak has written several large ballets, each with over 100 performances, orchestral works, chamber music, songs and piano pieces.

He will present two of his piano works in the coming concert: a "Fantasia" composed in 1954 and four sketches entitled "Four Pages From a Musical Diary" written in 1944. A pianist who has been highly praised for his thorough technique and mature musicianship, Nowak will also play compositions by Froberger, Beethoven, Liszt, Debussy, and Webern.

Admission to the concert is free and the public is invited.

UNC Professor Tells Of Schools In Britain

By BEN TAYLOR

A month's vacation every eight weeks, no required attendance at lectures, beginning one's major the first year in college . . . this is learning??

Yes, but in Great Britain!!

Sounds great, but before you "Carolina Gentlemen" throw your beer, flasks, and ivy-league T-shirts into your overnight bag you had better think twice This English system has its drawbacks.

In an interview with Dr. Richard Barlow, B.A., M.A., B.D., of the UNC History faculty, one asumption was brought to the surface. Mr. Barlow, having taught and studied at the University of Pennsylvania and Cambridge University in England, asserts that you will probably be a more compact individual with your rigorous nine months of studying than your English counterpart, with his broken system of "enlightenment."

"The average British student has much less confidence and personal assuredness than almost any Carolina student. He may be equally learned, but his ability to socialize is generally below that of an American student. He is inclined to be self-conscious and shy in his relationship with fellow students in direct contrast to the congeniality I have seen here at Carolina," Dr. Barlow said.

In the land of Parliament, Prince Charles, and pubs, it is normal for children to enter "prep" school at an early age. But the word "prep" has a different connotation from our use of the word. In England, it is not at all uncommon for a student to begin learning the French language at the tender age of 8 or 9. The British reason that a child's mind is more capable of grasping the basic elements of a subject at that age than five or six years later.

"School to an Englishman, Dr. Barlow says, can mean only those years prior to college. The very word itself is not held in great esteem by any English child. At the ages of 11 and 16 each child is given examinations designed to test his capacity to do college work. In essence, it strains out those unfitted for college work, enabling the colleges to receive only those individuals capable of the grinds of higher education."

Once in college, he begins to major almost immediately. While in college, he is not required to attend the lectures, letting his individual volition guide him in his search for his life's work. Neither does the English college place any emphasis on two years of general or liberal education, letting the student forfeit social growth for mental maturity, Dr. Barlow implied.

As a result, the English student, asserts Dr. Barlow, usually is overimaginative and spins theories with

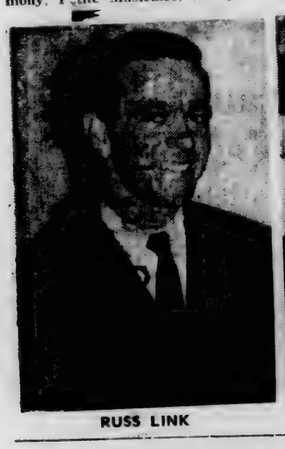
Mitchell Society To Meet Tuesday

The Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society will hold its first meeting of the semester here Tuesday night, Oct. 8, at 7:30 o'clock in Phillips Hall, room 206.

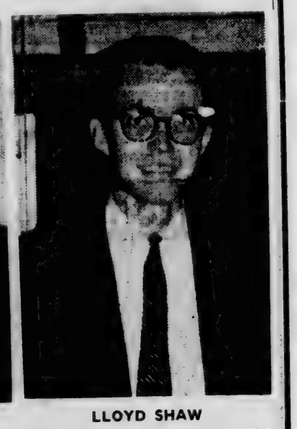
Dr. Charles W. Hooker, club president and professor of anatomy, said that new members will be elected at the meeting. The society, composed of faculty and students in the sciences, meets monthly to hear and discuss research papers, and also publishes a journal.

Tuesday night papers will be given by Dr. Rolfe E. Glover III, assistant professor in the Department of Physics, "Outlines for the Theory of Superconductivity;" and Dr. George K. Summer, research fellow in the Medical School's Department of Pediatrics, "Protein Practionation in Health Diseases."



Link Heads Music Committee; Shaw In Charge Of Calendar

There are two young men over at Graham Memorial, one by the name of Russ Link, the other by the name of Lloyd Shaw. One is in charge of making music, the other in charge of letting the campus know that music is going to be made.



Russ Link, a senior from Jamaica, New York, majoring in dramatic art, is chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board Music Committee. This committee is in charge of presenting folk singing, jazz music, barber shop harmony, Petite Musicales, and popular and classical music programs.

Lloyd Shaw, a senior from Statesville, N. C., majoring in English, is chairman of the Calendar Committee. This committee is in charge of putting out a calender once a semester of all scheduled campus events. The calender for this semester has already gone to press.

Link already has several programs lined up for the fall. On Oct. 13 Herb Shellans, a balladeer, will appear at Graham Memorial lounge. Other programs featuring an organist, a pianist, a cello, and voice are planned for later on.

Choral Club Will Begin Rehearsals Monday

University professor of music, Joel Carter, has announced that the Chapel Hill Choral Club will begin rehearsals Monday at 7:30 p.m. All singers are invited to attend and join the club.

Mr. Carter said, "There are no auditions and no dues. We do request that members attend rehearsals regularly."

The rehearsals will be held every Monday evening this fall, and will be for the St. Saens Christmas Oratorio, to be given by the club just before the University's Christmas holiday.

The Choral Club has been a feature of Chapel Hill's community and campus more than 25 years. It's ranks are made up of housewives, business men, doctors, students, lawyers, nurses, faculty members, office workers, and others.

The last major work performed by the Club was Verdi's Requiem. It was accompanied by the University Symphony, as are most of the Club's presentations.

The Board of Directors of Graham Memorial have purchased 300 tickets from the Chapel Hill Concert Committee for their next concert October 10, featuring Victoria de los Angeles. These tickets are available free of charge to the students of the University and may be picked up at Graham Memorial.

RUN CALLED BACK—Carolina's Schuler, above, ran beautifully to score a UNC touchdown, but his drive was called back within Navy territory where he had stepped out of bounds. (Buddy Spoon Photo)

Tar Heels Take Victory No. Two

the Carolina 45 and the Tar Heel second unit of Curt Hathaway, Don Coker, Emil DeCantis and Ed Lipski took over.

The Tar Heels could make little progress and Coker was forced to punt on fourth down from the Tar Heel 43. His kick was angled toward the sideline at about the Navy 25 and Oldham moved over to cover, but the ball took a sudden bounce toward Oldham and the Navy Co-Captain instinctively grabbed the ball. He couldn't hold it, however, and the fleet-footed DeCantis pounced on it at the 23.

This was the incentive the Tar Heels needed for it took them just nine plays to go over for the tally. DeCantis got seven to the 15 and Coker moved twice for a total of three to the 12. Lipski then went up the middle for 4 to the 8 and Coker got another to the seven. DeCantis drove to the five and the Carolina first unit of Dave Reid, Daley Goff, Jim Schuler and Bob Shupin took over.

In the first play, the number one unit lined up wide and Reid pitched to Schuler who went for a first down at the one. Reid tried the center once for no gain, then crashed over the same spot for the score with 51 second remaining in the initial period. Shupin added the extra point and Carolina had a 7-0 lead.

Russavage's unexpected contribution came after Carolina had just missed a first down at the Navy 32 with 8:35 left in the third quarter. Navy took over and Oldham got nine yards to the 41. On the next play, Forrestal faded to pass but was rushed hard and tossed a short pass into the flats at the 32 which Russavage grabbed and scrambled for the tally. Shupin missed the point after but Carolina still led 13-0.

Navy's scoring series was its only real threat of the afternoon and the Midshipmen almost didn't make it. After Russavage had scored Navy took the ensuing kickoff and marched to the Carolina four before the third quarter ended. It took the Middies three plays to move across the goal line from the four as the Carolina middle held tight, but on fourth down, Harry (the Horse) Hurst skirted left end for the tally with 13:50 left in the game.

Navy topped the Tar Heels in first downs, 16-12 but the Tar Heels held the rushing edge, 181-172.

Individually, Hurst was the top ground gainer carring 13 times for a net of 88 yards. Oldham lugged the leather 19 times for 76 yards. Schuler was the top ground gainer for Carolina with 42 yards in eight carries. Lipski had 35, Coker 34 and Goff 23 for the Tar Heels.

Carolina's line performance was superb from the word go. Both Tar Heel units worked effectively against the jittery Middies. The backfield was equally effective, running through and around the Navy line with comparative ease.

Schuler furnished the most spectatular run of the day when he exhibited some great broken-field running in a 61 yard touchdown jaunt which was called back to the Navy 45 where he had stepped out of bounds.

Next week the Tar Heels take on Miami (Fla.) Friday night in Coral Gables.

Yanks Clobber Braves, 12-3; Take 2-1 Lead

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 5 —(AP)— Two mighty home runs by rookie Tony Kubek and a sparkling relief pitching job by Don Perfect Game Larsen featured a 12-3 victory for the New York Yankees over Milwaukee today, giving the world champions a 2-1 game lead in the World Series.

Mickey Mantle also blasted a home run for the Yankees, scoring Kubek ahead of him, and Hank Aaron homered for the Braves, who never got into the game after the wild first inning.

Larsen, who pitched the first and only perfect game against Brooklyn last Oct. 8, relieved starter Bob Turley with two out in the second and handcuffed the touted Milwaukee sluggers most of the way.

Satellite Probe

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5—(AP)—A demand was heard today for a congressional investigation of why Red Russia beat the United States into the realm of space with an earth satellite.

It was voiced by Sen. Symington (D-Mo), long-time critic of Eisenhower administration policy in the military and scientific fields.

UNC Glad After Win

Sunny Jim directed the next few words to the UNC student body, after the game. "Here are some of the reasons for the vast improvement of our ball club: One, we now have the facilities to produce a football team. This includes the improvements of the field house, and the addition of two new practice fields which drain properly. Had we not had them we would not have been able to practice in last week's rain. Two, the eating facilities for the team. Three, the rooming facilities in Cobb Dorm. Four, the cooperation of the Administration which has helped us schedule classes so that the boys can get out to practice."

"These have helped a lot, but I think that the spirit of the students has done as much for the team as anything. When they showed up for a big pep rally before the Clemson game it really gave the team a boost. Last year few students showed up for the Pep Rallys. I don't think that any team can play a good brand of ball without the support of the students. We have had it and it has helped."

Terps Drop 14-0 To Duke

A crowd of 25,000 saw the Blue Devils rack up their third straight Atlantic Coast Conference victory.

The Blue Devils scored in 12 plays the first time they had the ball and it appeared they were off to another one-sided triumph.

However, Duke's mistakes and Maryland's stubborn line forced the the Blue Devils to go scoreless for two quarters.

The final Duke score came at the end of a drive that began on the Duke 21. They scored 16 plays later when Halfback Wray Carlton passed to George Dutrow in the end zone from 2 yards out.

The first Blue Devil drive covered 74 yards and was featured by a pass from Quarterback Bob Brodhead to Fullback Hal McElhaney which covered 33 yards and ended on the Maryland 1. Carlton plunged over for the score.

Carlton, a junior, also kicked both of Duke's extra points.

A miscue, rare for the Blue Devils' machine, gave Maryland a scoring chance that fell short in the second period. Brodhead fumbled a Maryland punt and Guard Bob Breedlove covered it for the Terps on the Duke 41.

Maryland moved to the Duke 20. However, the Terps missed two chances to make first downs by less than one foot and Duke took over.

Harriers Top Mecklenburg

Harry Miller, with a time of 12:37, paced the U.N.C. freshman cross-country team to an 18-35 victory over East Mecklenburg High School of Charlotte in the season opener today.

The freshman harriers captured five of the first six places in the decisive win. Finley Golf Course, here in Chapel Hill, was the site of the action. Coach Dale Ranson's previous prophecies of a good team now look very probable. The varsity meets Clemson at Clemson tomorrow.

The order of finish and the times are as follows:

1—Harry Miller—U.N.C.	12:37
2—Neal Chappel—U.N.C.	12:45
3—Jerry Fincher—E.M.	12:48

abandon or becomes simply ridiculous in his assumption of problems."

On a contrasting note, Dr. Barlow says we're" . . . too serious in our learning as compared to the English."

The "broken system" of three eight week school periods with a month's vacation between each is not all ease and play. According to Dr. Barlow, the English student does more studying during these "leisure" days than during his regular tenure.

Dr. Barlow, a native of New Bedford, Mass., said that, even though we are inclined to let almost anyone enter our colleges and universities, by the time we enter graduate school our two years of a major and two of general college have" . . . put us in the same intellectual class as the typical English student."

And, apparently, we have more fun getting there.

After a careful analysis, you will probably find that your four years of Y-Court, South Building, squirrells and Silent Sam will mould you into a more personable individual than a comparable four years of headmasters, theories and vacations.

So, the next time you knock 8:00 o'clock classes and three hour labs, remember the poor fellow in England who is struggling to decide whether or not to attend that lecture on British theory of history or to slip down to the pub for a mug of ale.

Varsity Harriers At Clemson Tomorrow

The Carolina varsity cross-country team will leave Chapel Hill this afternoon en route to Clemson, S. C. where it will meet the Clemson runners in an Atlantic Coast Conference battle tomorrow afternoon.

This is the first meet for Coach Dale Ranson's aggregate and should give the Tar Heels a chance to find out if it's as good as pre-season predictions.

A Glance At The Game Through Glassy Eyes

By DOUGLAS EISELE

Somehow we had missed the kick-off . . . and then, suddenly, the game was over.

Big black hats and UNC megaphones flew through the air. A weazle-eyed drunk made his way through the victory crowd, a blonde leaned over to kiss her date.

High up on the Carolina side unknown hands clinched the grasp of others, and hoarse voices cried out the unbelievable score of 13-7.

A huge crowd swarmed the field while blue-capped midshipmen from Annapolis ran out to greet their brothers . . . like goldfish when a huge hand plunges deep into their home.

They ran together—ran to shake the hands of a defeated but still strong Navy eleven.

But over on the UNC side, alumni, students, supporters—just anybody from North Carolina and its school of the same name—were united again in the bonds of victory.

Saturday night there would be toasts, and parties, and a gloriously happy student body of 7,000 strong. Sunday, there would be the same student body—and hangovers.

Couples were smiling and talking as they left the gates; boys alone were recalling the plays—knew just which one had led to the score—and were glad to be on the winning side.

Radio announcers were blaring out the results, telling their appalled listeners the cronology of the game. And newspaper writers were wondering how to begin that first paragraph.

Deep inside, they knew what to say—because reporters watch and decide, and they know how to tell the story that took football players over two hours to write.

They knew how to tell their readers that Carolina had won—how UNC had upset fifth-ranked Navy 13-7.

Now, all they had to do was write the story—the story of an unbelievable Saturday afternoon game that saw a determined Tar Heel team turn predictions into losses.

Surprised readers, losing betters, would read the accounts on Sunday.

Klan-Negro Battle

MONROE, N. C., Oct. 5—(AP)—Police and NAACP officials disagreed today on reports that an automotive caravan of Ku Klux Klansmen and a group of Negroes swapped gunfire here last night.

Police Chief A. A. Mauney, who said he had ordered several patrol cars to halt the Klan procession if laws were violated, said flatly, "I know there was no shooting."

He added, however, that one officer reported hearing "what sounded like a carbine" near the home of Dr. A. E. Perry where the incident allegedly occurred.

N. C. State Tops Clemson

CLEMSON, S. C., Oct. 5 —(AP)— Halfback Dick Christy breezed 97 yards for a touchdown with the opening kickoff to set North Carolina State on the road to its third Atlantic Coast Conference fooball victory, 13-7, against a rugged Clemson team here today

Christy headed up the middle, then broke clear at the 30, bringing the crowd of 17,000 to its feet as he went the rest of the way untouched. Halfback Dick Hunter's placement for the extra point was wide.

State struck again in the final period, moving 58 yards in five plays to score, Fullback Don Hafer plunging the final half yard. Hunter's conversion was good.

Clemson scored later in the final stanza when State gambled on fourth down and failed at mid-field. Quarterback Bill Barbary ran wide to the right and passed to Halfback George Usry on the State 20. Usry had outdistanced the State defenders and he ran the final 20 yards without being touched. Barbary converted.

Late in the second period, Fullback Jim Sciaretta's field goal try for State was short. Clemson took the ball on its 20 and in eleven plays moved 79 yards to the State one where State held on downs just as the half ended.

World In Brief

Manned Moon

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—(AP)—Three American scientists say it will be economically feasible within six to eight years to build and launch a manned satellite.

The proposed three-stage vehicle, which they would call "Meteor Junior," would have 27 rocket engines, would carry two to four men and would orbit around the earth, 500 miles out in space, at 16,000 miles an hour.

Each space ship would cost between five and 10 million dollars, depending upon the number produced.

Study Satellite

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—(AP) — A vast audience of American scientsts listened to and watched for the Russian earth satellite today, seeking answers to the many questions of space flight.

A timetable worked out by Navy scientists indicated the next passage of the satellite over the United States would occur at about 12:11 a.m. (EST) tomorrow.

Within eight or nine days, American astronomical observatories may get photographs of the baby moon. These will be made during a dawn or dusk passover, periods when the satellite will reflect sunlight from below the horizon and become visible.

Army In Girls' Rooms

LITTLE ROCK, Ark, Oct. 7 — (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus today accused Federal troops at integrated Central High School of following girl students into their dressing room.

In a letter to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commander of all troops in the area, Faubus said:

"If you do not see fit to change this policy, and regard this type of action as necessary to carry out your mission of integrating Central High School, then may I suggest that you request of President Eisenhower, Atty. Gen. Brownell and the Secretary of Defense a certain number of members of the Women's Army Corps."

In Washington the White House said it is "completely untrue and also completely vulgar" for Gov. Orval Faubus to say that Federal troops followed girls into dressing rooms in Little Rock's Central High School.

Presidential Press Secretary James C. Hagerty also said that Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker had returned unopened the letter in which Faubus made the charge.

The reason this was done, Hagerty said, was that it was addressed to "The Commander of the Occupation Forces."

"Beep, Beep"

RALEIGH, Oct. 7—(AP)— Two North Carolina State College students reported today that they picked up the "beep, beep" signal from Russia's earth satellite twice last night as it zoomed across the United States.

Harry Dunn, 18, freshman from Danville, Va., said he and his roommate, Jim Hall of Halifax, Va., said they picked up the satellite's signal on their short-wave receiver at 10:30 o'clock last night and again at 12:08 a.m.

Dunn said the signal from the satellite was "very strong."

Another Raleigh radio operator, Alton Askew, reported he picked up the satellite's radio signal Saturday night.

Red Moon Sends Morse

REXBURG, Idaho, Oct. 7—(AP) —The chief engineer for radio station KRXK said today the Russian earth satellite is sending messages in International Morse Code.

Merrill Andrus said he picked up fairly strong radio signal from the artificial moon last night from 9:15 to 9:42 MST. He said the code can be deciphered into numbers.

He said he received this message at 9:15:

"3411 3411 5560 8110337 55689 43811033 AR."

UNC Professor Gets Top Post

A top post in the International Federation for Modern Languages and Literatures (FILLM) has been assigned to Dr. Werner P. Friederich, professor of German and comparative literature at UNC.

Dr. Friederich has been elected American secretary for the term 1957-60 in the world-wide federation. He is also the organizer of the second congress of the International Comparative Literature Association, which will convene in Chapel Hill in September 1958.

International congresses of the FILLM have been held during the past 10 years in Paris, Florence, Oxford and Heidelberg. Dr. Friederich attended the Heidelberg meeting held in late August of this year. Future congresses are scheduled for 1960 in Liege, Belgium and in 1963 in the United States.

Among the 12 large organizations which compose FILLM are the Modern Language Association of America, the Modern Humanities Research Association in Great Britain, the Australian Modern Language Association, and the International Associations of French Studies, of Germanic Studies, of Slavic Studies and of Comparative Literature.

Jenzano Says:

Area Will See Russian Satellite In Ten Days

Questions uppermost in the minds of many people this week concern the strange revolving object circling the earth.

Top experts, along with amateur star gazers, have been on guard day and night to glimpse the Russian satellite.

Tony Jenzano of the Morehead Planetarium said, "The artificial moon is not visible in this area and won't be until at least ten days. We know that it has been seen in the upper lattitudes, but until the angle of the sun and satellite corresponds, this area won't have the opportunity to see the object."

Jenzano would not comment on how long the object will remain in space, since even the top scientists do not agree on this.

However, if the satellite does come down, Jenzano said that it will burn out like a shooting star and will not be harmful to anyone.

Jenzano said that even with this scientific jump made by the Soviets, the United States has not changed its plans to launch a similar satellite.

The one basic difference in the Soviet satellite and the proposed U. S. satellite concerns the weight of the tiny "moon." The Soviet's satellite weighs 185 pounds, while the U. S. satellite will weigh 24 pounds.

Jenzan said the significance of the Russian satellite is whether the "beep beep" messages being received are for tracking purposes or can be decoded by the Russian scientists.

Since this initial launching has taken place during the International Geophysical Year, now in progress, the Russians have said that information received will be shared by all nations.

In a plan instituted by the Morehead Planetarium to keep people informed of current scientific achievements, a ten minute discussion on the newly-launched satellite has been included in the current Planetarium programs. The path and purposes of the satellite are discussed and a fictitious "moon" is being projected.

Delegates To Be Selected

Students Will Represent UNC At Legislature

Delegates to the 22nd Annual North Carolina State Student Legislature will be elected at a meeting Wednesday at 9 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2 of GM.

The State Student Legislature will convene in Raleigh Nov. 7-9.

All UNC students are eligible to serve as delegates to the legislature, and anyone interested in student government has been invited by officials to attend this meeting Wednesday.

A short quiz on parliamentary procedure will be given, after which interviews will be arranged to determine the delegates.

This is the most famous student legislature in the nation, according to UNC legislature officials, in that it has been functioning over such a long period of time. It offers an opportunity for students from all over North Carolina to meet and debate and draft bills of student and national interest.

Several North Carolina television stations are expected to televise the legislature. NBC"s Monitor as well as reporters from Life and Look magazines are expected to be on hand to cover the meeting.

Last year UNC won the trophy for the best bills presented in the legislature.

Although the date for the student legislature will fall on Germans Week, schedules can be arranged so as not to interfere with Germans to a great extent.

A highlight of the law-makers' week-end will be an address by Gov. Luther Hodges.

Anyone interested in attending the student legislature as a delegate, but unable to attend Wednesday's meeting, should contact Tom Long at 8-9108.

Five Pledged To Law Group

Five second year law students were formally pledged into the Ruffin chapter of Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity last week.

The new pledges are: Jacques Howard Croom, Fayetteville; Robert Dixon, Winston-Salem; Carl Churchill, Roanoke Rapids; Michael James Rabil, Weldon; and James Kirkpatrick, Charlotte.

According to Phi Alpha Delta regulations, no law student may be pledged until the second semester of his first year in law school.

Officers of the fraternity include: Howard Broughton, justice; Buck Ransdell, vice justice; Lem Blades, clerk; Hal Conoly, treasurer; and Dave Evans, marshal.

Rocket Circles

LONDON, Oct. 7—(AP)—Russia disclosed tonight that the rocket which carried the "red moon" into outer space is also circling the earth.

A Soviet jet expert said yesterday the rocket which boosted the earth satellite 560 miles into the sky last Friday was 25 per cent more powerful than the rocket which carried the first Soviet Intercontinental Ballistics missile 3,500 to 5,000 miles during the summer. Maj. Gen. G. Fokrovsky said the rockets were similar.

VISTORIA de los ANGELES

Famed Soprano Will Star Here

The Student Entertainment Committee will present Miss Victoria de los Angeles in concert Thursday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

This concert by the celebrated Spanish soprano of the Metropolitan Opera will be offered through the cooperation of the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

All students desiring to attend the concert must present their ID cards at the information office at Graham Memorial in order to obtain their free tickets.

Miss de los Angeles has recently appeared in Metropolitan Opera performances as Marguerite in "Faust", the Countess in "The Marriage of Figaro," Mimi in "La Boheme" and Eva in "Die Meistersinger".

A native of Spain, Miss de los Angeles first gained international recognition when she won first prize in the Geneva Competition in 1947.

Since that time, she has made a highly successful debut at Carnegie Hall and has become familar to many Americans through her Telephone Hour broadcasts and her many recordings.

New York critics have heavily endorsed complimentary reviews written by their European colleagues. "Golden throat, vocal delight unique in our time," wrote Virgil Thomson in the New York Herald Tribune. Time magazine called her "sensational." The New Yorker said, "a marvelous singer," while Newsweek headlined its review, "Viva Victoria!"

Miss de los Angeles is currently on her fifth concert tour of the United States and Canada under the direction of S. Hurek.

Each summer she returns to Europe for appearances at the imfortant festivals including those in Florence, Besancon Ascona, Edinburgh, Holland and Lyons and in the opera houses of Milan, Paris, London and her own Barcelona.

Cites New Student & Administration Tie

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver cited the "benefits" to be reaped by students from the ad- Body President Sonny Evans, will in an address before the Student Party last night.

It was the initial party session of the year.

Weaver explained that the Chancellor's Cabinet, including Student Body Fersident Sonny Evans, will furnish a means of liaison between student government and the administration.

He reported that the cabinet has already worked on the student parking problem and has investigated the problems concerning construction of a new student union building.

Speaking of the cabinet, he said, "If it (the new representation scheme which includes students) succeeds, it will be worth more than anything we have done recently."

"The University administration is solid in its intention of working with student government," he commented.

One problem now plagueing the University, he said, is that only 45 per cent of those who enter graduate.

"I concretely solicit the cooperation of student government in the study of why is it that students fail?" he said.

Dean Weaver, who reportedly was one of the co-founders of the Student Party, said that he believed that student government had changed a great deal since 1939, but that the basic philosophie values had remained the same.

He said that the expansion of the school had called for new councils and functions of student government. Many people were obvious of the ability of the student government to govern when it was started, he said.

He said that each generation has its problems which have been met by a "great many advances in the form, structure, and procedure of student government."

Although there will be differences of opinion between the students and the administration, Dean Weaver said he believed that through the Chancellor's Cabinet negotiations could be carried on.

He said he did not feel that anyone in South Building knew as much about the sudent's life as the student.

"There is a great opportunity for student initiative in politics, if you can possibly participate you should," Weaver concluded.

Whit Whitfield, chairman of the Student Party, announced that the party had seven vacancies in the Student Legislature to fill.

"You are welcomed and you are invited to come back," Whitfield said to the audience of around 65.

Piano Recital Set By Nowak

American composer and pianist Lionel Nowak will perform in a piano recital Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. His program will begin in the fall concerts of the Tuesday Evening Series presented by the UNC Department of Music.

Mr. Nowak has been the pupil of noted harmonists Roger Sessions, Quincy Porter and Herbert Elwell and has studied piano under Beryl Rubinstein and Edwin Fischer. Since 1948 the composer-pianist has been on the faculty at Bennington College.

Among Mr. Nowak's compositions are several large ballets, orchestral works, chamber music, songs and piano pieces. His program Tuesday night includes two of his piano works: "Fantasia," composed in 1954, and four sketches entitled "Four Pages from a Musical Diary," written in 1944.

Compositions by Freberger, Beethoven, Liszt, Debussy and Webern will also illustrate the pianist's mature musicianship and thorough technique in concert.

The public and students have been cordially invited to attend the concert. Admission is free.

Courier Stopped

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Oct. 7—(AP) —Syrian frontier officials today refused to permit an American diplomatic courier to enter Syria. The courier, James Anthony Verieos of St. Louis, Mo., was carrying a pouch full of diplomatic documents to the American Embassy in Damascus.

He was stopped at the border, where Syrian officials stamped "cancelled" on Syrian visas in his diplomatic passport. The officials gave no indication why they did this. But they indicated they were acting on instructions from Damascus.

It is highly unusual for a country to refuse the entry of a diplomatic courier of another country. When it does happen the offended country usually retaliates.

THE AYCOCK STORY:

William Aycock, Ten Days Late, Soon Surpasses His Class

(Editor's Note: Following is the second in a series of articles which will comprise a three-page section to be published this week in "Popular Governorment." Written by Prof. Albert Coates of UNC, it relates of Chancellor Aycock, who will be officially installed here next weekend.

People in Selma had heard of William Aycock's coming home a Friday evening in October 1945, going to Chapel Hill on Saturday morning to get permission to enter the University Law School ten days late, borrowing books from the Law School Dean to study his lessons over the weekend, and going to class at eight o'clock Monday morning prepared for class discusions; leading his Law School class with the highest scholastic honors the University Law School can offer—Editor-in-Chief of the North Carolina Law Review, member of the Order of the Coif, and the degree of Doctor of Law.

A Law School classmate told the gathering how he went beyond the cases in the casebook to read supplementary citations; how he made every minute count by teaching his three-year-old son to read the numbers on the North Carolina Reports so he could bring the needed volumes on call.

He told how the boy did not know that numbers came on anything but law books till he was six years old; how he walked to Law School through the heavy snow in the winter of 1946 from his home three miles in the country, routing a classmate out of bed along the way to keep him company, and got to an eight o'clock class on time to find they were the only two on hand.

They had seen him go from the students seat to the teacher's chair in the University Law School to become one of its most effective teachers from the start, and Acting Dean of the Law School in summer sessions and the regular session of 1956; and then go on in summer session and regular term to match the best teaching the faculties of Texas and Virginia University Law Schools could offer.

Cornbread And Cornfed And Huckster Hodges . . .

Snap on your bibs, folks, it's North Carolina Cornbread Week.

And, while you'r at it, snap on your hip boots too—to keep gubernatorial commercialis from going too far.

The milling interests must have promised a lot of support to the good governor to force him into such overt and crass huckstering.

It's truly a history-making proclamation—next to Eisenhower's Little Rock federalization order.

But now other good old, old-fashioned, down to earth—other 'Jest Plain Home Folks' propaganda words—dishes, or the interests behind them, are sure going to be insulted.

What about a state 'Black-Strap Lasses Lull?' or a 'Better Butterbeans Week?'

And why not a "Humble Hominy?'

Or, as a crowning glory, why not devote an entire month to meditating upon and stressing the merits of:

'Field Peas Feasts?'

And there are those who claim that education is being sold short in this age of materialism.

Who could complain when we've got a governor who will unselfishly devote an entire week to edification of the state's people on the merits of cornbread?

Yes 'Suh, 'mam, we shore are lucky.

We look forward eagerly and with anticipation to the next miraculous movement by Hustling Hodges.

After all, the '60 National Democratic Convention is only three years off.

There'll be a whole passle of cornbread eaters there . . . they'll be voters too.

To Huckster Hodges:

With '60 in sight . . . .
We know it's all right . . .
To start a campaign . . .
In valley and plain . . .
And in the corn fields . . .

Palmetto Pandemonium, & Braying Gestation . . .

The Palmetto State has come through again in 1957.

Yes, true to form—true to a long line of first—our southern neighbor again paved the way as announced by the Associated Press:

"Union County has purchased nine new Browning sub-machine guns to fight off any invasion by U. S. troops . . ."

Other historic firsts include:

(1) Secession from the union in 1860. (a permanent severing)

(2) Provision of the States' Rights presidential candidate—J. Strom Thurmond — in 1948. (Another lesson in unity)

And now in 1957, the Palmetto State has again brought forth an excellent example of an old tradition:

"A house divided can not stand . . . but it falls on its proud foundation proudly."

And we are all the more proud of a division which came in 1729. Charles II's land patent was divided into northern and southern regions—with most of the bigotry and bias settling to the southern bottom.

The gestation period of the ass is 380 days.

But the Palmetto Palm wavers have accomplished the feat in a much more protracted period—from 1729 to the present.

They couldn't have been so bad before the geographical umbilical cord was servered in 1729.

The gestation period is 228 years . . .

Lauds For A Real Rally

The Daily Tar Heel offers its most hearty congratulations to all enthusiastic Tar Heel supporters who attended Friday night's pep rally.

It is virtually impossible to measure intangibles. But it is highly possible that the esprit de corps generated, permeated the very spirits of the footballers and spurred them on to victory.

The efforts of the University Club and cheerleaders and all responsible for the successful rally were laudable.

The season's prospects look better.

May such enthusiasm continue . . . through vallys of defeat as well as mountains of victory.

Let none be branded "fair weather friends." . . .

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Satellite Sails & Democratic Feathers Flop

Curtis Gans

On October 4, 1957, the Soviet Union launched successfully the first artificial Earth satellite. On the same day, one of the greatest modern myths was exploded.

Destroyed forever was the idea that democracy, with all the added advantages of freedom of initiative, is inherently more capable of producing advances more rapidly in every field of human endeavour. In the words of a noted American tunesmith—"It Ain't Necessarily So!"

The controlled economy and scientific program of the Soviet Union has beaten the American free science in the race to achieve an Earth satellite, and conceivably in other races.

Shattered also was the idea that American "know how" and scientific potential is the greatest in the world, for in roughly forty years of scientific development, the Soviet Union has gone ahead of the United States with some 120 years of development under its belt.

This should come as quite a shock to Americans whose way of life is built upon a queer combination of idealism and materialism, with the emphasis in recent years being decidedly on the latter. It should come as a shock to those Americans, and there are many, who have made American science their dominant god.

It should strike the American hard also, that although the U. S. was ahead in technology a scant five years ago, it is now relegated to second place in the world. With this one of the minor myth of been shattered. That myth of "progress" in President Eisenhower's, campaign platform of "Peace, Prosperity, and Progress."

The military ramifications of this newest development are unclear, but coupled with the development of a successful Intercontinental Ballistics Missile by the Russians during this past summer, it may be surmised that the new development makes clear Soviet supremacy in the field of armaments. This must be accompanied by a grim reminder of the speculation prevalent at the outset of satellite development several years back—that he who could get a satellite in orbit, man and arm it, would have ultimate control of the world.

Moreover, it must be noted that Soviet development was being pushed at a pace far greater than that of the United States, or it would have been unable to surpass the U. S. There seems to be no good reason why Russia should decrease her pace with her goal of world domination so near her grasp. Hence, it would take the U. S. at least double the present defense and scientific effort to catch up and keep pace.

The political causes and ramifications are clearer. Part of the causes stem from the pre-Eisenhower era, but the large majority come from the present administration. The primary cause of this recent major loss of world prestige is the disregard of the president for the safety of the country while pursuing the political expedient of the balanced budget and lower taxation program. As has been the case with many serious issues the president saw fit to condemn the Congressional cuts in the defense budget after the measure was cut, and after he previously urged that Congress go ahead with whatever cuts it deemed fit.

Furthermore the present defense program in which scientists are divided into three groups competing with each other for development of the necessary armaments rather than collaborating with each other and competing, if competition is essential, with Russia, is an idiotic policy to say the least. It is necessary that these scientists be given the maximum latitude for development, and that all, and not one-third may have ready access to the findings of each individual scientist.

Thirdly, the president has been in error in falsely giving to the people of the United States a picture of American supremacy and in avowing to the people that the balanced budget would not hamper the defense of the nation. The balanced budget, it is true, will after some time cut inflation; however, certain cuts can be made by making credit harder not easier. The president has been false to the American people in picturing lower taxation as a good for the country. It would be nice, but now, if anything, higher taxation is necessary.

With this spirit in the government presiding the American people have become complacent. They want lower taxes, and they consider as necessities all the luxuries that Mr. and Mrs. Jones possess.

The congressman is partially to blame because he fosters these desires in order to get elected in his next term. He is in many cases selling himself out for votes rather than attacking the problem of American democracy's livelihood with courage and integrity.

The net result is that the Eisenhower administration can be and is viewed as a complete failure at home and abroad. Only a speedy and quick reversal of program can in the long run save some of the United States' prestige.

On the diplomatic front the possible ramifications of this latest Soviet development are clear. If the Soviet Union is established firmly in the eyes of the other nations as clearly the strongest nation, their appeal becomes greater. In similar situations nations who saw another getting too strong would rally around the second nation in order to achieve a balance. However, they would do so only if they were sure of the good faith of the second nation. If not, they would side with the stronger in order to get protection or remain neutral in the hope that they would be spared from disaster.

The hopes of the U. S. to be the nation around which the other non-Soviet dominated nations of the world would rally are exceedingly dim. In 1952, the United States could count on the votes of all Central and South American nations, most of the Middle Eastern world, all of Western Europe, and much of the Far East in the UN General Assembly.

Since John Foster Dulles, this has changed.

The Central and South American nations do not consistently vote on the side ofthe U. S. The number of Middle Eastern nations voting with the U. S. is down to to four. Western European countries incensed with what they term U. S. "failure" with regard to the Suez dispute are not seen always voting the way the U. S. does, and the Far Eastern countries have shown more and more independence. This has come about because they no longer trust the U. S. to say the truth about anything, since Dulles can vacillate with the Aswan Dam issue, bungle Arab-Israeli relations; and tell the world of the "massive retaliation" he plans for the peoples of the free world, produce none when the Hungarian revolt comes, and abandon the policy entirely in a statement recently.

The U. S. has little hope of recapturing the faith of the independent countries of the world and no hope whatsoever with men like John Foster Dulles in the State Department and Dwight Eisenhower in the White House.

Lest anything that has been said be misleading, a democracy if running properly can produce as much as a totalitarian system of equal operating efficiency, and combines the benefits of individual freedom within its scope. However, this has all happened when American democracy has been in distinct disrepair.

It has been said of Americans that they often make fools of themselves, but at times of crisis all their sterling virtues come to the fore. The only problem now is—to show to all Americans that this indeed is a time of crisis. The devolpment of the satellite shows that the world is getting smaller and before it is ultimately unified under totalitarian rule, the United States must take action.

The principle of foresight must be used. The president must consider the presidency his vocation, and not just an avocation to his golf game. Congress must see with foresight not to play party politcis or the day may soon come when there will be no political parties. The people of the United States must see their way clear

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Momism And Prisms Of-Isms

Whit Whitfield

One of the principal subjects for editorial material on the second page of The Daily Tar Heel is —Isms. Any item that cannot be classified goes under the heading of an -ism. Any prosaic item which would attract little interest on the face is glamorized by the addition of -is m. This is standard operating procedure.

(Webster defines -ism as a suffix of nouns denoting action or practice, state or condition, principles, doctrines, a usage or characteristic, etc.)

This definition was interjected purely for those who adhere to the fanaticism of pedanticism. In keeping with the true spirit of editorialism, it is information which the layman usually does not have at his disposal. In the future therefore, no one need wonder about the editor's criticism of "creeping momism", for they know now that the suffix -ism denotes action or practics, state or condition, principles, doctrines, or a usage or characteristic of mom. Whatever this means, it seems to be an underhanded slam at the heart of the American home, typical of the type writing promulgated by McCarthyism. A writer who would dare violate the family by such unfounded criticism should be subjected to the most severe ostracism by the public.

It would seem to us that a writer would take a more altruistic approach to our contemporary problems. He should confine his literary exploits to the growth of Communism in the Far East or in Africa, rather than base his fangs of cynicism toward the American family. This may be just indefatigueable optimism on our part however, but we were never ones to admit to a pessimistic approach to life's problems.

Sheer humanitarianism! Individualism is one thing, but persecution of mothers is another. The public should not allow amoralism to run rampant in the editorial pages any longer. Totalitarianism no longer has a place in the free press.

It is not for us who are inextricably wrapped in the throes of demagoguism to act. It is up to the readers to decide the fate of the -ism. How many subtle inferences may be found in an ism can not be ascertained, for there are so many that even those who use them get confused (as is obvious). Help these people; they are warped; they are helpless victims of the creeping -isms; they know not what they do.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Goat Falsies And Pride, Pride Etc.

Gail Goodwin

The writer of this column would like to acknowledge all the young gentlemen who so enthusiastically responded to Saturday's item concerning the conceited coed. I hear that Saturday night the girls' dormitories were filled with boys asking if there were any coeds who didn't have dates, and nobly offering to take such leftovers as may be had out wining, dining, and dancing.

Here I must admit that one facet of the enigmatic personality of a coed was left out in the haste of writing Saturday's column: pride. If she had been marooned on an island for six months without seeing a man, she would still die a thousand deaths before accepting a Saturday night date at 7:00 P.M. Saturday night. Puzzling? Yes, but true.

The idea, sirs, is to ask ahead of time. And just for the record, there were girls in the dorms, even if they sent word down they weren't there, so you can stop throwing bricks with threatening notes attached through my window.

Speaking of pride. Friday night before the Navy game three Middies were making predictions down in the Rathskellar. One said, "We didn't come down here to lose." Another added, "We're going to use our first string in the first quarter, our second string in the second quarter and so on down." I would like to refer the Navy to a passage of one of Bobbie Burns' little poems. Something about the best laid plans of mice and men going all haywire.

Incidentally, I was talking with Rameses after the game and he said to please tell all of you that Navy's goat was wearing false horns. That's why they looked larger than his. A matter of pride, you know.

It's been said that the atomic submarine "Nautilus" stays submerged so long that it only surfaces to let the crew re-enlist.

Perhaps for this reason, the Navy has taken valuable space aboard the "Nautilus" for the only soft-drink vending machine in the entire submarine fleet.

Naturally (or you wouldn't hear about it from us) it's a Coca-Cola machine. And not unexpectedly, re-enlistments are quite respectable.

Students And Bridge

By MALCOLM CLARK

Off and on through the years the Daily Tar Heel has carried a bridge column by one of the better players on campus, so several of us put our heads together and decided that since interest in the weekly Monday night duplicate games is so high that a column might be welcome again. The volumn of students playing now is greater than ever before, although the caliber is not up to that of the players that were here in the time of Justice and Sexias (Bill Woodson, J. C. Barefoot, and a dozen other of the finest players anywhere around.) But improvement comes with time and we are going to make every effort to turn out a daily column of bridge instruetion useful not only to the duplicate players, but the rubber bridge players as well.

Today's hand was board No. 1 in the duplicate game on Sept. 30, and it presented its problems to practically every pair. North holds a standard 1 No-trump opening bid with 16-high card points and a 4-4-3-2- hand pattern. East must pass hoping to give them trouble in the eventuality of a final 3 No-trump contract, South passes since he does not hold the required 7 points to raise to 2 No-trump and his hand pattern does not warrant a bid of 2 of a suit. West must now decide between two bids, double, or 2 Hearts, and the former is the only correct choice, for a call of 22 hearts would be taken as a "save" by his partner, and certainly does not any way encourage him. The double, on the other hand, shows a solid opening bid and leaves his partner with the alternative of passing for a set or taking out if his hand warrants. Over the double North has no alternative but to pass and East should bid 3 Clubs, showing a maxium pass over the opening 1 No-trump and indicating there is probably a game East-West, West bids Hearts knowning that his partner cannot have a diamond suit and bid clubs (the rule is: Bid the higher of adjacent suits and the lower of non-adjacent suits, clubs and spades being considered adjacent, clubs the higher). East now bids 4 Hearts and the hand makes against any defense if played properly. The bidding should certainly go this way playing duplicate, but there is some question as to whether East should bid 3 clubs at rubber bridge, swapping in a sure set of one or two tricks for a rather nebulous game, but in duplicate East must be sure of a two set of 1 No-trump and probably a three set in order to beat the 400-odd points they will garner for a game. East's hand holds only nine high-card points and a singleton, totaling 11, but this holding behind an opening 1 No-trump can certainly be promoted to 13 which should make an East-West game reasonably certain.

Neither Side Vulnerable NORTH Deals.

	NORTH S AQJ10 H 109 D KQ83 C KJ9
WEST S 54 H AKJ4 D AJ954 C 106		EAST S K973 H 8762 D 7 C AQ85
	SOUTH S 862 4 Q53 D 1062 C 7432

The Bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1 NT	Pass	Pass	Dbl.

Open Lead: D King

The play is routine cross-ruff. West wins the opening diamond and takes the club finesse, plays the ace and trumps a club, trumps a diamond in the dummy and a second club in his own hand plays small to the King of spades, North wins and leads a trump, which West takes, trumps another diamond, plays the King of spades and trumps a spade with the ace for ten tricks. If a trump is the opening lead West should not let North in with the ace of spades until the cross-ruff is complete, since he can't stand another trump lead.

College In Britain

Study Grants Available

U. S. college students can now apply for next year's Marshall Scholarship awards enabling them to study at a British University for two years. Applications must be in by Oct. 31.

The Marshall Scholarship scheme was started in 1953 as a token of Britian's thanks for Marshall Aid.

Twelve scholarships are awarded every year. Any American student of either sex, married or single, may apply, but they must be under 28 on October 1, 1958, and have graduated from an Amerncan university.

Each award is worth 550 pounds ($1,540) a year. Passage is paid to and from the United Kingdom. Married men get an extra allowance.

Successful candidates are chosen for their characters as well as scholastic attainments.

Four Regional Committees — the Eastern, Southern, Middle Western and Pacific — consider the applications first and would-be winners should apply to the British Consul-General in one of the following cities:

Chicago, Mid-Western Region; New York, Eastern Region; New Orleans, Southern Region; San Francisco, Pacific Region.

Names of the winners are announced in Washington each April for the following October

So far 48 Americans have benefited from the scheme.

All the Marshall scholars who took their final degree examinations this summer have been successful and some of them have done especially well.

Incentive, The Key Word In Carolina's Victory

Websters Collegiate Dictionary defines the word incentive as "That which incites, or tends to incite, to determination or action."

Actually, incentive is that intangible quality which makes man exceed himself in performance—that causes him to rise to a magnaminous height with an inordinate desire for conquest and success.

Those of you who sat in Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon saw a football team possessed of just such qualities and the sum total of its inspiration was a tremendous 13-7 upset win over one of the nation's most highly rated teams.

Perhaps the adage that "a team that won't be beat can't be beat" is sometimes falliable, but certainly there was no greater testimonial to the validity of that adage than Carolina's performance against the U. S. Naval Academy here Saturday.

Tar Heels Were Hungrier Than Navy

Carolina was the better ball club because it was the hungrier of the two. Navy, although reportedly "up" for the game, was simply "out-inspired" by Jim Tatum's warriors.

Few could believe that this thing had actually come to pass at the end of the game. Throughout the contest, there was that feeling that, this is all very nice but when will the Tar Heels yield to the more powerful and experienced Naval forces? Prior to the game, it was assumed that Navy was the more powerful team, now it is very questionable.

By winning, Carolina has labeled itself a team with infinite limitations. The question now is, just how good is this ball club; how far can it go?

The answer will come only with time but certainly the Tar Heels have proved that they are not to be taken lightly. From now on, regardless of the Tar Heels' fate, no team will be able to look forward to its game with Carolina as a "breeze."

A Team Effort And No Super-Stars

Jim Tatum has said time and again this season that he does not have any "super stars" on his ball club. He does not refer to first or second strings, simply his "top 22." Saturday's performance proved that this was no misnomer. For the second straight week, it was a team effort which brought victory to this win-hungry little village.

To attempt an individual appraisal would be suicide. To say that the line was better than the backfield or vice versa would be foolish. This Carolina team is not composed of individual start, thank goodness. There is an element of mutual homegenity among the players—A sort of facit that "we'll win together."

Believe it or not, Tatum has received little of the credit for his Tar Heels' performance thus far. The Tar Heel mentor has stayed in the background and let the boys get the press notices. But this Carolina Club is Tatum-molded and it has been the tireless efforts of Sunny Jim and his fine coaching staff which has given the Tar Heels a wonderful start in the 1957 season.

Erdelatz, Discourteous To The Press

Perhaps the only hitch to a perfect Saturday was the action of Navy Coach Eddie Erdelatz. After the game, the Navy mentor went straight to the bus, thus evading members of the press. Some of the writers followed him to the bus, but many did not get to talk to him.

It was a very unethical incident on the part of the Navy coach. Certainly it has not won him the admiration of the North Carolina press and things of this nature do nothing to enhance the legendary "Annapolis dignity."

We recognize the disappointment which Erdelatz must have experienced at seeing his club go down to defeat. But other coaches have felt this same devastation and have had the courtesy to talk to the press following a game. Coach Erdelatz acted very discourteously.

Tar Heel Opponents Did Well

An indication of the streneousness of the Carolina schedule from here out can be found in any paper carrying "Saturday's Results." Six of Carolina's nine opponents were victorious this past weekend and five of them are yet to be played.

Miami, the Tar Heels' Friday night foe, handed Baylor a 13-7 licking, mighty Duke had trouble but finally came out on the long end of a 14-0 score against Maryland, Virginia outscored Wake Forest, 28-20, a strong South Carolina team downed Texas, 27-21, Tennessee got into the win column by defeating Mississippi State, 14-9 and N. C. State defeated Clemson, 13-7.

The Carolina-Navy Game Notebook

Although Navy quarterback Tom Forrestal is the Academy's top All-American candidate, fans who watched the game Saturday must agree that halfbacks Ned Aldham and Harry (the Horse) Hurst should be given much consideration. The two held the Navy team together and ground out most of the yardage for the Midshipmen.

Spotters for the sportswriters and sportscasters were seen tearing their hair Saturday when they saw the Navy starting lineup. Among the more outstanding tongue-twisters were Jokanovich, Stromic, Reifsnyder, Fritzinger, Martinez and Dagampat.

We'de like to call to the attention of the students a very interesting and entertaining program on WUNC on Sunday nights after the Tar Heels play here on Saturday. The University TV station replays the complete game via film with Ed Myers of WCHL doing a bang-up job of describing the action. Many students know nothing of this treat.

About the third quarter Saturday, we realized that throughout this football season something has been missing. What has happened to the airplane trailing the banner, "The ham makes the difference?"

Ask Leo Russavage his most memorable moment in sports and he'll probably tell you about the touchdown he scored against Navy; he'll also probably tell you that he's never been hit harder than he was when teammate Ronnie Koes mounted his back fiercely in exeubrence just after he'd crossed the goal line. Many fans got a big kick out of this incident.

Our vote for the most unenvious job on the campus. The fellows who clean up the Carolina student section following a game, especially one like Saturday's. It's well worth the effort, however.

Student support during the last two weeks has been nothing short of sensational, but just because the team's leaving Chapel Hill for a couple of weeks is no reason why support should decline. What about a big sendoff or pep rally for the Tar Heels Thursday when they leave for Miami.

Bud Carson Pleased By Tar Babies

By ERWIN FULLER

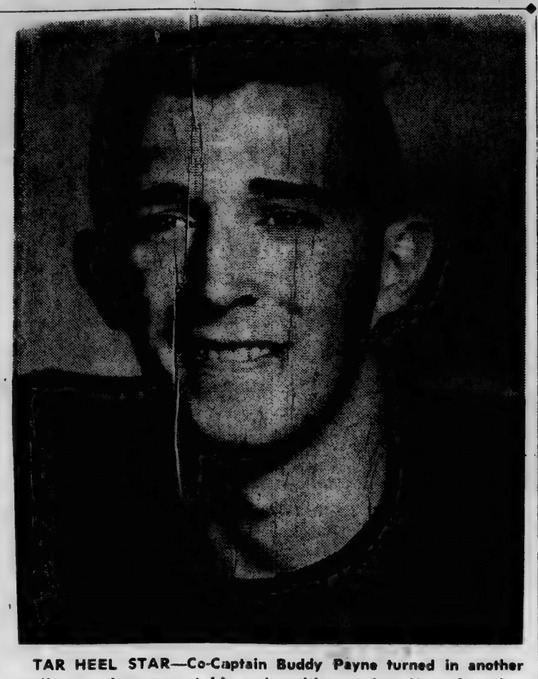
"Our boys were ready, and they played Maryland a real good game"—this was Coach Bud Carson's comment on his Tar Babies' 14-7 victory over a strong Baby Terrapin eleven Friday afternoon in College Park, Md. The UNC freshman mentor was quite pleased with the overall performance of his charges which produced the win, but he hastened to add, "we've much work to do in practice this week to correct those mistakes we made.'

Halfbacks Lenny Beck and Sonny Folckomer were the men who were responsible for the Tar Baby offensive fireworks, each scoring a six-pointer. Beck's TD came on a beautiful 65-yard jaunt down the sidelines on a pitchout from Quarterback Russ Hollers just after the halftime intermission, while Folckomer contribution was a 2-yard plunge to cap a long UNC drive late in the second quarter.

Several other swival-hipped Carolina backs proved elusive for the Maryland tacklers. Beck had a 40-yard scamper to go with his touchdown run, and Folchomer reeled off a 35-yarder before being stopped. Fullback Francis Riggs came up with a 20-yard contribution on a quick opener through the line.

Carson was very complimentary of The Tar Baby defense which three times in the game's opening moments stopped serious Maryland threats. A bad pass from center, a blocked punt, and a long run thrice gave Maryland the pigskin within the Carolina 20-yard stripe, but all three times the drives bogged down when the Terps were unable to get the necessary first-down against the determined UNC line.

After their early penetration, the Baby Terps failed to produce another threat until the dying moments of the contest. They finally hit pay dirt with a 16-yard pass completion to end a 51-yard drive against Carolina's third and fourth units. The Maryland score came with 1:30 remaining, but the Tar Hels launched a drive of their own. They fray ended with Carolina in possession of the ball on the Maryland 25 yard line.



Carson had little about which he could complain from the offensive side of the Tar Baby ledger. Slants off the tackles and wide end sweeps time and time again produced sizeable gains. The Carolina unit chose to grind out the yardage and piled up a big edge in rushing and first-down statistics, but on occasion they took to the air with a fair degree of success. The passing game, especially pass protection, was one phase of play needing much improvement, Carson indicated.

"I thought our tackles looked very good", Carson continued. "In fact, our entire line was very aggresive. They were on their toes the whole game and were responsible for those long runs by our backs. was also very pleased with the game performances of several boy who before now had not been particularly outstanding," the frosh coach stated.

He indicated that definie line-up changes could be expected to reward those individuals whose play had been impressive.

The win, good as it was for team spirit and morale, may prove to be a costly one for the Tar Babies, for it cost them the services of two starters, whom Carson said "played real good ball games". Jim Schumate, a hefty right guard, and Larry Roberts, a fine center, are definitely out for the N. C. State contest Saturday night. Schumate has been disabled by a knee injury while Roberts has a possible broken hand. Roberts' replacement at the center slot, Tom Cabe of Brevard, drew words of praise for his play from Carson.

Booters In Second Match At LC Today

By Jim Porks

The Carolina soccer team will take on the Wildcats of Lynchburg College in Lynchburg, Va. today at 3 p. m.

And it could be another tough game for the Tar Heel booters, tougher than originally expected.

News has filtered down to North Carolina of Lynchburg's recent 3-1 victory over always-tough Virginia in a match held in Charlottesville.

Coach Marvin Allen said yesterday that he expects that the Lynchburg eleven has been eagerly awaiting the game with Carolina, anxious to try and gain revenge for last year's 5-0 loss at the hands of the Tar Heels.

"We'll have to play real good to beat them . . . that home field makes a lot of difference," Allen said.

Allen's squad, with a 1-0 record due to last week's victory over Roanoke College, will probably face Lynchburg without the services of two of its sharpshooters on the forward line.

Coleman Barks, last year's top scorer, severely sprained his ankle during a scrimmage Friday, and Allen said it was doubtful whether he could be able to start in today's game.

Right inside John Ghanin, still suffering from a bruised bone, has not been able to play in the scrimmages and will probably not make the trip to Lynchburg.

The fullbacks will be Ted Youhanna at left fullback, Bob Borden at center, and Pete Killinger at right fullback. Today's game will make only the second time Borden and Killinger have played the fullback position.

Guarding the nets will be goalie Jim Rattay, who gained a 3-0 shutout against Roanoke College in the first game he had ever played at the goalie position.

Record Set In 25-32 Opener

CLEMSON, S. C. Junior Wayne Bishop, who missed last year's cross-country competition due to an injured knee, flashed the form which carried him through an unbeaten freshman slate to lead his Tar Heel mates to a 25-33 win over the formidable Clemson Tiger harriers here yesterday.

Bishop's winning time was 19:56, a new course record. The old mark for the 4.0 mile Clemson course was 20:32.

The first four finishers either bettered or equalled the old course record. Trailing Bishop across the finish line were Tyler of Clemson in 20:27, Captain Everett Whatley of UNC in 20:22, and Newman of the Tigers in 20:32.

After the meet Coach Dale Ranson commented that he was "very well pleased with the team effort". Ranson regarded the Clemson meet as one of the tougher tests for his talented group, for Clemson is perennially strong in ACC cross-country competition.

'Send-Off' Pep Rally Is Today

A big send-off pep rally has been scheduled for tonight at 7 p.m. on Emerson field. Frankie Black, head cheerleader, has announced that the rally will be held tonight, since the team leaves tomorrow morning for its first out-of-town game with Miami.

"I want everybody there—it is very important to the team. Remember, our spirit is the team's spirit," Black stated.

The cheerleaders and band will be on hand for the rally which will move from Emerson field to the Monogram Club and from there to Cobb Dormitory where the football players live. The major part of the send-off rally is to be held outside Cobb.

Black said further, "I do hope that everyone will be there including fraternities and sororities. I hope that they can hold off their scheduled chapter meetings for a little while, since the rally will be a short one."

The team leaves by plane from the Raleigh-Durham Airport tomorrow morning at 10:30 oclock. Black is the only cheerleader who will accompany the team to Miami.

Quarterly Is Working On First Publication

Around this time of year one of the busiest places in Graham Memorial, or on the entire UNC campus, for that matter, is the office of the Carolina Quarterly.

This is decision time.

Every afternoon members of the staff gather to read and discuss contributions for the Fall, 1957 issue. And they are looking with particular interest this fall at material submitted from the Carolina campus.

The Quarterly has been named among the top literary magazines in this country, and this year's staff, headed by Christian Lefebure, is hard at work right now maintaining that standard.

Last year's Quarterly publications included the works of such famous literary figures as Archibald MacLeish and Thomas Wolfe. In the 1957-58 magazines, according to a policy statement by Lefebure, students whose contributions are accepted will see their names in print with other well-known writers.

The first publication of the Quarterly this year, the Fall, 1957 issue, will come off the presses in late October or early November.

Students subscription rates for the year are $1. Non-student rates are $1.25. A subscription blank, for your use, follows.

World In Brief

U.N. Disarmament

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—At the urging of both the United States and Russia, the United Nations agreed today to begin immediate detailed debate on disarmament.

The action was taken in the 82-nation political committee, where U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge declared "we want no time lost" in discussing disarmament, "the most urgent problem of this assembly."

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister V. V. Kuznetsov declared that "the most important, the most urgent issue before us is a solution of the disarmament problem."

"Age Of Bombers Over"

MOSCOW (AP)—Nikita Khrushchev said today manned warplanes are no match for Russia's Intercontinental Ballistic Missile—"the age of bombers is over."

"They might as well put bombers and fighters in the museum," he commented, citing Soviet scientific achievements.

"Our intercontinental ballistic rocket shows that it is no good sending humanly controlled machines against missiles."

The Communist Party chief's words were reported by two British members of parliament who talked with him 80 minutes.

Race Cases Delayed

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Some 50 criminal cases growing out of last month's integration disorders at Central High School were postponed today until late November.

"Stay away from the school," Municipal Judge Harry Robinson cautioned five defendants before him today. All the cases involve such charges as disturbing the peace, unlawful assembly and resisting arrest.

Robinson, an appointee of Gov. Orval Faubus, granted a delay in the five cases at the request of defense lawyers. He set hearings for Nov. 26 and Nov. 27 and said he would do the same as other defendants came before him.

Klan Restrictions

MONROE, N. C. (AP)—In a crackdown obviously aimed at the Ku Klux Klan, Monroe's city council last night passed an ordinance prohibiting parades or caravans of three or more cars without police supervision.

The ordinance followed closely upon last Friday night's parade by robed Klansmen. Police have denied reports that Klansmen and a group of Negroes exchanged gunfire near the home of Dr. A. F. Perry, vice president of the NAACP chapter.

Moons Harmless

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of Defense Wilson said today you can stop worrying about Russia or anyone else launching a weapon from an earth satellite.

Wilson, retiring from office tomorrow, brought up the matter at a sidewalk news conference today in discussing launching of the "baby moon" by the Soviet Union.

"Nobody," Wilson said, "is going to drop anything down on you from a satellite while you are asleep, so don't worry about it."

Then he went on to say that any weapon launched from a satellite "would burn up before it could reach you."

That was an allusion to the terrific heat which friction would generate as such a weapon approached the heavier atmosphere of the earth.

UP Meeting Rescheduled

Due to the activity of the "flu-bug", the University Party meeting scheduled for last night has been tentatively re-scheduled for Tuesday night of next week, according to party officials.

Harry Braxton, University Party Chairman is undergoing a bout with Asiatic flu. Since this is the first party meeting this year, officers thought it unwise to attempt a meeting in his absence.

Plans for the next meeting include a guest speaker to address the group. Following the meeting refreshments will be served.

All members of the student body interested in joining the University party are urged to attend this meeting, according to party officers.

Listeners Say 'Beep' Quit

By The Associated Press

Listening posts in some parts of the world have reported the Soviet Satellite has quit beeping, but U. S. Navy scientist said they were still getting the radio signals.

Changes in the eerie voice of Sputnik, as the Russians call their man-made moon, led to widespread scientific speculation.

Dr. Hans Karl Paetzold, a leading German scientist, said the speeding sphere appeared to be losing altitude and might strike the earth's denser atmosphere within hours and burn up.

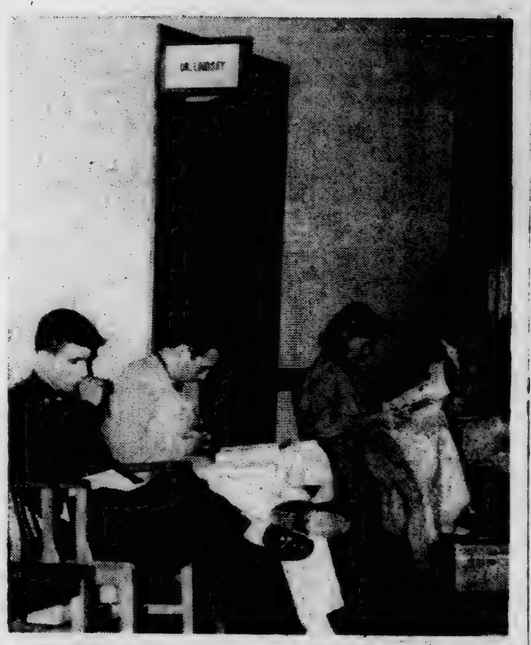
Reporting from the Max Planck Scientific Institute at Ravensburg, Germany, Paetzold theorized the satellite may already have encountered denser air and friction severe enough to destroy its radio transmitters. He said the radio signals were not heard in Germany today.

Scientific opinion here appeared to discount any theory that the high flying career of the red globe may be drawing to an end. U. S. tracking stations continued their efforts to fix the orbit of the satellite, and an attempt to photograph it will be made from Harvard, Mass., tomorrow. The Russians have said they expect their moonlet to stay up a month.

Russian reports now suggest that their moon carries several eyes and ears to explore secrets of Space and earth.

It would be radioing back in code what it learns.

Various Soviet reports indicate Sputnik is measuring temperatures in space, meteors, changes in magnetism, and perhaps cosmic rays.



Dr. Arthur H. Compton, former chancellor of Washington University and Nobel Prize winner for physics in 1927, had said at Colorado Springs that the Russian launching of a satellite did not surprise anyone associated with the International Geophysical Year.

He said it was the understanding as far back as 1955 that the Russians would lauch a satellite in the autumn of 1957 and that the United States would launch one in the spring of 1958.

Sen. Mansfield (D-Mont) has called on Congress to strip the seperate armed services of responsibility for developing misiles and satellites. He said a new super-organization should be created to do the job.

Mansfield joined other congressional Democrats in a growing chorus of complaints that rivalry among the services may have given Russia a priceless lead in reaching into space with deadly rocket and trailblazing baby moons.

The Montanan, assistant democratic leader of the senate, said in an interview that he understands hundreds of millions of dollars have been wasted on overlapping projects by the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Officials Search For Asia Virus

By MARY MOORE MASON

UNC infirmary officials are studying local cases of "respiratory infections" to determine if they are linked to Asiatic flu now sweeping across the United States.

Meanwhile, they awaited an order of Asiatic flu vaccine to be used in a broad program of inoculation if the feared epidemic spreads to the Carolina campus.

Dr. E. McG. Hedgpeth, university physician, Tuesday noted a "marked increase" in the incidence of "respiratory infections" on the UNC campus.

"However," he said, "we cannot say at the present time whether these illnesses represent the result of infection with the Asian influenza virus."

He said a study is now being carried out to determine "the specific virus which is causing these illnesses."

"This will take some time," he added.

The Dean of Students office said officials there are working closely with the infirmary and know what measures to take should an epidemic of the dread flu hit the campus.

As yet, there has been no confirmed report of such an epidemic here and medical officials flatly refuted rumors to that effect.

Dr. Hedgpeth said the current situation does not justify "unnecessary alarm or concern on the part of the university community."

"I do feel, however, that it is my responsibility to call it to your attention and to urge each and everyone of you to take as good care of yourself as you possibly can during this period," he said.

Dr. Hedgpeth urged students who feel they need medical attention to visit the infirmary through the day since "it is extremely difficult to handle properly large numbers of patients in the evening."

He said that while many infections now being treated through the infirmary are "common colds," a "good percentage of them represents an influenza-like illness."

Any "significant developments" will be reported promptly to students," he added.

Les Petites Musicales To Open Sunday Night

Balladeer Herbert Shellans will open Les Petites Musicales' fall season this Sunday night with a program of folk songs.

The initial GMAB-sponsored program will be held in Graham Memorial's main lounge at 8 p.m.

A graduate of Brooklyn College, Shellans has been in the South since 1956 studying anthropology and folklore. During a two-year stint with the Army, he sang for army audiences and appeared on ballad and folk song programs over WFIL-TV in Philadelphia.

Since coming to North Carolina in the summer of 1956, Shellans has spent a good bit of time appearing on several public programs and collecting folk songs with a tape recorder in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Now a resident of Chapel Hill, he is the Chairman of Folk Music, junior division, of the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs.

The ballad singer's program will feature a variety of English and American ballads, including "Single Girl, Married Girl," a song found in the Blue Ridge Mountains, "Goin' Down the Road," "Lass from the Low Country," an Anglo - American ballad, "Midnight Special, "an American prison song, and an old English ballad, "Waly, Waly."

Future programs in Les Petites Musicales' series will feature Dr. Frank Hooper, harpsichordist, on Oct. 27, Cara Kelson, pianist, Nov. 17, and a cello, harpsichord and flute trio appearing Nov. 24.

First Meeting Of IDC Today

The first meeting of the Inter dormitory Council will be held tonight at 7 p.m. in Phi Hall. Tom Walters, IDC president said the most important business of the night will be the preliminaries to selecting members for the various committees of the organization.

Members will be asked to fill out interest cards to enable Walters to select members for the various committees. Committees in the IDC are: social committee dormitory committe, publicity intramurals, contests and the committee that is in charge of the vending machines on campus.

Frank Brown, IDC Court chairman, will outline the new ID Court policy. Walters said the IDC is being compelled to enforce rules more strictly this year in order to enable students to continue governing the dorms.

President Walters said he believes the new members are competent and that they have already shown much interest in IDC affairs. He said, "IDC itself is no stronger and can do no more work than does the individual member. The organization is constructed on an inverted pyramid and depends entirely on individ-

Polish Air Is Pregnant

Propaganda Presses Pound

"And I honor the man who is willing to sink
"Half his present repute for the freedom to think,
"And when he thought, be his cause strong or weak,
"Will risk t'other half for the freedom to speak."
—James Russell Lowell

Many condemning words have been spoken concerning the Soviet Union's lead in the satellite mad-cap race.

It is a definite advantage in the cold propagandistic war currently being waged between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

But another somewhat unheralded development has, in the opinion of thinking people, negated this Communistic advantage . . . It is the riots in Warsaw. And it may be a repeat performance of last year's bloody study in ignomy . . . yet a tribute to the courage of free thinking men everywhere . . . The Hungarian Revolt.

The Polish disturbances were initiated last Thursday when "club-wielding" police smashed an "ordinary" student demonstration against a ban on the student newspaper—Po Prostu—for its criticism of Communist party Head Henchman Wladyslaw Gomulka's royalistic regime.

The air is pregnant in Poland. Revolt is everywhere.

The effervescent minds of free-thinking men are spining forth. Two words are being furled from omnipresent banners:

"Wolnosc Slowa" (Free Speech)

It appears that such epitomizing examples of Communist tyranny and suppression are more than equallizing factors in the present cold war.

We endorse the condemnation of the present golf and convalescent-tainted administration's procrastination in the satellite race issued by Sn. Symington of Missouri.

But we feel that the reverberrations from Poland and Hungary are a negating factor.

Democracy still appears more inviting than Communist tyranny, we contend.

But there is no room for complacency.

It is foolish for the U. S. to preach disarmament and bare its flanks if the Russians are sharpening their pen knives behind our backs.

One quick thrust from Russia's atomic pen-knife would sever the U. S.'s jugular vein, and Democracy would flow out profusely and paralyzingly.

Yet the examples of Hungary and the now-pregnant Poland still stand as deterrents to those nations who are on the Communist-endorsement brink . . .

Dictatorships are self-annihilating . . .

Myopia In The Infirmary:

& The Flu Fly Flies Fast

In the words of University Physician Hedgpeth:

"There is at the present time a rather marked increase in the incidence of respiratory infections on our campus."

But Dr. Hedgpeth added this consolation:

"We cannot say at the present time whether these illnesses represent th result of infection with the Asian influenza virus . . . I do not feel that this represents a situation which justifies at the present time unnecessary alarm or concern."

The Asiatic flu bug is definitely upon us.

And we must feel more concern than Dr. Hedgpeth, who we realize was speaking in subdued tones to prevent panic.

His information is, of course, greatly appreciated. And, according to one infirmary patient, the student service, under extremely crowded conditions, is "terrific."

But preparation should be made immediately to facilitate the additional patient load. Students are reportedly being turned away unless their fever exceeds 101 degrees.

And the University should take steps to suspend classes, if the semi-epidemic continues to spread.

Dr. Hedgpeth has said that no rush order of flu serum has been received. He said he felt it unnecessary since the flue bug had not been definitely analyzed and isolated.

More foresight must be injected into the infirmary's programming if an overall epidemic is to be prevented.

Preparation must be made to prevent spread of this unwelcome visitor . . . immediately.

This is no time for myopia.

Cut-Away & Queen Lizzie

It is reputed that a group of Carolina gentelmen are planning to present an award of sorts to the good Queen Elizabeth during the Maryland game festivities at College Park.

And it is also reputed that said gentlemen will be attired in formal cut-away garments.

We would like to offer our endorsement of the idea. Our English-speaking, western mother should carry back an excellent opinion of her fair southern offspring . . . the flower and home of Dixie hospitality . . . to the motherland.

Plans for the presentation should be promulgated with haste . . . before the namesake of Mrs. Charles I. crowder of the Mason-Dixon Line, incubates some proposal . . .

ODES ON MUSIC:

Loin Cloth & Popular Tunes: Similarity?

Grayson Mills

A nondescript jazz expert theorized recently that popular music, having begun with heavy influences of African tonalities, is definitely swinging back toward its mother music.

To cite his cause he played Bo Diddley's all-time rhythm and blues smash, "Bo Diddley," and then spun recordings of present day Ugandans in tribal revelry. Indeed, the similarity was amazing.

Certainly contemporary jazz still bears the basic roots of its forefather blues, but I doubt seriously if its high-brow quality will ultimately swing to loin-cloth code. But then anything cna happen in music," and usually does."

When the expert gave further examples by playing some of Stan Kenton's Afro-Cuban stuff, his interviewer was nearly convinced though a skeptical California audience failed to be moved. Still, it's something to think about . . .

★ ★ ★

With Rowe, musical columnist for The Richmond Times - Dispatch, got a nasty letter from an irtae reader Sunday, who apparently didn't care for his commentary on Brubeck's new junior college album.

Rowe had remarked earlier in the week on the amazing closeness to which Dave stuck in the melody of W. C. Handy's classic "St. Louis Blues," asserting that not even the master of distant interpolation could improve on something as great as Handy's blues.

The reader wrote in true Jonathan Yardley fashion, "Your description of Brubeck's music was a gross misinterpretation . . . you are living in the past. Dixieland is deteriorating and modern progressive jazz is the coming thing. I really should ignore you and your lousy comments, but sometimes you burn me up."

The continued popularity of Gene Krupa, over the past 25 years, became easier than ever to fathom after reviewing his latest release, "The Jazz Rhythms of Gene Krupa," on Norman Granz' Verve label.

The album, a radical change for the better after some of his recent insipid renovations of old favorites, showcases the never-ending ability of this all-time great to keep abreast of the times.

Surrounded by his popular trio of Bobby Scott on piano, Eddie Shu on tenor, and Britain's John Drew on bass, Gene swings through Tenderly, TeePee, S'Wonderful, Hipdeebip, Krupa's Wail, Strike Up the Band, Undecided and Gene's Bass Blues.

Starting out miserably on Tenderly, the boys really dig in on TeePee and don't stop until the final bar of the Bass Blues.

Eddie Shu apexes the album with some wonderful thinking on Undecided, and the Wail is probably the longest Krupa solo on record.

"What Are You Going To Do About It, Chum?"

EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW:

Lonely In The Athletic Crowd: History Squad Achievement

Everyone knows about the astonishing upset pulled off by Jim Tatum's boys last Saturday. Not so many people know about the equally astonishing upset pulled off by The History Squad when last week they set a new national record for the number of footnotes garnered in a seven-day period. We know that all Tarheels will get renewed inspiration from the following question-answer interview with Coach Fletcher "Fickle Fletch" Green.

Q—Fickle Fletch, do you feel that your boys have finally arrived, that this upset of last week marks the turning point?

A—Well, (chuckle) I don't know whether we've "arrived" or not. But we're not "leaving," I'll assure you of that.

Q—That last reference is to the team?

A—No, its' a reference to me. After last week's great victory, I've got a new contract. I'm now making almost half as much as Jim Tatum.

Q—Congratulations, Fickle Fletch. I'm sure all of your many fans throughout the state will be thrilled by your good fortune. Now, about last week. Do you feel that "breaks" played a part in this new national record for footnotes which your boys set?

A—Well, (chuckle) I always say that a good team makes its own breaks. For example—when Jim Dorman's ball point pen ran out of ink it looked as though we were through. But Dorman used his head, he didn't panic. He raced to Doug Steeple's carrel, and Steeple had an extra pencil. A lot of the librarians thought this was "a lucky break." Actually, it was fast thinking on Dorman's part, and solid preparation on Steeple's part.

Q—Fickle Fletch, what are some of the other factors involved in this new national record for footnotes?,

A—Well, (chuckle) there are really so many factors ipvolved in a team victory like this that I sort of hate to try and list them. There's a whole new policy around here these days. We now have a special dorm for the history squad, and a good training table which serves lots of beer and pretzels, and other men on the faculty such as Jim Tatum have thoughtfully scheduled their classes so as to give our boys the maximum amount of time in the library.

Q—What about the alumni?

A—Yes, the alumni (chuckle). Just the other day a well-heeled Tarheel gave me a thousand dollars and told me to go out and buy the best history squad in the country. Well, you know inflation has set in, and you can't buy a squad with that kind of money. But I did get one good boy. He was ticketed for Harvard and I (chuckle) stole him right from under Crane Briton's nose.

Q—And the other students? Do you feel there has been a revival of campus spirit?

A—Yes, of course, and it's been crucially important. When our boys were desperately fighting the clock, in the very bowels of the library, trying frantically to get those last few footnotes that would nail down the national record—it was an inspiration for them when they heard those thousands of students yell: "Don't gloat; Grab 'um footnote." And so, with renewed vigor, they got those last few footnotes and then ran out the clock for a magnificent victory.

Q—Thank you very much, Figkle Fletch. Do you have any last words?

A—Yes, we are now embarked on a new era in UNC Historiography. I can't begin to tell you how important Home Security's Family Plan life insurance is. My kids think it's great and yours will too.

Q—But I don't have any kids.

A—Don't bother me with your problems. I have to get back to my squad.

Historic Meeting Gets No Fanfare

EDITOR:

On Tuesday morning, Oct. 1, 1957 at 11 o'clock a rather historic meeting took place in South Building. It happened very quietly, with no fanfare, no build-up.

Behind the desk sat a young man with coal black hair and a face that looked as if it might have been hewn out of something stronger than human flesh, except when he smiled. Around him sat the department heads of the University, quiet, business-like, friendly.

And then four people entered the room who had never been there before in the history of the University for such a purpose. They had come at the invitation of the man behind the desk, Chancellor William B. Aycock. And then, the historic meeting began.

What transpired there is recorded in the minutes of the meeting and this information will be made known to all on the pages of this paper. This open letter is written as a commentary to reveal an impression of the occasion.

The most important aspect of the incident is that the meeting had been called in the first place. The far-reaching effect of the conference will not be felt until later, but its present importance is its actual occurrence.

If nothing had been engaged in except polite introductions, the meeting would not have lost anything in the way of significance for the moment.

The four who entered the room last were students who had been invited by the chancellor and his aides to take part in the discussion and planning for the present and future welfare of the University. Never before, in the history of the University, has the administration invited students to help them plan for a future and a growth.

An unprecedented move had been made, and a movement begun which will add a great deal to student-faculty-administration relations, which will mean that the administration is constantly aware of the student viewpoint in their preparation for a larger and better University.

And it will mean that the student body will have a voice in the making of decisions which directly affect their lives, and the lives of their children 20 years from now.

It is important, I believe, for each student to acquaint himself with the importance and significance and activity of this new Chancellor's Cabinet. It is equally important for all of us to realize what a thorough, capable, and dedicated man Chancellor Aycock is.

It is already apparent that he is fully capable of becoming the legend that Robert Burton House has become. It took an unusual man to fill the shoes that House left here, and if Aycock doesn't fill them in time, a great many people will be quite surprised.

I urge all of you to follow the activities of this Cabinet, to make your opinions known to the President of the Student Body, and to look beyond with Chancellor Aycock to a truly greater University. He has a dream, and vision, which with our help, will be realized.

EDITOR:

When The Daily Tar Heel resorts to publishing material such as Mr. Crowther's article, one would be led to believe that your staff was having a great difficulty collecting material, however; it is hard to rationalize this when one considers the many activities which take place on the campus.

Until Thursday we had followed your columns with interest. What has happened? It is hard for students to understand why a school paper would publish such trash.

Mr. Crowther, you stated that your mind was distorted by morphine; oh, no I believe you used the word "effected," when your illicit experience took place. We wonder if your mind was not distorted when you wrote your "Farewell."

EDITOR:

May I say, first, how enjoyable it is to read The Daily Tar Heel . . . Adlai can seat . . . an interesting, dynamic and personable paper.

But on to business . . .

Below is a little squib appearing in the editorial column of this week's Colgate MAROON. It sums up . . . precisely . . . what we feel: to the people of the South—we sympathize; to Faubus—we spit.

ALMOST

Little Rock,
Reluctantly, bravely, lawfully,
Painfully on the verge of a Start.
Then,
Hate ——— long festered,

Defamed, disgraced, by those dependably despicable.

Student Legislature Exams Slated Tonight

The exam for candidate-delegates to the 22nd Annual North Carolina State Student Legislature will be given tonight at 9 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges Nos. 1 and 2 of Graham Memorial.

The exam will include questions on parliamentary procedure and current events. Following the quiz interviews will be arranged to determine the delegates.

All UNC students are eligible to serve as delegates to the legislature, and anyone interested in student government has been invited by officials to attend the meeting tonight.

The State Student Legislature, which will convene in Raleigh, Nov. 7-9, is the most famous student legislature in the nation, according to UNC legislative officials, in that it has been functioning over such a long period of time.

If offers an opportunity for students from all over North Carolina to meet and debate and draft bills of student and national interest.

Last year UNC won the trophy for the best bills presented in the legislature.

The legislature will probably be televised by several North Carolina television stations. NBC's Monitor as well as reporters from Life and Look magazines are expected to be on hand to cover the meeting.

Anyone interested in attending the student legislatture as a delegate but unable to attend Wednesday's meeting should contact Tom Long at 8-9108.

UNC Going 'All Out' For Aycock Tribute

By ANN FRYE

The University is going all out in paying tribute to William B. Aycock when he is installed as chancellor this Saturday in Kenan Stadium.

Activities honoring Chancellor Aycock will get under way Friday night at a reception for Chancellor and Mrs. Aycock in Woollen Gymnasium. President and Mrs. William Friday will be in the receiving line along with the chancellor and his wife.

A number of exhibits during installation day, Oct. 12, will be found at various places on the campus.

The Law School, of which Chan- of the University of North Carolina, including Chancellor Aycock.

At the offices of the University Press will be an exhibit of the publication of Dr. Blackwell Robinson's book on the founder of cellor Aycock was formerly dean, will have a display of the chancellor's legal writings.

The library will be exhibiting selections from the Preston Davie collection of early Americans (rare manuscripts and books), in addition to portraits and materials on past presidents and chancellors UNC, "William R. Davie." Dr. Robinson is a former member of the UNC faculty and is currently with the Woman's College Department of History.

The Morehead Planetarium will hold two special showings of the Oct. 12 presentation at 2 and 4 p.m.

After the installation ceremonies at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, a luncheon for out-of-town guests will be held in Lenoir Hall beginning around 1 p.m.

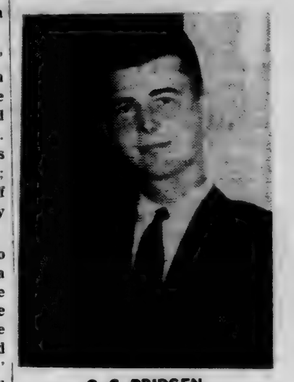
Carolina students will serve as hosts and hostesses at the exhibits and luncheon. Student government representatives will introduce faculty members to Chancellor and Mrs. Aycock, President and Mrs. Friday at the Friday night reception.

GMAB's Sound & Fury Is Headed By Pridgen

The spotlight is on G. C. Pridgen, both literally and figuratively, for he is the chairman of the Graham Memorial "Sound and Fury" committee.

"Sound and Fury," as any old student will tell you, is the UNC musical and its presentation is one of the high points of the Carolina year.

Last year "Sound and Fury" presented "Thieves Holiday," a rollicking musical built around the theft of the fabulous Pizpur diamond during Mardi Gras in New Orleans. The audience met such personalities as Marina, an exotic diamond thief; Joey Puccini, a witty proprietor of the Green Door bar; and three gay college students.



The script this year, according to Pridgen, was written by a Carolina student and a professor and the production has been planned for the spring. This will allow more time for work on casting and sets and chorus than if "Sound and Fury" attempted also to have a musical in the fall.

Pridgen is working on forming a committe for the production, and there are still vacancies.

This is an excellent opportunity for all you amateur Sarah Bernharts and Cecil B. Demilles," he said, "for "Sound and Fury" is an organization of students who love the theater and want to write, produce, direct, star in and do other work themselves on a musical.

"As anyone will tell you who saw the musical last year, you don't have to have a wonderful voice or be the most wonderful actor or actress to be in our production. You can always have fun being one of the cast of thousands in the third act."

If you are interested in working with "Sound and Fury" look for G. C. Pridgen around the campus.

Cheek Gives Scouting Report On Miami

A team with a pretty good running attack and an excellent defense. That's the way assistant coach Emmett Cheek describes the Miami Hurricanes, Carolina's next opponent.

Speaking at Jim Tatum's' weekly press conference yesterday, Cheek told sportswriters that he had been impressed with what he saw when the Hurricanes defeated a strong Baylor team, 13-7 this weekend.

"Of course," Cheek commented, "I didn't see Miami in its opener against Houston three weeks ago, but the Hurricanes looked good against Baylor." Miami lost, 7-0 to Houston in its only other game this season.

Expounding upon some of Miami's' stronger points, Cheek stated that its defense looked especially good in holding Baylor to only 17 yards rushing. "Offensively," he said, "they did a fine job of running, especially on the outside."

Hurricanes Have Completed Only One Pass

Although Cheek feels that Miami's first and second units are about even in ability, he indicated that the man to watch is senior halfback John Varone. Varone gained 131 yards in 17 carries against Baylor and scored both Miami touchdowns on the "outside belly" play.

Apparently the Hurricanes don't have much passing attack because they have only completed one toss in two games. According to Cheek, they called only five or six pass plays in the Baylor game and these were option plays.

How does Miami compare with Navy? "Miami doesn't have as many offensive plays," Cheek stated, "and that means they probably won't make as many mistakes as Navy made."

Defensively, Cheek feels that Miami is much the stronger of the two. He seemed to feel that passing is the only department in which Navy holds the edge.

Cheek mentioned quarterback Fran Curci as a very smooth operating quarterback and called his understudy Maury Guttman a very capable replacement. Halfback Joe Plevel and fullback Bill Sandee round out the Miami backfield.

Tatum Still Not Making Predictions

What does the coach of the nation's number 18 ranked team (AP) think about the whole situation?

"I'm still not making any predictions," said Jim Tatum. "We've known all along that this club had the potential. The Navy game was very satisfying to us and the mental attitude of the team has improved with every game. The boys have a lot more confidence now than they did in our opener against State."

Tatum admitted that "we got a lot of good breaks against Navy, but I'm like the golfer who made a hole-in-one and said, I know I was lucky but that's' just what I was trying to do."

Was Navy the team that he felt it would be before the game? "Well," Tatum stated. "I certainly didn't think they'd stop themselves as much as they did. They fumbled some and we intercepted five passes."

Navy Defense Was Better Than Expected

"Defensively," Tatum continued, "Navy was better than I had anticipated. Actually, the Tar Heels seemingly had little trouble in moving the ball against the Navy defense. They picked up 181 yards against 172 for the Midshipmen.

Tatum did not know that his ball club had received the number 18 ranking. When informed, he said, "Miami will still probably be favored, where are they ranked?"

He was told that the Hurricanes were not even listed in the top 20. The Tar Heel coach was quite surprised. "Well," its kind of hard to tell about these polls." It was evident that Tatum is not an advocate of the polling system.

We've Got To Break Their Defense—Tatum

Sunny Jim feels that his team has a good chance against Miami. "if we're able to open up their defense. I've always said that defense is what wins ball games and we'll have to get through them to win."

Tatum was asked if he thought the heat or the lights at Miami will hurt his club. To this he replied: "I don't believe it will be as hot down there as it was here against State, especially since we're playing Friday night. As for the lights, I'm not worried about it, although we haven't played at night before. We might practice Thursday night in the Orange Bowl (that's where the game will be played), but it won't be to get adjusted to the lights."

The Tar Heel mentor has a very impressive record against Miami. While he was coaching at Maryland, his Terps won six of seven games with the Hurricanes. Carolina has played Miami only twice in history and the Tar Heels hold a perfect record.

Booters Drop 4-3 Decision To Lynchburg

Thompson Gets All 3 UNC Points

LYNCHBURG, Va.—Three goals by Carolina's Mike Thompson was not enough to thwart a strong Lynchburg team here yesterday as the Tar Heels went down to a 4-3 defeat at the hands of the Hornets.

It was sweet revenge for the Hornets, who dropped a 5-0 decision to the Chapel Hillians last season. A crowd of about 200 fans and several Lynchburg cheerleaders were on hand for the battle.

The Tar Heels were playing without the services of three first-stringers. Right fullback Pete Killenger had to miss the trip because of an exam, right halfback Dave Corkety was sick and last year's top scorer, Coleman Barks was injured.

The Hornets jumped off to a 1-0 lead in the first quarter on a goal by Don Martin. Shortly after the second quarter began, Martin was good for another goal to give Lynchburg a 2-0 lead. Helmut Wernon thea made it 3-0 in favor of the Hornets, but Thompson kept the Tar Heels from going scoreless in the first half with a goal toward the end of the second period on a penalty kick.

In the second half, Werner came through with the fourth and final tally for the home team. After that, Thompson tired desperately to put the Tar Heels back in the contest, getting one goal on a pass from left wing, Rick Grausman. Thompson made it 4-3 in the third quarter with another penalty kick but from there out the two teams battled to a deadlock and the Tar Heels had suffered their first defeat of the season.

Carolina's soccer record now stands at 1-1. The booters defeated Roanoke College in Chapel Hill last week.

Tag Football Underway

Intramural tag football play has begun this week with a full schedule. This year the Department of Intramural Activities is proud to announce that there are 54 teams participating: seven graduate and professional teams; 21 dormitory teams; and 26 fraternity teams.

Play will be conducted in a round-robin series and the league leaders of each division will compete in a division tournament for the division championship. The champions of each division will then compete for the all-campus championship.

With the increased emphasis on intramural sports, the games should be high in spirit and competition.

There are 228 acres in the grounds of the N. C. State Fair.

Carolina Plays St. Louis In Classic Opener

RALEIGH, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Pairings for the ninth annual Dixie Classic Basketball Tournament, to be played in Reynolds Coliseum Dec. 26-28, were drawn today.

As a result of the draw, Wake Forest will be matched against Duquense in the tourney's opening game at 2 p.m. on Dec. 26.

North Carolina State College will meet Northwestern at 4 p.m., the University of North Carolina plays the University of St. Louis at 7:30 p.m., and Duke tackles Seton Hall at 9:30 p.m.

The Classic, which pits North Carolina's big four teams against out-of-state foes, has developed into one of the nation's top basketball tournaments. Last year, the three-day meet drew crowds totaling 71,200.

During the tourney's eight-year history, the Tar Heel teams have not been kind to their out-of-state guests since they have never permitted the title to leave the state. North Carolina State has been the tourney champion six times, Duke has won it once and Carolina has taken the title once.

Carolina's national champions were last year's Classic champs and likely will be favored to stage a repeat act this year.

The pairings were drawn in the office of State College Athletic Director Roy Clogston. Those attending included State's Coach Everett Case, Carolina's coach Frank McGuire, Duke's coach Hal Bradley, and Wake Forest's Asst. Athletic Director Murray Greason.

Brooklyn Dodgers Will Move To Los Angeles

NEW YORK (AP)—The Brooklyn Dodgers will move to Los Angeles in 1958, president Walter O'Malley announced today.

The official announcement was made by Arthur (Red) Patterson, assistant general manager, for O'Malley.

The long-expected announcement was made at a press conference held in the World Series headquarters at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel. It came just one day after the Los Angeles city council, by a 10-4 vote, approved the proposed contract between the city and the baseball club.

Harrier Coach Happy With Team In Opener

By RUSTY HAMMOND

After beating Clemson 25-32 in their season lid-lifter yesterday, the Carolina cross-country team got busy preparing for their next meet, which will be held at Virginia next Saturday, Oct. 12.

Coach Dale Ranson was high in his praise of the way his team performed against the Tigers. The squad is in high spirits and hungry for another victory.

In an interview yesterday, Coach Ranson said, the most pleasing thing about the meet to me was the overall performance of the eight boys who competed. They all ran like champions. They looked unusually good for a season opener; everyone on the team was in good physical shape."

"Captain Everette Whatley (3rd), Dave Scurlock (6th), and Cowles Liipfert (7th) all showed up very well. We all knew that Wayne Bishop would be our number 1 boy. (Bishop ran first yesterday and set a track record at Clemson, slicing 38 seconds off of the old mark with a time of 19:56. The old record was 20:32.

He is the boy we are counting on heavily to fill Jim Beatty's shoes. Of course, it is exceedingly hard for anyone to equal Beatty's performances but I will say that Wayne Bishop will be a hard man to beat in our league."

Ranson said that the weather was as good as could be expected and no injuries were sustained yesterday. He did add however, that most of the boys on the team have bad colds which may have affected their running somewhat.

Although the harriers will journey to face the Caveliers of Virginia in very high spirits, they won't have a picnic and they know it. Virginia has some good boys and figures to be tough.

Key Players Might Miss Series Today

NEW YORK, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Mickey Mantle and Red Schoendienst probably will be out of action tomorrow when the World Series resumes at Yankee Stadium with Milwaukee's Bob Buhl trying for the clincher against the New York Yankees' Bob Turley. The Braves hold a 3-2 edge going into the sixth game.

Mantle, crippled Yankee center fielder who hurt his shoulder in Saturday's game, appeared at the stadium for diathermy treatment after X-rays proved negative. It was reported he couldn't raise his right arm. Barring an unexpected change, he won't be able to swing a bat or make a throw.

Schoendienst, who pulled a groin muscle in yesterday's thriller at Milwaukee, still was hobbled. Normally it takes several days for such an injury to heal.

Neither Manager Casey Stengel of the Yankees nor Fred Haney of the Braves would say positively that the two men won't play. Stengel was hoping against hope that another day's rest would make the difference in Mantle.

If Mantle can't make it, rookie Tony Kubek probably will be in center field again. Schoendienst's replacement at second base, would be Felix Mantilla, the Puerto Rican who did such a fine job filling in yesterday.

This will be the second time Buhl and Turley, a pair of fast ball pitchers, have been the opposing pitchers. They started the Saturday game at Milwaukee, won by the Yanks 12-3. Buhl failed to survive the first and Turley was taken out in the second inning.

The first time the Yanks saw the 29-year-old Buhl they chased him in two thirds of an inning. He gave up a homer to Tony Kubek and a single to Harry Simpson. The 18-game winner also walked two and threw wild on an attempted pickoff play during his brief stay. It was on that pickoff throw, incidentally, that Mantle suffered his shoulder injury when Schoendienst fell on him and pinned him to the ground.

No company selects a man on an "either-or" basis in regard to grades versus extracurricular activities, Caine said, "for both are important. Grades indicate the application of a man's intelligence, while participation in activities shows general leadership qualities and a sense of responsibility to his alma mater."

The pattern of a student's grades is indicative, Caine pointed out. "A student's overall four-year average may be low because of poor marks during his first year or two, but if his grades have continued to improve as graduation nears, the improvement indicates maturity and application of intelligence to the principal task of going to college, which is scholarship."

Work experience, ability to express himself both orally and written, and pleasing personality and appearance are other important employment factors, he pointed out.

Caine cautioned students who face military service after graduation that they should not skip interviews with job recruiters. Although they may not receive definite employment at he time, he said, they will make valuable contacts.

"Limiting the geographic areas in which he will accept employment may mean that a man limits his job opportunity," Caine noted. "It would be pointless for many large, national companies to interview a prospective graduate who does not intend to leave his state or region.

Caine concluded that "companies are interested most in finding 'good men.' Rather than seeking specific technical knowledge, we look for achievement in what the individual has studied during his college career."

Student Solons Schedule Meet

The Student Legislature will have its initial meeting tonight in Phi Hall on the top floor of New East, Speaker Don Furtade announced yesterday.

The most important piece of old business coming before the legislature concerns the approval of Student Body President Evans' appointments for the High School Honor Council Commission.

At the last meeting in the spring the legislature returned Evans' appointments for further consideration.

No other major old busines will be discussed, according to Speaker Furtade.

He said that there would be "quite a bit of new business' as both the Student Party and the University Party are expected to intreduce bills.

Di Debate Nullified

The Dialectic Senate critically examined its own attendance last night and found—after 90 minutes of debate—that all action was nullified due to lack of a quorum.

A roll call after passage of a bill restricting the membership and powers of organized labor put a cold "all-for-nothing" on the hour and a half-long debate.

The bill was introduced by Senator Pat Adams. After his introduction of the night's legislation, he spoke affirmatively on its contents, stating: "The growth of organized labor has gotten out of hand.

"The government hesitates to curb its powers. Through its rapid growth we have unfortunately been led to corruption. I need only to point to the records of John L. Lewis, James Hoffa, Dave Beck and many others in positions of leadership in labor unions today.

"Labor is a vicious cycle. As prices go up the workers demand higher wages. Something must be done to limit not only the powers of labor, but also the size of its membership."

Senator Erwin Avery was the chief opponent of the bill. His main arguments includes: "I fail to see where the size and powers of big business are curbed either. The workers of America must organize to protect their common interests.

"I maintain that collective bargaining between union and management is democratic. I fail to see how Senator Adams can call all unions corrupt due to the actions of a few."

An amendment was attached to the bill stating: "A federal right to work statute shall be enacted to protect the economic rights of the independent worker who does not wish to join a union."

The vote passing the measure was by a wide margin, but lacking a quorum, was stricken from the record.

Moon Loses Height But Still Beeps

Washington, Oct. 9 (AP-Sputnik Sped around the world on a steady course today, speaking to earth-bound scientists with a strong new radio voice.

The Soviet satellite was estimated by the Naval Research Laboratory here to be circling the globe once in every 96.1 minutes at an average altitude of about 400 miles.

Some observers believe the man made moon is slowing down and descending toward a fiery finish in the friction of denser atmosphere, but a spokesman for the naval laboratory said:

"Our figures just don't support this."

The satellite's radio signals died out mysteriously last night, but they came back after a six-hour period and the navy scientists reported they were strong and clear on one pass over Washington today.

Instead of the original beep-beep, however, they were now getting more of a steady signal.

As the satellite rocketed through its fifth day in the heavens, president Eisenhower discussed the Russian achievement for the first time. He made these points at a news conference:

1. The successful launching of the satellite has not increased his concern about national security by one iota.

2. The United States could have put a satellite in orbit before now but to the detriment of other scientific goals and military progress in the long-range missile field.

3. After tests in December, the United States plans to fire "A fully instrumented satellite vehicle" in March of 1958.

4. This country was never in a race with Russia to get the first satellite into orbit.

The Vienna, Austria, Observatory agreed today with the U.S. naval scientists that the Russia sphere was still in its original orbit and going strong. Further confirmation came from Dr. John P. Ragen, director of Operation vanguard, the U.S. satellite project.

"Our observations do not lead us to believe the U.S.S.R. satellite is falling into the lower atmosphere," Hagen said.

A leading British astronomer, Prof. A. C. Lovell, said in London the satellite may be smashed to pieces tonight by debris form the comet Glacobini- Zinner.

Phi Society Defeats Judicial Review Bill

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Assembly of the Philanthropic Literary Society Tuesday night defeated a resolution which would take away the right of judicial review from the Supreme Court by a vote of 11-2.

In introducing the bill Representative Paul Carr termed the Supreme Court as "nine old senile men." He argued against the power of the Court and its decisions which were not answerable to the electorate.

Conditional Representative Clarence Simpson said the bill "was undermining a great institution in our government." He pointed out that members of the Supreme Court could be impeached.

Conditional Representative Bill Lineberry said the "assets were greater than the liabilities."

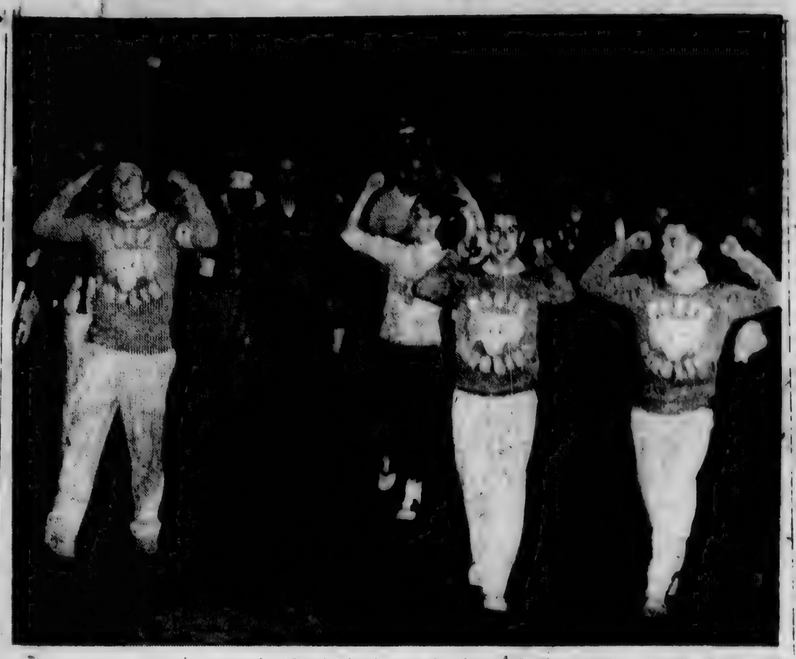
It is "the best thing the United States has judging the constitution," said Conditional Representative Olaguibeet Lopez-Vera.

Guest Stan Black argued that the bill would put the Supreme Court at "the will of various special interest groups."

Representative Jess Stribling compared the Supreme Court to the Central Committee of the Communist Party. He wanted to "place the government in the hands of the people."

"The issue is basically is our Supreme Court going to be directly responsible to the people or is it not?" asked Representative David Matthews.

Representative Don Gray called the Court "one of the most hallowed checks" in the American governmental system. He said the victory of the resolution would lead to "anarchy."



Beatrice Cobb, owner and publisher of the Burke County News Herald, will speak to the Phi next week at the inauguration of the officers.

Spirited Crowd Attends 'Miami' Rally

IDC Meets Elects New Members

By DALE WHITFIELD

The second meeting of the Men's Interdormitory Council took place last night with President Tom Walters presiding.

Mike Hayes, IDC treasurer, reported the new policy for payment of bills through the IDC. To prevent purchases being made for the dormitories by unauthorized persons, cards were issued authorizing the bearer to confer debts against individual dormitory accounts.

Seven new members were elected for the IDC Court, the body which administers judicial justice for dormitory violations. These new members are: Robert Hass, Roger Foushee, Albert Miller, Jerry Baynes, Walt Poole, Avery Thomas and Bob Noble.

IDC Vice President Bob Carter announced that the administration has allotted each dormitory $50 for the year to be used for television maintenance. This money comes from the profits of the vending machines.

Carter also announced that a contract has been signed with a local television service for maintaining the sets in proper condition. The policy of allotting the dorms money for television repairs is for this year only and amounts to a total of $1,300.

A committee was appointed by President Walters to study the problem of traffic as it effects the dormitories. Members to this committee are: Cliff Mann, Foy Bradshaw, and Roger Foushee. They are to report their findings to the council with a statement as to how the problem can be solved.

The IDC also voted in its meeting last night to subsidize the dormitories in the buying of athletic shirts for intramural sports. It agreed to pay half the cost of up to 15 shirts per dorm.

The IDC will meet again next Wednesday night.

German Table To Be Formed

The first German Table will be held next Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. in one of the upstairs rooms of Lenior Hall, according to Dr. Ransom T. Taylor, assistant professor of German in the UNC Department of Germanic Languages.

Dr. Taylor has announced the German Table in an effort to bring all German speakers on campus together for a pleasant, relaxed lunch twice a week in Lenior Hall.

The purpose of the gathering is to speak German, Dr. Taylor said. "Beyond that it is hoped that a certain amount of mutually useful information will be exchanged, and that a good time will be had by all," he commented.

Acording to the latest available information, the University is host this year to six students of German, Swiss and Austrian nationality. One important function of the German Table will be to make these students welcome to the campus and country by bringing them in contact with Americans who are deeply and genuinely interested in their language, literature and culture.

"Perhaps we can in the process also tell them things about America which will make their stay wth us more worthwhile." Dr. Taylor concluded.

Tuesday and Thursday at 12:30 p. m. has been tentatively set as the time of meeting, but this can be changed to suit the convience of participants.

◆ "Maul Miami" was the theme of last night's spirited pep rally held on the eve of the departure of the Tar Heels for the far South.

The gathering started on the lane next to Emerson Field, featuring the cheerleaders, a segmant of the band, and 500 cheering Carolinians. There were many coeds among the crowd, something that had not been witnessed at earlier rallies.

Led by acting Head Cheerleader, Harold Williamson, the group moved its way across campus stopping at each dorm to collect new members and, to cheer.

The termination of the marching was Cobb Dorm, home of the team. There was quite a delay as the team assembled and the interim was filled with several courses of "Dixie" and in reference to the team a few rounds of "come out Big Blue-come out'

Buddy Payne, co-captain of the Tar Heels, was the first of the team members who spoke. He stated: "Speaking for the team I can tell you how very much we appreciate this wonderful spirit exhibited tonight.

"A showing like this makes a great deal of difference to the boys. The team has worked hard this week and we are both mentally and physically prepared.

"This game will be like a stepping stone for us. If we are fortunate enouhg to win, there is no telling where we will go or what we can do the rest of the season. Again, thinks for your support."

This tremendous mid-week rally was concluded by the singing of "Hark the Sound." To the delight of the crowd, a few of the more exuberant attendees, started chanting, "Raise hell Big Blue-raise hell."

Acting in the absence of Head Cheeerleader, Frank Black, Williamson had this to say to the Tar Heel: "I am extremely happy with this group. We had a good crowd and great spirit. They just seemed to come from nowhere."

Evans Urges Big Turnout

Student Body President Sonny Evans has urged all students to take part in the Saturday installation services for William B. Aycock as Chancellor of the University.

The occasion marks the first time in the history of UNC that a chancellor has been installed on the campus. Evans stated that all classes will be dismissed at 10:30 a.m., to be followed by the installation at 11 in Kenan Stadium.

Saturday will also mark the 164th year of the founding of the University.

Meeting For UNC

Dr. William M. Whyburn will represent UNC at a meeting of the American Council of Education on Oct. 10-11 in Washington, D. C.

Now vice president for graduate studies in research within the Consolidated University, Dr. Whyburn was formerly chairman of the Mathematics Department in the University at Chapel Hill.

Report On Lab Exams Is Awaited

By DALE WHITFIELD

Chapel Hill's health officer said today there is "probably" some Asiatic flu virus in this area although no confirmation of the dread disease has been reported.

Dr. David O. Garvin said medical men here should at least "go on that assumption" in observing numerous cases of respiratory infection which have overcrowded the UNC infirmary.

Officials said the infirmary is currently treating 250-300 students daily, but noted a drop Wednesday in the number of students treated and the seriousness of their conditions.

The local health officer said no vaccine is available for public administration through his office. But some private physicians here have received supppliea of the Asian flu vaccine, he said.

Dr. Garvin also noted "no alarming increase" in respiratory infections in the Orange County community, although numerous cases of the infections have been reported for UNC students.

Meanwhile, Dr. E. McG. Hedgpeth, university physician, said there still is no evidence that what he called "respiratory infections" here are linked to the Asian disease.

He said blood tests of students now in the infirmary with "respiratory infections" should be back from the laboratory early next week with a confirmation on nature of the infections.

Infirmary officials still were awaiting receipt of Asiatic flu vaccine to be used in a broad program of innoculation if the feared epidemic spreads across the Carolina campus.

Dr. Hedgpeth said Tuesday that the current situation does not justify "unnecessary alarm or concern on the part of the university community."

He added, however, that "a good percentage" of still unidentified respiratory ailments represents "an influenza-like illness."

Chapin Slated As Key Speaker

Dr. Chapin will speak at the medical and scientific session of the meeting at 2 p.m. on Oct. 20 at the Sir Walter Hotel.

THE AYCOCK STORY

New Chancellor Was Commended By Kashmir Affair Advisor

Editor's Note Following is the third in a series of articles which will comprise a three-page section to be published this week in "Popular Government." Written by Prof. Albert Coates of UNC, it relates to Chancellor Aycock, who will be officially installed here this weekend.)

They had seen William Aycock play his part in international affairs as Personal Assistant to Frank Graham, the United Nations Representative in critical peacemaking efforts in India and Pakistan.

They had not heard, and I will quote for them now, the letter of commendation to the Adjutant General of the United States Army from General Jacob L. Devers, who was military advisor in the India-Pakistan negotiations:

"1. During my work with Doctor Frank Graham in India and Pakistan and Kashmir this summer, I became acquainted with Lieutenant Colonel William B. Aycock, 0350118, who was called up from a Reserve status to serve as personal assistant to Doctor Graham for the four-month mission.

"He has now returned to his former Reserve status and is a civilian professor again at the Law School in Chapel Hill, North Carolin.

"2. Aycock is a young lawyer whose good judgment and common sense have already established his reputation in his specialty, without any testimonial for me, but it gives me a little personal satisfaction to commend him to you, if only for the record.

"3. I was impressed with his ability to go right to the core of any problem we were tackling out there, and to come up with the right recommendation sometimes in a matter of hours.

"His capacity for working eighteen hours a day, if pressed, with the heat well over 100 and the humidity in the 80's, was an inspiration to all of us . He was especially helpful to me, because he had been in combat during the war, and had a very realistic understanding of my particular phase of the mission.

"4. Better than anything else, however, I liked Aycock's great personal integrity. At times he disagreed completely with Doctor Graham's or my views, and he always had the honesty to say so. An officer with less principle would not have had his courage."

I will pass on to his home folks parts of a letter from Frank Graham the other day telling why he picked his as his "personal assistant" on this India-Pakistan mission and commenting on his performance in that mission;

"I met him in student organizations on the State College campus (William Aycock) at a time when the University administration was besieged on crucial fronts by strong movements coming from three directions at the same time, it was a Godsend to have such student leaders on the three campuses . . . His steadfastness and forthright stands in the face of pressures in stuations tough for a youth gave promise then of the leadership which is unfolding now.

"In the midst of the complex and stubborn differences between India and Pakistan over Kashmir, as personal assistant chosen by the United Nations Representative for tested qualities of character, mind and spirit, William Aycock again proved to be inexhaustible in energies, dynamic in personality, relentless in clear analysis, precise in his statement of issues, and original in his approaches to an old prbolem whose stubbornness could subdue neither his loyalty to the mission above all frustrations, nor his creative spirit triumphant over time and circumstances."

Now he had become the unanimous choice of the University Board of Trustees for Chancellor of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. And here were his friends and neighbors to recognize him as their own on the day they had named as William Brantley Aycock Day.

It did not occur to anyone in the gathering to speculate on whether one or any of these high moments in his record had been expected of him when he went out from his home town into what is commonly known as "the world."

The point is that he had done well enough at home as a boy to

Athletic Department & A Silent Dictatorship

It remains the constant hope of The Daily Tar Heel that the blindfolded Athltic Dept. will eventually allow students the privilege of knowing where their dollars are going.

Students pay tremendous sums to the athletic officials, but the student figurehead representatives on the Athletic Council are sworn to secrecy. And, in general, their hands are tied as far as relating vital statistics to the student body is concerned.

We're keeping our fingers crossed in hopes the Athletic Dept. dictatorship will soon be shattered . . . and student voices will again be heard . . .

The South's Being Denied, Invitation To Pulchritude

Word has been received that two gentlemen and campus connoisseurs of beauty have contacted curvaceous Janet Pilgrim of Playboy Magazine, requesting that Miss Pilgrim display a portion of her pulchritude to University-ites by visiting the campus.

Miss Pilgrim paid a similar "revealing" visit to Dartmonth last year, and a spread in Playboy Magazine on the campus, its traditions and accompanying shots of Miss Pilgrim resulted.

We Southerners feel highly slighted. And multitudinous subscribers and purchasers feel even more slighted.

Thus we spread out southern hospitality welcome mat for Miss Pilgrim . . . and anxiously await a southern counterpart of her Dartmouth trip. . . .

Liberal Arts' Assailed, Megolomania Taints All

Increasingly across the nation comes word that liberal arts universities are scraping their established general curricula in favor of a "specialized" program

We feel this largely responsible, though factors like population inundation are pertinent, to a demand for more scientifically-slanted curricula to match those of Communist-dominated nations.

Assuredly, there is a place for specialization. And it is necessary. But liberal educations should not be scrapped and prostituted because a war-mongering, megolamaniac nation—Russia—insists upon chanellizing minds so narrowly that they only visualize a role of non-questioning automation—a role which fits nicely in a dictatorship.

But such chanellized minds should not have dominating roles in a Democracy . . . whre all peoples, scientists, butchers and indian chiefs, are responsible not only for making a livlihood—but for running a government also.

Liberal thought entails not only a categorized role in society, but it entails keeping abreast of national and international affairs. And it entails keeping enlightened so tha people are qualified to vote and select qualified governmental representatives.

Thus it is with regret that we reprint this excellently worded editorial from The Daily Californian from the University of California at Berkeley:

Somewhere from the depths of this citadel of higher education comes the cry "Down with general curriculum!" and we shed a tear for the liberal arts scholar.

For the past year and a half, pressure has been applied, primarily by the faculty, to do away with general curriculum.

Unfortunately, such action will not only eliminate a worthy major but will also deter students coming to Berkeley in search of a truly liberal education.

It is hard to believe that one of the world's greatest universities would ever adopt such a policy, and surely the faculty members in voicing objection to general curric must have had doubts too. However, the majority feel they save the University from those who would turn four years into a holiday by majoring in a bit of everything and accomplishing nothing.

We will be the first to admit many students use general curriculum in such a fashion, yet no one has been able to demonstrate that thse individuals impede the educational level of the campus, or even constitute a majority engaged in the major.

Also, those students who use the major ir an attempt to gain knowledge of more than one field are chastised because certain educators believe the general curric major is of little value after his graduation.

What a pity to think the only way a college education can be manifested is through a sheepskin in a particular major.

Stil, the University hasn't set the date for general curric's death, and the door is still open to anyone who can compile a feasible program.

In the case of pre-meds a feasible program must include virtual assurance by the student that he will be accepted in th U.C. Medical school. If such proof can't be provided, he must pick a major or be classified as a man without a purpose in life.

However, a glimmer of hope does exist for general curric refuges. There is a proposal to initiate a field of study program in the upper division. Under such a program, the student would major in courses in the general fields of humanities or sociology, etc.

If accepted, this course of study may remedy most of the faculty's complaints and allow the general curriculum student relative freedom within an organized framework.

We only hope the faculty will allow field study to be the outgrowth of general curiculum, for, if not, history may remember Cal as the university which cut off some of its finest scholars to save its face.

Mid-East And Oil, And Omni-Vacillation

Curtis Gans

The Middle East is perhaps the most crucial area in the world today.

It is the dividing line between Asia, Africa, and Europe. It possesses one of the largest oil supplies in the world. Within its area the fastest water route from Europe to Asia is located. It represents Russia's hope of a warm water outlet in the Western Hemisphere and the Russian dream of driving a wedge between the allied forces of the Far East and Europe.

Syria is in a pivotal position in this critical area. Standing south of Turkey it represents a possible threat to Turkish control of the Dardenelles, whose fall would give Russia direct access to the Mediterranean, something they have been trying to acieve for centuries.

Standing north of the oil fields in Saudi Arabia, Jordan, and Iran, Syria stands in a position to cut off a large measure of the allied oil supply.

Syria, situated north of Israel, has within its power the ability to touch off the explosion that would unite the Middle East and tear asunder any Middle Eastern ties with the western democracies. For if there should be any outbreak of violence in which Israel is involved, the entirity of the Middle East would unite in the hope of crushing Israel and restoring the Middle East to Arab sovereignty.

The U. S. has lost Syria. It may well lose the rest of the Middle East if policies are not changed radically and soon.

The U. S. lost Syria to the Russians, not because there was in Syria an ambitious dictator who would take any form of aid advantageous to him, as in the case of Egypt's Nasser. The U. S. lost Syria, because of a vascillating foreign policy and a foreign aid program which does not come to grips with grim reality.

The Soviet won over Syria as it won over Red China—by appealing to the basic drives of the people. The forces of nationalism and hunger motivate people by far more than idealism.

The Russians promised strength, backed their statement up by shipping arms, and won the nationalistic spirit of Syria. They pointed to China, showed the improvements there, and won the Syrians by showing how their hunger could be alleviated. Now, with the Earth satellite and the Russian Intercontinental Ballistics Missile, the Syrians can be assured of a potent ally.

The rest of the countries in the Middle East can be less sure. They read of American cutbacks in armaments and can surmise that America is either not intent on becoming as strong as Russia to meet the Russian threat or that the U. S. is trying to protect only itself and will give only token protection to the countries of the Middle East.

The Middle Eastern nations can look at the American system and judge the efficiency of the government of the United States. The Russian development of an ICBM, and an Earth Satellite, to say nothing of the Syrian coup d'etat came without forewarning to the United States. The people of the Middle East must conclude that either the intelligence system of the United States is quite shoddy or that people of the United States are not being informed.

Perhaps the biggest flaw in the United States in the eyes of the Middle Eastern nations lies with the State Department and John Foster Dulles. The record of Mr. Dulles includes the promise of aid to Egypt in the building of the Aswan Dam and the subsequent withdrawal of the promise; the promise of massive retaliation for the free peoples of the world, and the production of none; the active support of Israel; the comparative lack of military aid in the form of arms and equipment; and the failure to bring the means of alleviating poverty. Compared to the Russian record, the policy of the United States looks anemic.

The U. S., if it is not to alienate the countries of the Middle East, must realign its foreign policy with regard to the Middle East. The U. S. must spend more not less, and they must put the emphasis of the foreign program on the feelings which are uppermost in the minds of the Middle Eastern peoples—nationalism and survival. The U. S. must not make loud propoganda boasts, in the future, unless it is willing to back these claims up in deed and fact. The United States must abandon, at least overtly, the policy of "do ut des." (I give in order that you give) Then, and only then, will the U. S. have a chance of retaining the loyalty of the Middle East.

If the U. S. does not retain this loyalty, there may well be a Third World War, with Russia holding one of the highest trump cards. It could mean the defeat of the U. S.

Positiveness Accentuated: Drinking Is Fun, Fun . . .

Al Walker

A guy who I hope was drunk told me to write something positive in my column. He said that today's college columnists are too dumb to write any positive criticism. Naturally I was a little drunk too, and so I said that I was too dumb to write any criticism at all. And besides I didn't like to. So he said all right, just write something positive. So I am.

The liquor laws of the state of North Carolina are very fine in comparison to most of the places I have been drunk. Of course those of Orange County, the county in which the beautiful little college town of Chapel Hill is located, aren't too hot, but on the whole I would say that I like the liquor laws of the state of North Carolina.

One of the first good laws is that you only have to be eighteen to drink beer here. When I first came to school, I was a little worried about being under twenty-one, but my fears were dispelled the first night. Of course I met with sad news that first night too, because we were cut off at midnight. Now I'm from Washington, D. C. and I'm used to drinking until two o'clock, and I need my extra two hours.

Another law that they have here is about the ABC stores. They are package stores that are run by the state to make money for the schools and other things which need money. Also they have people from the Salvation Army and other worthwhile charities standing around outside them with cups and other receptacles asking for donations. These people are rarely rewarded for their labors, and lately I hardly even get a twinge of conscience as I hurry back to the car with my wonderful brown sack. They don't have any ABC stores in Orange County, because I guess the schools here don't need any money.

In Chapel Hill the best place to buy beer to take out is Fowler's or the A & P during the daytime. At night, the Tempo is currently vying for the takeout business on cases. There are any number of fine drinking spots in Chapel Hill. The University restaurant is the best, as the Tempo is always crowded with idiots, phonies and drunks. In the afternoon, the Skimpo is ok. The Shack, next to the police station is a fine place, although they have television and atmosphere there.

Drinking is a lot of fun, and if you remember to shop before nine, and buy a lot, drinking in Chapel Hill is fun, I'm positive.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Worst Of Bugs: Extracurricularisis

There is a contagious disease going around campus other than Asiatic flu. It affects all kinds of people, male and female, fat and thin, new and old. The only thing about it is that once caught it is almost impossible to cure. Its medical name is EXTRACURRICULARISIS. People afflicted have a curious harried expression and develop a kind of "walk-run" gait as they rush from place to place.

For the benefit of those who are contemplating exposure to this disease here are a few comments pro and con.

First of all Carolina is a nest of activity. Its size and complexity, its varieties and diversities, its challenges and opportunities are both thrilling and terrifying. Here you can find yourself by communicating with all kinds of people; yet here you can lose yourself in the mob—consisting of those same people.

All students are equal in one respect: They all get 24 hours a day. No. more. No less. The way they use those 24 hours is what distinguishes the boys from the men, the outstanding from the mediocre. It is what turns the equality system into the competitive system.

There are as many things to do as there are types of personalities. There is drama for the dramatic, publications for the journalistic, parties for the sociable, and clubs for the joiner. You can pick your field. But don't try to be Catherine Cornell, Ernie Pyle, and Elsa Maxwell all at once, because you'll end up being nothing. Don't try to go to all the meetings, because you'll end up missing one and that will probably be the one you really cared about.

It is so easy to get lost in the maze of "Doing things for the sake of doing things." Once this is realized, immunity to EXTRACURRICULARISIS slowly sets in, and the nasty old germ leaves the enlightened one with his well?planned schedule and his wisely selected activities and floats away to pounce on the susceptible one who has already begun a letter home: "Dear Ma, things are piling up already . . . ."

Satellite Message & Slanted Eyes . . .

Gail Goodwin

There has long been much discussion and controversy over the "parking situation" in Chapel Hill. I hadn't heard much about it lately until just the other day when I overheard a Carolina Gentleman complaining about having to go all the way past Carrboro before he could find a place for him and his date to "park."

* * *

It was with much enlightenment that I read an article proclaiming that a message in International Morse Code stating, "3411, 3411, 5560, 8110337, 55689, 43811033, AR," was received from the newly launched Russian satellite.

The campus hypochrondiacs can really have a field day now that the dreaded "slant-eyed monster" (Asiatic Flu) has hit. Live it up, kiddies!

The word is out that The Daily Tar Heel is going to start a men's fashion column soon. There ought to be a real hassle over who tells whom what to wear. It seems to me that it ought to be simpler to just design an accepted uniform as it is.

Men's Glee Club Keep Hall Busy

Preparing for Saturday's University Day festivities, rehearsing for the forthcoming fall tour, orientating new members, trying to sell their new record of Carolina loyalty songs . . . all these make the choral hall in Hill Hall a very busy place now for the UNC Men's Glee Club.

The fifty-six member touring group will embark October 16 on its annual fall tour. Five days packed with high school concerts, night performances, stops at women's colleges along route, a football game and hours of steady traveling lie ahead of the University's only touring choral group. The 56 were chosen form a talented group of 86 music loving students.

The expansive tour will take the group from Oxford, up the Eastern seaboard and on to Baltimore, Md., and back to Chapel Hill.

They will depart Wednesday morning for the Oxford Orphanage at Oxford, where they will perform at the Henderson High School in Henderson.

Leaving Henderson, they are slated for a night performance in Holland, Va. where they will be feted with a dance and then given quarters for the night.

The 17th will be no less hectic for the good will ambassadors, as they have enagements at public schools both in Suffolk and Norfolk, Va. Afterwards they will journey to the YMCA in the nation's capital, where they will spend the night after performing in Washington.

There is a great likelihood that the Glee Club will be giving their best for Queen Elizabeth on Friday, the 18th. Friday's schedule also shows them performing at the University of Maryland and the Plaza Hotel in Washington. That night they will perform at Marjorie Webster Junior College for Girls, where they will again be honored with a dance.

Saturday finds the blazer-bedecked group providing entertainment at the big North Carolina Society Dance at the National Pres Club in Washington after attending the UNC-Maryland tilt that afternoon.

Sunday the group will perform at the Church of the Pilgrims for morning worship and then go on to Richmond, Va. where they will perform at the Richmond Alumni Society Meeting. Then they head for the green grass of Chapel Hill.

On tour the group will offer such renditions as "Hark the Sound;" other school songs; "Ave Maria;" "To Thee We Sing;" "Turn Back, O Man;" "Drinking Song" from the Student Prince, "Auf Wiederseohn; "Shenandoah;" "Climbing Up De Mountain," a Negro spiritual; "Down Among the Dead Men," and a "Whale of A Tale" mirroring the versatility of the group.

This year approximately 60 tryouts were given to prospective members for this organization and the results found the group numbering 87 voices, including new and old.

Dr. Joel Carter is very enthusiastic about this year's group, labeling them "one of the best I have ever directed." His only regret is that he cannot take the entire group on tour.

An opportunity to hear these glee club voices under the direction of Dr. Carter exists in the 45 L: P. recor of Carolina Songs the 1956-57 glee club recorded.

Sales are brisk and the club has received many favorable comments from Carolina students all around campus. Proceeds from the sale of the records will be used exclusively to further the Glee Club on its touring and busines expenses.

This year finds a new addition to the Glee Club insofar as appearance is concerned. Each member will be wearing a dark blue blazer embodying the Glee Club's new crest.

Reception of the blazer has proved so good that one of the scheduled stops have already asked that the club perform in their new blazers rather than the customary tux.

Community Work Phase Of Y Meets

The five committees that make up the community work phase of the Y will start their fall program by having a kick-off meeting at Carroll Hall Auditorium tonight at 7 o'clock.

The purpose of the meeting is to inform interested students, particularly those new to the UNC campus, about this phase of the Y work to give the chairman of each committee an opportunity to meet with the members of her committee and tell them their plans for the fall.

The following committees will be represented: Dix Hill, Gravely Sanitorium, Memorial Hospital, Holmes Day Nursery, and Girl Scouts.

Each of these committees furnishes girls who do volunteer work.

The Dix Hill committee plans to go to the mental institution in Raleigh at least once a week. Here they assist in receration, and present entertainment and talent shows for the patients.

The girls who go to the Gravely Sanitorium entertain the tubercular patients, run errands for them, write letters for them, and present parties and shows.

The Memorial Hospital committee does the same sort of work for the patients in the hospital.

Holmes Day Nursery, a nursery for little colored children, is visited by the volunteer coeds. Here they play with the children, have parties for them and teach them games.

The Girl Scouts committee works with the local Girl Scout troops leading recreation and planning special entertainment for them.

All those coeds who cannot come to this meeting are asked to come to the Y building on Friday at 3 p. m. to attend a meeting in the Y Lounge.

HIT AND RUN NO - TRUMP

Students On Bridge

To the vast number of people who play rubber bridge, whether at the frat house or the ladies club, the so-called "hit-and-run" No-trump is a standard vehicle, and rightly it should be. Unfortunately it misuse is as frequent as it use. Some players have the wild notion that they should conceal their long, strong suits from the opponents (as well as their partner). It they hope to gain the timing on a hand by the possibility of the lead of the unbid suit, then they are thinking wishfully.

The Bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
Pass	Pass	1	Pass
3	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening Lead: JD

The second consequence of this maneuver is that the hand with the long suit is usually the closed hand while all the tenaces are exposed. Almost always the strong suit should be in the dummy so the tenaces can be led up to and are not exposed to the view of the defenders. The only notable exception to this rule is when you are reasonably solid in the outside suits and do not want to encourage the defense to "cash in" since you may not have to lose all of your losers.

Probably half of the people reading this column would open the North hand within 3 Clubs, and about half of the ones left would bid 1 Club. To the 3 Club bidders: actually there is very little wrong with this bid here, except that it is generally not good practice to pre-empt with a four card side suit, particularly if it is a major. The possibility of finding a 4-4 fit in this side suit should not be pre-empted. Otherwise it is alright, but are you sure that your partner will know that you have a holding this, or will he expect a weaker suit. Most of the people use the pre-empt overuse it. The bid is a precise one, keep it that way. To those who open this hand at 1 Club only this can be said: when you open the bidding your partner expects a certain amount of defensive power, which, in a hand like this, you just don't have. You are much better off to pass initially and come in later either with a defensive bid or with a strongly offensive one, as in the case today. The bid of 3 Clubs, after having passed shows a suit quite like the one North holds and a maximum pass, and invites partner to bid 3 No-trump, if he can stop the other suits.

The play is less "hit-and-run" than this type of hand sometimes is. West is in a bind for an opening lead. It is important that he not lead a spade since spades have been bid on his right and tenance holding can produce four tricks if he doesn't lead them. The Jack of Diamonds is probably the best choice and will be taken by East for what it is, a "top-of-nothing" lead. The important play for South is to take the club finesse as a necessary safety play in order to insure getting bact to the spit. If the diamond Jack is lead, hold up, thus insuring two diamonds, five clubs, the Ace of hearts, and by end-playing West, a spade trick, and possibly a second heart trick with poor defense.

A MAJOR IN MARRIAGE?—Probably would be a good idea according to this foursome, left to right, Elizabeth Thompson, Watson Barnes, Ruth Watkins and Milton Barber. Elizabeth and Watson are engaged, as are Ruth and Milton. But these two engagements are a little out of the ordinary. Both girls are Chi O's while both boys are members of Zeta Psi; both Milton and Watson pinned Ruth and Elizabeth before the coeds came to UNC. This summer both couples became engaged, and both couples will be married in December. And come next June the foursome will graduate as Mr. and Mrs.—Staff Photo by Norman Kantor.

What Carolina Coeds Are Looking For When They Start Out Husband Hunting

Some people are interested in what students think of the Little Rock situation, what students want out of college, etc.

Recently a group of interested readers requested a coed opinion poll on "What I am looking for in a prospective husband." Here are some of the answers we got:

Ann Robinson, Charlotte, wants ". . . a boy who can see both points of view, who can give and take . . . who likes to do different things . . . kind of adventurous."

★ ★ ★

Joan Brooks, Greensboro, says, "I want him to have ambition . . . to like to travel . . . you know, the cosmopolitan type. But I want him to remember the little things like bringing me a bunch of violets on the first day of spring.

★ ★ ★

Martha Fortune, Brevard, demands this combination: "He must have a great personality and not be crude, or unattractive."

★ ★ ★

Betty Whitehurst, form Virginia Beach, goes for "the thoughtful man who likes children."

★ ★ ★

Sally Gluyas, from High Point, says, "Understanding is a worn out word, but most important to me. Besides being understanding, I want nothing tod o with dollars and him to be a good clean-cut all-American boy. And of course one who can put up with me.

★ ★ ★

Margaret Starnes from Raleigh: "I think the most important thing for a an to have can be sumed up in one word—WORTH. And this has cents."

BUT WHO WAS WILLIAM R. DAVIE?

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Mary Alys Voorhees, Editor

Anyway you look at it Carolina had a great deal to celebrate this weekend . . . the football game . . . fraternity rush was over . . . and everyone was happy over new pledge classes.

St. A's Double-Barrel Victory

A double-barrel victory party livened things up over at the St. A House Saturday as brothers and their dates gathered to celebrate UNC's great victory over Navy and to honor their new pledge class.

And the weekend was no sooner over when the brothers again swung the spotlight on the Carolina Inn, where a banquet Monday night honored their pledges. Dr. Harry K. Russell, a St. A on the English faculty was the speaker.

Chi Psis And Combos

No quiet prevailed at the Chi Psi Lodge Saturday as brothers and their dates came in after the game for a party and music by the Three Duces from Raleigh in their unique style.

Later in the evening the Joe Harper Combo provided music for dancing after dinner.

Over At The KA House

The Down Beats from Burlington supplied music when KAs and their dates arrived after the UNC-Navy game for a party at the House.

On Monday night the pledge ceremony was held, followed by a beer party for the brothers and pledges.

KA Bob Fuller of Gastonia is pinned to Doris Morris of Dead Horse Creek, S. C., and KA Tom McIver has pinned Lisa Anderson of his hometown, Greensboro.

Sigma Nu Dixieland

After the football team had conquered the invaders from the North, Sigma Nus and their dates arrived at the House for an evening of Dixieland jazz to celebrate the rise of the South again, you all.

An aftermath was the pledge ceremonies Monday night when the brothers welcomed the pledges into the fraternity. Following the serious aspects of the evening was a beer blast.

This coming weekend the Sigma Nus are planning a "quiet evening at home" with dancing to the jukebox.

Phi Kap—A La Miami

Sunglasses, Bermudas, etc. will be the order of the day Friday night when the Phi Kaps stage a "Miami Party" at the House with the Stray Greeks as their special guests. After listening to the UNC-Miami game the Les Sutorius Combo will present music for dancing.

The past weekend Bill Byers and his combo played at a party honoring the pledges, and Monday night pledges were again entertained at a beer party.

Phi Kap Jerry Aman of Jacksonville is pinned to Tolie Brown, who attends Meredith in Raleigh.

Phi Delt Doings

After such a big time Saturday night when the Doug Clark Combo played, the Phi Delts have planned an informal jukebox party for this Saturday.

Phi Delt Baxter Culler of Martinsville, Va. is engaged to Alice Burroughs, also of Martinsville, who is in school at Hollins. Phi Delt Wilson Cooper of Chattanooga, Tenn. has pinned Pi Phi Susie Fagan of Miami, Fla.

At The Phi Gam House

Alums and pledges joined the Phi Gams Saturday evening for a dinner at the House while a combo furnished background music.

Phi Gam Bob Exum and Tri Delt Judy Lou Garrou, both of Snow Hill were married this past summer, as were Phi Gam John Blount and former WC student Mary Howard Bowen, both of Washington.

SAE

A combo provided entertainment when the SAEs and Sigma Chis partied out at Beulah's Cabin Saturday night.

ATO News

Saturday when the ATOs partied at the House the Jack Victory combo played.

ATO Rivers Upchurch of Smithfield is pinned to WC student Mary Ann Bass of Durham.

Maid Of Cotton Search Brings Many Applicants

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Hundreds of applications have been sent to girls interested in becoming the 1958 Maid of Cotton, the National Cotton Council reports.

Applications, with two recent photographs, should be returned to the Council postmarked not later than Sunday midnight, Dec. 1.

Twenty girls will be selected as finalists and invited to come to Memphis for two days of judging in early January. Each finalist will receive $100 toward defraying expenses in connection with the trip to Memphis.

The girl who wins the title of 1958 Maid of Cotton will travel more than 35,000 miles on an international tour. Her travels in behalf of the cotton industry will take her to 25 major cities in the United States and to three in Canada.

In early June, a luxury liner of the British Overseas Airways Corp. will carry her to leading fashion centers abroad. She will be presented with an all-cotton wardrobe created for her by 42 outstanding American designers, and a new car will be waiting for her at the end of her journey.

To be eligible to be Maid of Cotton, a girl must have been born in a cotton-producing state. She must be between the ages of 19 and 25, at least five feet, five inches tall, and must never have been married.

Applications may be obtained from the National Cotton Council, P. O. Box 9905, Memphis 12, Tenn. The Maid of Cotton tour is sponsored annually by the Council, the Memphis Cotton Carnival Association, and the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, New York, and New Orleans.

World In Brief

Asks Negroes Go

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said today the only solution to the Little Rock integration crisis is withdrawal of nine Negroes from Central High School.

Six Negro girls and three boys are attending integrated classes under protection of Federal troops sent into Little Rock Sept. 24 by President Eisenhower. Faubus has demanded—and the White House refused—withdrawal of the soldiers.

Faubus told a news conference, in discussing the possibility of resolving his deadlock with the White House:

"I don't think it is possible at this time with the Negroes in the school."

Disarmament

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—The United States stressed today the need for U.N. approval of a disarmament plan which emphasizes control of outer space msisiles.

U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge will go before the U.N. General Assembly's 82-nation Political Committee tomorrow to lead off debate bound to be influenced by Soviet developments in the field of space missiles.

Lodge will ask endorsement of Western proposals for starting the world on the path toward disarmament.

Dictate To World

His declaration at a news conference offered assurance to America's allies that this country has no intention of abandoning close cooperation with them in exchange for an exclusive effort by the two super-powers to settle major world issues bilaterally.

It also amounted to rejecting an evident bid by Soviet Communist Party boss Nikita Khrushchev for a two-way deal between Washington and Moscow to order the state of international relations.

Records Turned Over

WASHINGTON (AP)—Subpoenaed election records of last week's teamsters union convention in Miami Beach, rescued from a hotel's waste paper, were turned over today to the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee.

A cardboard packing box full of records was delivered to Robert F. Kennedy, the committee's chief counsel, by Joseph Konowe, secretary of the convention credentials committee. Konowe was accompanied by a teamster lawyer, Gerard Treanor.

Konowe said that while a few of the election records he was directed to produce might be missing, "I believe we recovered substantially all of them."

Commend Chancellor

keep the people from being surprised that he was doing pretty well as a man. In their eyes he was simply showing to the world the mettle of his home town pasture.

He was somehow living up to the feeling of awarness of his schoolmates that being in the same class and hearing the same words of instruction, the teacher somehow taught him more than the others—but not so much more that he got out of reach or out of sight of them or they of him. What they saw in him then, all of us saw in him on Friday evening—the same sort of person as his schoolmates—only more so.

He was simply fulfilling the faith of his father expressed years before to a next door neighbor who had asked him in the depression of the 1930's if he knew how to get a building to met the needs of the Boy Scouts for their work, the High School for a gymnasium, and the American Legion Post for headquarters.

"Yes," saih his father with a quiet assurance and moving confidence the neighbor remembers yet, "See my son Bill." And there is the building today—of brick construction, 90 feet wide and 130 feet long, a triumph of ingenuity and resourcefulness bringing together the brick from an abandoned brick yard, sheathing from an NYA saw mill, sand and gravel from neighboring farms, labor from boys of the NYA ,and help wherever it was

The beauty of "his" day was and it that it was "their" day, too. He told his neighbors the story of being challenged by Jerry Stancil to races with his pony and how Jerry always won the race until he noticed that Jerry's pony was headed toward Jerry's stable; how he reversed the course in the next race and headed his pony for his own stable and won.

"The moral of that story is," he said, "you can't lose when you're coming home." The other point of the moral is that his neighbors couldn't lose when he came.

Negro With Ike

NEW YORK (AP)—K. A. Gbedemah, Ghana's finance minister who was refused service in a Dover, Del., restaurant because of his color, canceled plans to leave for home today in order to breakfast with President Eisenhower in the White House tomorrow.

The White House said "of course" the invitation to the Negro republic official was prompted by the incident.

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said the President's invitation reflected his reaction to the incident.

Sing A Song Of Sputnik

WASHINGTON (AP)—The library of congress braced itself today for the onslaught that is sure to come: The rush by songwriters to get there first with a song memorializing the Russian satellite, the Sputnik.

"It's a little too early, I guess," Richard MacCarteney of the copyright division said. But MacCarteney isn't selling short the nation's songwriters.

For evidence he can point to the 15 early birds who needed only the barest announcement that this country was planning a satellite to burst into song.

Tickets Go On Sale For Caravan Weekend Today

By WESTBROOK FOWLER

Plans for the Maryland caravan are complete, according to a report from Frank Inman, president of the University Club. The main body of the caravan, from 10 to 14 buses, will leave Chapel Hill from the Morehead Planetarium parking lot on Friday, Oct. 18, at 3 p.m.

There will be no Saturday classes on Oct. 19. The Queen of England will be present at the game, and half-time festivities will be elaborate. It is urged that many students cooperate and make this the most successful caravan ever.

Students who have labs or other engagements Friday afternoon may catch one of two buses leaving the Planetarium site not later than 5 p.m. Those who wish to return to Chapel Hill after the game Saturday may catch the bus leaving Washington at 6 p.m. Washington time.

Tickets go on sale today (Oct. 10) at the information booth in Graham Memorial. All tickets sold cover. transportation both ways Students and fraternities who already have a place to stay may purchase a simple round trip ticket for $10.50.

The following prices are for transportation and two nights' residence: a single room, $23.50; double room, $21; room with twin beds, $22.50. For one night's residence and transportation the prices are: single room, $16; double room, $15.50; twin beds, $16.50.

Since buses varying in seating capacity from 33 to 47 places each will be engaged, it will be possible for individual organizations to have their own buses.

All participants in the caravan are asked to be in their seats by 2:30 p.m. on Friday. At this time a detailed time schedule will be issued and a roll taken.

Any University or bus company rules relavent to the caravan wil' be announced. Each person will be responsible for maintaining the issued schedule, because a crowd is expected.

While in Washington bus services will be at the disposal of the students. These services include transportation to the hotels after the game, to the Maryland campus for parties Saturday night, and back to the hotels after the parties.

On the return trip Saturday, buses will leave Washington at 6 p.m. Washington time. Sunday they will leave by 5 p.m. These times of departure were set so that the coeds can be in by closing hours.

Plans for this trip were begun several weeks ago. A delegation from the Dean of Women, the cheerleaders, and University Club officers met with Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, to work out a plan that would be suitable and advantageous to all students here. While on the trip students are expected to observe the normal restrictions of this University and to govern themselves accordingly.

DECIDING GAME TODAY

Yanks Even Series With 3-2 Victory

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York Yankees tied the World Series at three victories apiece today by defeating the Milwaukee Braves 3-2 in a battle of home runs. The seventh and deciding game will be played here tomorrow.

A crowd of 61,408 saw the Yanks back up the four hit pitching of Bob Turley with a record long range hitting display. Homers by Yogi Berra with one on base in the third inning and by Hank Bauer with the bases empty in the seventh accounted for all the Yankee scores.

Bauer's deciding wallop came just after Hank Aaron had tied the score 2-2 in the top of the seventh with his third home run of the series. Earlier Frank Torre had belted a homer into the stands for Milwaukee's first run.

The Yankees pitcher, driven out early in the third game of the series, gave up only two walks and struck out eight in a fine performance. Bob Buhl, the Braves starting pitcher, was taken out after the Yanks had gone ahead in the third. Ernie Johnson's relief pitching stopped the Yanks until the seventh.

Don McMahon came in to pitch the last inning for the Braves after Johnson had gone out for a pinch hitter. Berra nicked him for a double and reached third on Gil McDougald's sacrifice. But Wes Covington, Milwaukee's series star, threw him out at the plate after taking Lumpe's' fly in the left field corner.

Berra and Bauer both figured in World Series records by today's performances. Berra appeared in his 53rd World Series game, breaking the record of 52 made by another Yankee, Phil Rizzuto. His homer was his tenth in world series play, putting him in a tie with Lou Gehrig and Duke Snider for second place among all-time series home run hitters.

Bauer's winning blow marked the 13th consecutive series game in which he had hit safely, tieing a record held by Frank Schulte of the Chicago Cubs and Harrp Hooper of the Boston Red Sox.

Don Larsen, the Yankees no-hit pitching star of the 1956 World Series, is scheduled to start the final game for New York tomorrow against either Warren Spahn, Milwaukee's ailing left hander, or Lew Burdette.

Payne Made The Most Of Summer

Buddy Payne, the 6-2, 204 pound Carolina co-captain and end from Norfolk, Va., spent the summer here in school, but he was not completely concentrating on his classwork.

Buddy likes to play football and came here with a brilliant schoolboy record behind him. He had been a starter since his sophomore year. Last year he made the All-State team. But he had never quite achieved the pinnacle his admirers had set up for him.

A knee injury, for one thing, had held him back, and in 1956, when he was runner-up on the team in pass receptions with six for 116 yards, he did not appear entirely unconscious of the ailment.

But last summer, Payne, who has a marvellous physique, streamlined from tip to stern, said he would make his senior year his big one. Daily he worked out on his own and when pre-season practice came along, it was obvious that this extra-curricula effort had made him a much better football player.

The Tar Heels now have played three games. Buddy Payne has been an outstanding star in all three, even in the lost cause against N. C. State.

In the Navy game, when he determinedly and viciously rushed Tom Forrestal, the great Navy quarterback, when the latter was trying to get off a pass, he laid out Forrestal, who got off a short, weak pass into the hands of Leo Russavage, strapping Tar Heel tackle. Russavage came charging up the field to score the first touchdown of his football career. Buddy gave him an additional lift with a fine block.

Payne's two remarkable pass catches in the Clemson game were works of artistry. He leads the team in receptions with three for 54 yards and one touchdown.

"He has character and leadership," remarked one Carolina coach. "That's what makes him a great player, in addition to his wonderful physical equipment and fine skills." Payne this week will be co-leader of his team, now with a 2-1 record, against Miami in the Orange Bowl Friday night.

Frosh Harriers Lose, 22-33 To 'Pack Yearling

By AL WALTERS

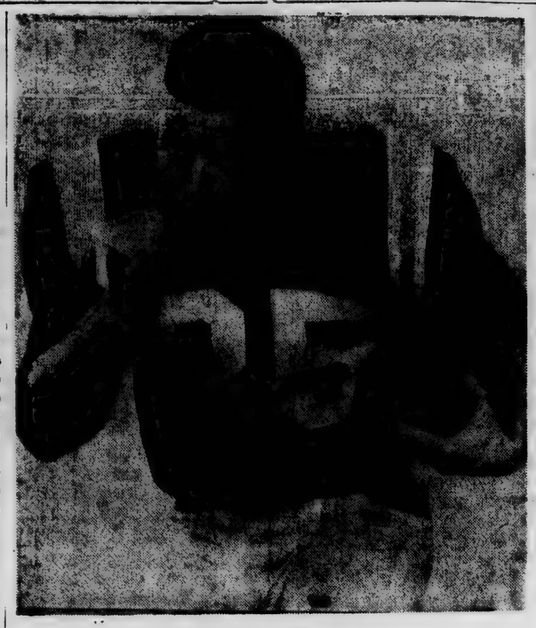
Despite Harry Miller's 11:52 effort, the Carolina freshman harriers went down to defeat at the hands of the State thinclads, 22-33, yesterday at Fetzer Field. Fred Wilson, State, led the pack with a time of 11:35.8 over the 2.2 mile track. He was followed by teammate Arthur Redd, ten seconds back.

Dean Rober completed State's capturing of three of the top four places with a fourth place finish of 12:02. Worth Sweet and Neal Chappell of the Tar Heels came in next with identical clockings of 12:03.

Next in line were John Davis and Bill Daughtery of State with respective times of 12:08 and 12:20. This completed State's top five finishers and gave them their final score of 22.

John Boles was the fourth Tar Heel to cross the finish line, registering with a mean of 12:30. He was followed by teammate Robert Costello, whose clocking was 12:58.

The outing was a complete reverse from their opening 18-35 victory over East Mecklenburg High School for the Baby Blues.



Yesterday's defeat can be revenged by the harriers in their next meeting, also against State. This one is at Raleigh October 22. Duke will follow State on the Tar Heel schedule, facing Carolina here November 2.

The harriers will close their season in the State Championship meet at Raleigh November 11.

The finishers and their times: Fred Wilson (S) 11:35.8. Arthur Reed, (S), 11:45. Harry Miller (C) 11:52. Dean Rober (S), 12:02. Worth Sweet (C) 12:03. Neal Chappell (C) 12:03. John Davis (S), 12:08. Bill Doughtary (S), 12:20. John Boles(C), 12:33. Robert Costello (C), 12:58.

Schuler Finally Coming Into His Own As Star

By WAYNE THOMPSON

Jim Schuler didn't care about the nullification of his 61-yard touchdown run last Saturday. He's not that kind of guy. His team had just pulled the biggest upset of the 1957 football season, so he was as happy as the next one.

Schuler, a 6-0, 180-pound Carolina halfback, actually had more than a usual Saturday afternoon football game to play . . . He had to do something to prove that his mid-week prediction of "Carolina over Navy" wasn't just the fancy of a little boy whistling in the dark.

Jim Schuler did do something. In fact, his contributions to the great Tar Heel conquest were many. He was a copsiderable shot in the arm through the week with his chatter and enthusiasm and his off-the-cuff prediction was a stimulus that affected North Carolina rooters far and wide. Could UNC beat Navy? The experts said no, but here was a Tar Heel player who said yes.

That same player, Jim Schuler, is saying yes again this week when asked whether the Tar Heels can handle deceivingly powerful Miami. Jim figures a win over Miami would open the doors of the nation's top 10 to his Tar Heel buddies. These same doors have been closed to Tar Heel gridders since the end of the Justice era.

Schuler was considered pre-seasonally to be one of the keys to a successful Tar Heel season. In early scrimmages, his electrifying runs had all the visiting writers awed and even Choo-Choo himself was noticeably impressed with the speedy halfback.

Jim was a little disappointing in his first college varsity football game against N. C. State this year. Admirers said it was just first game jitters.

He improved remarkably in his second try against Clemson a couple of weeks ago scoring one touchdown and returning several kicks for valuable yardage.

Last week, however, Jim Schuler really came into his own. His family, who lives in High Point, were not present to watch him, but they saw plenty on television. "Shoo" as his mates call him, gained 42 yards in 8 carries for a 5.3 average and set up the first Carolina score with a fourth down off-tackle run to the one-yard stripe.

The play that caught every eye and captiviated the heart of every Tar Heel fan was not allowed, but, nevertheless, it showed all of the Jim Schuler potential.

Possessing probably the most speed of any of Tatum's fine backs, Schuler took a lateral pass from quarterback Dave Reed at his own 39 and started on a 61-yard jaunt that electrified both stands. Unfortunately for UNC, he stepped out of bounds on the Tar Heel 45 to complete merely a 16-yard pick-up.

Schuler remembered stepping out and said he missed the Td by six inches. Guard Ed Furjanic, standing along the sidelines, tried to warn Jim, but the momentum of the sweep caried his right foot past the out-of-bounds line.

He continued his run, got good blocking, out-manuevered three Navy safetymen at the Middy 20, and outdistanced two other Navy pursuers. It was a brilliant run a la Charlie Justice, who was looking on from a radio booth in the North Carolina press box.

This was the run that was called back—the run that the Tar Heels didn't need to beat Navy—but it is also the run that is remembered most by the 25,000 fans who thronged into Kenan Stadium.

It was Jim Schuler's way of saying thanks for the patience of the fans who have been waiting to see him live up to pre-season notices.

Carolina-State Frosh Clash In Benefit Game Sat. Night

Raleigh — Freshman football teams from North Carolina State and the University of North Carolina will tangle here Saturday night in the tenth annual Sudan Temple Bowl Game.

The game will be played in Riddick Stadium, beginning at 8 o'clock.

The freshman contest this year replaces the game between Oxford and Methodist Orphanages, sponsored for the past nine years by the Sudan Temple.

All proceeds will go to the Greenville, S. C., unit of the Crippled Childrens Hospitals. Tickets are $2. and can be bought from any Shriner. Tickets also will be on sale at the gate.

Both yearling squads will enter the game with 1 0 records. State opened its schedule last week by defeating Virginia Tech 19-13 while Carolina beat Maryland 14-7.

The game also marks the first meeting of freshman teams from the two institutions in several years, and it is the only game in the Big Four area this week end. State is at Florida State, Carolina at Miami, Duke at Rice and Wake Forest at Maryland.

Both schools are fielding strong teams this year. The UNC frosh represent the second step in Coach Jim Tatum's rebuilding program at Carolina, and the State rookies have more size and depth than any of Coach Smaltz' previous three teams.

The Crippled Childrens Hospital at Greenville is one of 17 Shriner Hospitals in the U.S. which have treated more than 250,000 children since 1922. Last year $6.5 million dollars went to the hospitals from Shrine-sponsored events.

Herbert Ruffin of Raleigh is the Bowl Game chairman. All Shrine units from the Sudan Temple will be at the game and will parade at the half.

Draft Call

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Army today issued a draft call for 7,000 men in December.

This is the same quota previously announced for the month of October and November. It brings to 2,260,430 the total number drafted or earmarked for induction since the resumption of Selective Service in September 1950.

The Army said that Selective Service had been asked to provide the entire December quota before Dec. 12 so draftees would not have to leave their homes and report for induction in the days immedately preceding the Christmas and New Year season.

Booters Had New Experience At LC

By JIM PORKS

Most of the varsity soccer players experienced something very unusual in Tuesday's contest with little Lynchburg College

Besides playing in a "freak" game in which they outplayed their conquerors for most of the game, the UNC booters felt for the first time the rare sensation of playing before spectators.

Around 200 spectators, maybe more, came to watch their Lynchburg Hornets defeat the Tar Heels.

The Carolina players are shocked when over 40 people come to watch their home games.

Besides the spectators, who were very enthusistic rooters, there were around seven pretty red- sweatered cheerleaders who led the fans in some spirited yells.

Despite the fact that they are not used to playing before spectators, the Carolina players said after the game that having around 299 persons rooting against them didn't bother them; they played as they normally would in Chapel Hill.

However, all agreed that having a spirited rooting section probably played a big part in inspiring the Lynchburg players to play as well as they did and hold off the forward line's efforts to tie the score up in the last quarter.

As for the game, no one really knowns exactly what happened, except for the fact that Carolina was defeated, 4-3.

The why of it is a partly cloudly mystery, because the Tar Heels controlled the play most of the time. The Lynchburg team rarely had a concerted, organized attack going on the forward line, while the passing on Carolina's forward line was good, although not as sharp as in the Roanoke game.

Coach Marvin Allen believed that the main reason for the loss was the lack of that "big foot."

"You've got to shoot in order to score," he's told his team almost every practice.

At Lynchburg there were not many occasions to get a good shot on goal and on a few occasions the Carolina players did not take advantage of an opportunity when it did present itself.

Despite the disappointment of losing, he game had its high spots for the UNC squad, especially in the showing of three sophomores. Take Mike Thompson, for instance Thompson pulled the "hat trick" by scoring all three Carolina goals.

Another player also established himself as a star on the Carolina team. Hugh Goodman, also a sophomore, did a brilliant job in filling the shoes of Dave Corkey, Allen's regular left halfback.

Charlie Whitfield, replacing the injured Coleman Barks, played well at the right wing position.

Next on the Carolina agenda is a rugged Washington and Lee eleven, which invade Chapel Hill next Tuesday, seeking revenge for last year's 4-1 defeat at the hands of the Tar Heels.

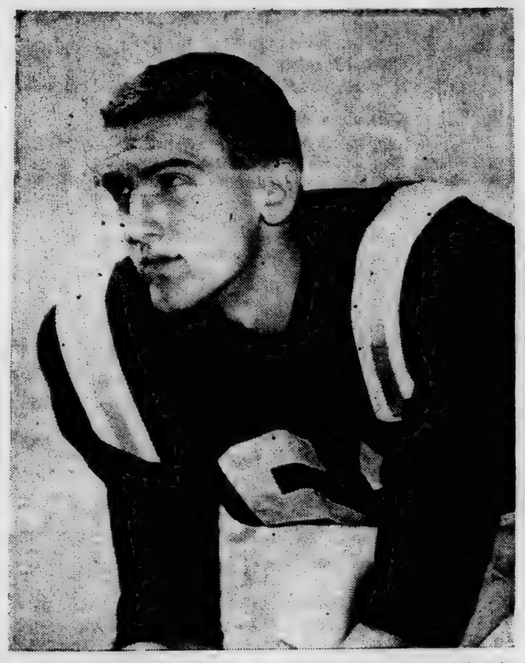
Honorary Society Taps 15 Members

IDC Notes Dorm Men's 'Devotion'

In secret, pre-dawn ceremonies today, the IDC Honorary Society tapped 15 men who have been outstanding in UNC dormitory life.



Tapped were James R. Womble, Rocky Mount; Rudolph L. Edwards, Rutherfordton; Harvey Theodore Jones, Cary; Bennett Allen Thomas, Morven; Franklin R. Brown, Tarboro, Neil C. Bender, Pollocksville; Oliver W. Alphin, Mt. Olive; Michael Kelly Hayes, Greensboro; Patrick Jackson Leonard, Raleigh; Paul "Whit" Whitfield, Durham; Julius E. Banzet, Warrenton; Steven Grant Lyon, Wilkesboro; Donald L. Watkins, Burlington; George Stafonov; and Paul Carr, Hillsboro.

The IDC Honorary Society was founded last year by Sonny Hallford and makes it selections from those men who have "shown devotion to the betterment of dormitory life."

Acording ot IDC President Tom Walters, "the society plans to become extremely active and will later furnish a scholarship fund for deserving students."

This morning's tapping was made by charter members Sonny Hallford, Bob Carter, Neil Bass, Charlie Dunn, Bill Hauser and Tom Walters.

Honorary members of the society include Robert Burton House, former UNC Chancellor; Housing Officer James Wadsworth; James Wallace, former GM director; former Student Body President Bob Young; and Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

Carolina Seeking Third Win; Foes Deep On Defense

By BILL KING

MIAMI, Fla—The Carolina Tar Heels will be out to make it three in a row here tonight as Jim Tatum's warriors test their resistance against the strong Miami Hurricanes in the beautiful Orange Bowl at 8 p.m.

It must seem strange to Tatum to be in the Orange Bowl against a team which isn't coached by Oklahoma's Bud Wilkinson. The two coaches have battled here several times in the past while Tatum was at Maryland.

But Sunny Jim's opponent here tonight is almost as formidable as Wilkinson—Andy Gustafson. And his team should prove a tough test for the lately-inspired Tar Heel contingent.

Miami will bring into this contest one of the country's finst defenses, and a better than average ground attack that last week carried the Hurricanes to a 13-7 victory over a strong Baylor club. Maiami lost its season opener, 7-0 to Houston.

Pre-game predictions set the crowd which will gather here tonight at 50,000 or better and the Tar Heels can be asured of their best gate of the season in this football-hungary area, certainly an outstanding locale in collegiate football.

Carolina's problem tonight will be twofold: To stop the Hurricanes along the ground and to manipulate an offensive attack which will be to move through a defense which held Baylor to a mere 17 yards along the ground.

To do this, Tatum will probably call upon his steady quarterback Dave Reed to take to the air against the Hurricanes. The Miami front wall, while not inpredgnable, will probably give the Tar Heels a lot of trouble and the final outcome of this ball game could rest upon the twirling arm of Reed and his number one and two understudies, Curt Hathaway and Jack Cummings.

As for Miami, fans here can expect to see a tight ground game with very few passes. The Hurricanes have completed only one pass this season and are labeled strictly a running ball club.

The man who bears the closest servelance by the Tar Heels is senior John Varone, the right halfback. Gustafson calls Varone potentially the finest runners ever at Miami and adds that "he hits harder than Doc Blanchard. "Varone has gained 171 yards in two games and 131 of them were against Baylor.

The Huricanes have a couple of outstanding rookie quarterbacks in Fran Curci and Maury Guttman. Both are lefthanders and can handle the ball club with equal ability. Curci, who has gained 144 yards on the keeper play in two games, has earned the plaudits of the experts for his amazing ball handling.

Superlatives for the Miami victory over Baylor carry over to the line which limited the Bears to 17 yards on the ground in 19 tries. The Miami first unit now has played nearly 80 minutes without giving up a first down on rushing. Charley

Legislature Cuts Red Tape For Symposium

By STAN FISHER and DON SHAW

The Student Legislature last night passed a resolution to allow the Carolina Symposium to keep funds appropriated by the Student Legislature in the Bank of Chapel Hill.

The bill, introduced by Al Goldsmith and Jerry Oppenheimer (UP), was passed by special orders, enabling introduction and passage during a single meeting.

The bill ran into a great deal of debate from Student Party opposition, who avowed the bill would influence other campus organizations into attempting such means of cutting red tape surrounding expenditures allotted them by the legislature. In a rare move, Speaker Don Furtado ascended the roustrum to oppose the bill.

In speaking out against the bill, Furtado said, "I feel that if this bill is passed it would be setting a dangerous precedent."

The bill was passed, however, by a 20 to 9 majority.

Other bills passed by the legislature were:

(1) A resolution of appreciation to President William Friday, Chancellor William Aycock, Dean Fred Weaver, Edgar Branch, Sonny Evans and all others concerned for their efforts in obtaining recent measures favoring students.

(2) A resolution encouraging all students to attend the installation of Chancellor William B. Aycock.

(3) A bill to set up a committee to revise the by-laws of the Student Legislature.

Bills introduced in this session of the legislature to be considered in the next meeting were:

(1) A bill to appropriate funds to the Carolina Symposium.

(2) A resolution requesting that the campus stores committee examine the reasons for the high prices charged students by the UNC Book Exchange.

(3) A bill to establish a committee to study policies surrounding the office of editor of the student newspaper at other colleges.

These bills were referred to the Ways and Means Committee for further consideration.

In speaking out against the bill, Furtado said, "I feel that if this bill is passed it would be setting a dangerous precedent."

Nine new members were sworn into the Student Legislature last night.

New legislators are: Lucie Crossland, Bennie Baucom, Ralph Potter, Graham Claytor, Marian Ells, Kay Klopfer, Bill Sayers, Max Vallotton, and Lucy Forsyth.

Lucie Crossland, Ed Levy, and Jack Lewis were placed in a new district, but were re-elected from these districts.

Several new members have been placed on the following committees:

1. Ways and Means: Jack Lawing (replacing Jim Alford) Kay Klopper;

2. Finance: Jeff Hare (replacing Ron Belk), Bob Burge, Bennie Baucom;

3. Rules: Graham Claytor, Lucy Forsyth.

Long said that these examinations have been rescheduled for Monday from 2-4 p. m. and for Tuesday from 8-9:30 p. m. in Woodhouse conference room.

The exam will include questions on parliamentary procedure and current events.

YACK PICTURES

"Scandalous"

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10—(AP)—Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) said today election records of the Teamsters Union convention show James R. Hoffa could not have been elected president except for disregard of the union's constitution.

Hoffa was overwhelmingly elected at the convention at Miami Beach, Fla., last week.

McClellan, chairman of the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee, also said records surrendered by the teamsters "reveal some situations which are just plain scandalous."

Huge Fireball

DENVER, Oct. 10 — (AP) — A huge fireball, described by some as being as large as a house, streaked across western skies narrowly missing a Navy transport plane with 20 persons aboard.

An official of the Civil Aeronautics Administration here said the object undoubtedly was a meteor. It was reported to have hit the ground near Myton, Utah.

A spokesman at the Naval Air Station at Alameda, Calif., said a DC6 which left Alameda at 12:33 a.m. ((Pacific Standard Time) was near the fireball as he flew en route to Norfolk, Va.

State College To Host Model United Nations

A United Nations model assembly, in which UNC will represent France, will take place Oct. 17-19 at State College in Raleigh, it was announced yesterday.

UNC has been asked to furnish the president of the assembly and the chairman of the Ad Hoc committee.

Al Lowenstein, graduate student has been selected to serve as president of the assembly.

Chairman of the UNC delegates to the model assembly, Deborah Sink, stated, "We feel that it is a great honor that our school, out of all those participating, was asked to provide the president."

Interviews for delegates to the assembly will be held today, 3-5 p. m., in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial. Any student is eligible to apply.

Co-sponorsing the UNC delegation are the student government UN committee and the Y world affairs committee; Deborah Sink has been appointed chairman of the UNC delegates.

Students attending the model assembly will probably be excused from classes, according to the latest information. The registration fee will be paid jointly by the student government and the Y.

A keynote address by a nationally known speaker will open the assembly at 2 p. m., Thursday, and a banquet will be held Friday evening. Other information concerning meeting schedules will be available at registration Thursday afternoon.

Housing for Thursday and Friday nights will for the most part be provided in private homes and will therefore incur no cost to the delegate. The assembly will close Saturday at noon.

The probable agenda for the assembly is as follows:

1. Russian intervention in Hungary
2. Disarmament
3. Red China into the United Nations.

THE AYCOCK STORY

UNC's New Chancellor Will 'Go Forward And Keep Moving'

Editor's Note: Following is the last in a series of articles which will comprise a three-page section to be published this week in "Popular Government." written by Prof. Albert Coates of UNC, it relates to Chancelolr Aycock, who will be officially installed here this weekend.)

No one who heard William Aycock acknowledge the authority and leadership of his schoolmate President in the quietly moving statement, "I mean to serve him well," has any doubt that he means to serve the University of North Carolina well.

And those who saw him through the years turn down offer after offer of higher rank and better pay in other universities, almost to the doubling point, and without a hesitating moment, have no doubt about the fact his heart is in this dwelling place.

What comes first in the University in his thinking is clear to those who heard his laughing answer to a neighbor's observation that his lawn would come along faster if his children kept off it for awhile: "Right now I'm raising children. When I get through raising children, I'll start raising grass!"

His father had followed that sort of thinking in raising him; "talking things over" with him as they did the morning and evening chores together; writing him letters from an understanding heart whenever he came to turning points in college days and after; and opening wellsprings in his life that are running deep and strong today.

It was this way of looking at things that brought him to his work in planning projects for employing and developing latent abilities in thousands of youth all over North Carolina, and helping them find jobs which would help them find themselves.

It was this way of looking at things which he put to use in the Plans and Training Section in Fort McClellan Headquarters, where he was charged with administrative responsibilities in utilizing the resources of this great military center in preparing thirty thousand young men from all over the nation for the stresses and strains of combat duty.

In this faith the founders and written into the charter of the University of North Carolina in 1789 the belief that "it is the indispensable duty of every legislature to consult the happiness of a rising generation and endeavor to fit them for an honorable discharge of the social duties of life by paying the strictest attention to their education."

In this faith the leader of the forces of education in North Carolina at the turn of the century had proclaimed the "right of every child born on earth to have the opportunity to bourgeon out all that there is within him."

In this faith the incoming Chancellor will lead the University in its historic mission of helping to build here in North Carolina a way of life and living for which generations of men and women have fought and dreamed and died and scarcely dared to hope.

"Go forward and keep moving" were the orders coming to him as he took command of the Third Battalion of the 346th Infantry in 1945. He had heard those words before—coming to him from within himself as he took leadership among his fellows in school at home, in N. C. State, in NYA. In that tradition he went forward and kept moving as Soldier, Student, Editor, Scholar, Teacher, Administrator, and Member of the United Nations team on its mission to India and Pakistan.

Those who know him know, and those who do not know him will find out, in words drawn from his citations and literally cut from the raw materials of his life on other battlefields, that he will "go forward and keep moving" in the role of Chancellor, with the "efficient planning and tactical skill," the "initiative, courage, and devotion to duty," and the "gallantry in action," exemplifying the highest traditions" of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.—

Asian Flu Hits At Wake Forest

WINSTON-SALEM, Oct. 10 — (AP)—An outbreak of flu, presumably the Asian variety, has confined some 65 Wake Forest students on the campus here.

Dean William C. Archie said today the outbreak began about the middle of last week. The number of afflicted students has increased steadily since. Five new cases were admitted to special infirmary quarters set up in Efird Hall dormitory. About the same number were released.

While all students have not been tested individually at least one case has been diagnosed as Asian flu, Dean Archie said. All the confined students are presumed to have Asian flu.

Infirmary's Myopic View & Student Health Danger

It is indeed a curious and distressing phenomenon that the University Infirmary has received no shipment of Asiatic Flu serum, according to University Physician E. McC. Hedgpeth.

North Carolina State's infirmary has been receiving small shipments on a 6,000 unit order from Lederle since August. It has received enough serum to innoculate approximately 500 students during this period.

And according to the State infirmary, another large shipment is expected in the near future so that all students may procure the innoculation against the dreaded Slant-Eyed monster.

At Woman's College, innoculations against Asiatic Flu are currently being administered to students desiring them. And the infirmary is extremely "busy," according to infirmary employees.

Yet University Physician Hedgpeth has failed to procure, he says, any flu innoculant from the ultimate dispursing agency, the United States Surgeon General's Office.

Physician Hedgpeth is to be complimented for his "terrific" handling of the current infirmary rush—according to an infirmary patient—but he is to be severely chastized for his procrastination in ordring the flu vaccine which might prevent an overall epidemic on the campus.

It seems unusual that students should be referred to local physicians who have the vaccine, while the Infirmary has presumably been unable to obtain any innoculating serum.

Sleeping dogs must not be allowed to lie when the health of the student body is at stake.

Vaccine should be procured . . . and it should have been procured as soon as it became evident that the Slant-Eyed monster was sweeping the United States.

Procrastination may not be condoned when the student body's health is at stake . . .

A Leader, A Scholor... Symposium's Bill Geer

The selection of William (Bill) Geer as adviser for the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs is admirable.

Bill Geer's interest in student government and his devotion to the University and the ideals for which it stands have long been known by all who know him best.

His sincerity and outstanding capability are emulative and practically inimitable.

The symposium—one of the most informative and worthy ventures on this campus in some time—should progress far under his advice.

Our hat goes off to Bill Geer.

Men of his caliber are infrequently seen on this campus. A leader, a scholar, a friend to students and to student government . . .

Honorary Tapees And Better Dorm Government

". . . devotion to betterment of dormitory life . . ."

The Interdormitory Council Honorary Society tapped 14 men in ceremonies last night for demonstrating the epitome of just such "devotion."

Dormitory government at the University seems, at times, to lack effective and interesting leadership.

But to those who have diligently and conscientiously worked for improved dormitory life, we offer our most hearty congratulations.

The tappees deserve special commendation from all who strive for better and more wholesome dormitory government:

Rudy Edwards, Teddy Jones, Benny Thomas, Frank Brown, Neil Bender, Al Alphin, Mike Hayes:

Mighty Yanks Struck Out...

The mighty Yankees have struck out . . .

And Milwaukee fans all over the country are exhuberant.

The name "New York Yankees" has become synonymous with "victory" all over the world . . . Baseball even transcends the Iron Curtain. Thus their defeat is somewhat saddening.

But we feel shattering of the Yankees' monopoly on World Series championships may, in the end, be good for baseball. Monopoly stiffles competitive spirit . . . in business or in baseball.

Therefore the Braves as well as becoming world baseball champions have become iconoclasts . . . dispellers of the myth that the Yankees are practically unbeatable in world series or regular season play.

The Yankees have captured the series championship 16 times since 1930, eight times in the last 10 years. We hope their monopoly has been ruptured . . . But there's always next year . . .

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Union Forces Retreat To UNC: 'Scorch Earth!'

Whit Whitfield

It seems that North Carolina will be on the battlefront in the near future. Earlier this week, Union County South Carolina purchased nine new Browning submachineguns to be used to fight any soldiers who attempt to enforce integration in that county. The headline read:

"FOR S. C. COUNTY, NINE NEW GUNS TO MEET ANY INVADING GI'S."

Sheriff J. Harold Lamb had this comment to make, "Anyone violating our laws will be arrested, jailed, and treated the same as any other accused person."

This can only mean one thing—integration will be attempted sooner or later, just as in Little Rock. As stubborn and rebellious as the Palmetto State has always been, there is little doubt that they will stick to their promise. Soooo . . . . the first battle will be in Union County, and if the sheriff and his men can force the invaders back, then most likely Chapel Hill and its immediate surroundings will be in the path of the retreating Federal Army.

★ ★ ★

The students and townspeople of Chapel Hill should begin making preparations as soon as possible. Crops will have to be burned, along with municipal buildings and quiz files. Fortifications will have to be erected around South Building to protect the administrative officers and deans.

Records will have to be burned, especially those of students who have low averages. Emergency aid stations will have to be erected at Woollen Gym and Spencer Dorm. (Question?)

The decision as to which side to fight on will be a difficult one for many people. Whether to help the sheriff and his eight deputies, or whether to join the federal forces and possibly be on the winning side for a change is a big question to ponder. We say that because the sheriff is undoubtedly the underdog. BUT—underdogs have been known to upset the favorites from time to time. What would it be like to live under a Union County military dictatorship? It could hardly be worse than Reconstruction, but who knows?

What will historians call it? Possibly The Battle of the Triassic Basin, or Carolina Revisited, or better yet, The Battle of Davie Poplar.

If we wished to save ourselves the trouble and expense involved we could always openly declare our neutrality and yodel loudly like the Swiss. It is doubtful whether the Union County forces would respect our neutrality however. But we can always appeal to the United Nations.

FROM THE OREGON DAILY EMERALD:

Loaded Dice & Teamsters' Union: Miami Convention Filled With Goons

(The ignominious election of Jimmy Hoffa to head the Teamsters Union has already occurred. Most contend the convention was loaded with Beck and Hoffa Racketeers, Inc. There sems to be little doubt of such loaded dice action. Now that the shady election has concluded, the Emerald's warning and demand for remedial legislative action is still appropriate. The Editor)

The people of the United States are about to stand helplessly by and watch a gangster of the first order be elected president of an organization which vitally affects us all.

The gangster in question: Jimmy Hoffa, midwest Teamster vice-president, hand-picked by "retired" Teamster President Dave Beck to maintain the top-echelon corruption which developed under Beck.

Hoffa's record of corrupt activities in and out of the Teamsters is well known to all since Sen. McClellan's committee hearings on corruption in the Teamsters. The tragedy is that Hoffa will doubtless be elected to head the Teamsters in spite of this evidence and the Teamsters from the AFL-CIO if Practices committe to oust the Teamsters fro mthe AFL-CIO if Hoffa is elected.

The Teamsters Union is the largest single union in the country and probably the most powerful. Its members work in nearly all the land transportation facilities except the railroads. A general Teamster strike could all but cripple the nation. And Hoffa is proposing to the Railroad Brotherhood that they merge with the Teamsters to form a super transportation union.

But Hoffa will probably be elected. He and Beck have evidently done enough groundwork to insure this. The 2,000-delegate Teamster convention now in session in Miami Beach, Florida, gave Beck a standing ovation after he emotionally defended himself, Hoffa and others against charges brought against them. The Senate Rackets Investigation committee has, interestingly enough, found evidence that some of the delegates to the convention were not legally picked.

What can the honest rank-and-file Teamster do when his union's machinery is so tied up by gangsters? They have their jobs to worry about. They can't be too active in seeking reform lest they lose their job or, worse yet, lest Hoffa's goons "take care of them." The union racketeers mean business. An acid-blinded Victor Reisel can attest that statement.

It's nearly impossible to expect reform from within a union where racketeers are so firmly entrenched as they are within the Teamsters.

The AFL-CIO Ethical Practices committee threat to oust the Teamster if Hoffa is elected will not have much effect. Hoffa has said the Teamsters would like to remain in the AFL-CIO, but will "go it alone" if necessary.

The prospects of a Teamster ouster from the AFL-CIO is almost more frightening than the corruption. If the Teamsters are ousted, the AFL-CIO would doubtless try to set up rival trucking unions. The resulting jurisdictional disputes could easily cripple the nation's transportation systems.

Perhaps it's time for more legislation to regulate such cases of corruption within unions. Unions today are very powerful socially, politically and economically within the nation. Yet they are virtually without the controls against corruption placed on other powerful private institutions such as the stock exchange.

Sen. McClellan's committee has compiled an impressive list of evidence of union corruption. The Emerald would like to see this evidence put to use in drafting future labor legislation. The unions have become too powerful in the nation to escape such legislation any longer.

RANDOM RAMBLINGS:

My Life's Ambition: A Meadow To Roll In

One of the things which I have decided I want to do before I die is build my own house.

I have thought a long time about this, and have reached the conclusion that a man doesn't have too much to hold onto in this life except liquor and sex and sometimes even sex is not a sure thing; and it is stupid to grow your own food, or make your own liquor to satisfy your other basic drives; but if you have built the house which you live in, then you've got something.

I am not a homebody. Nevertheless, I want to buy me some land, with a big meadow and a small river and mountains in the back, and I'm going to build me a little house out of cinder block with a fireplace in the middle, and I'm going to get me a bottle of bourbon on those cold winter nights and just get right out of my head in the house that I built.

And there ain't nobody going to blow it down. Snow nor rain nor nor'westers are not going to budge it at all.

And when I get good and drunk I'm going out in my back meadow and just roll around in it. (Hint to Freshmen—When stupid english teacher asks you what is a metaphor, you say—to roll in.)

I haven't decided yet where I am going to get the money to build it. Not only is life a constant search for a new place to drink, it is also a constant struggle to stay out of debt. Someone once said, "Work is the curse of the drinking class," and I am in complete agreement.

I am currently trying to get some money out of the loan sharks in the basement of Hanes Hall. They are very fine people down there, but they are definitely in a money-making profession; and they don't think that a little usury now and then is a bad thing.

I think it is highly unethical and almost a little immoral for a university to charge just as much to make a loan to one of its needy students as the downtown banks. But the University has the students over a barrel, because most of the ones who need the money, are like me—no-good, out-and-out bums who couldn't borrow a dime from the Bank of Chapel Hill.

What happened to the house I'm going to build? Darned if you know.

I've just figured out how I'm going to get enough money to build my house and also keep me supplied in alcohol for all my life. I'm going to set up a loan shop in Hanes Hall Parking Lot, and charge five per cent interest. I'm going right down to the Student Loan Office tomorrow and borrow some money to set up this venture.

Sometimes I amaze myself with my brilliance.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Enthusiasm Reigns, Playmakers Prepare

Gail Godwin

The other day, I was trudging along to one of my most "unfavorite classes" along with several other sympathizers who also weren't in any hurry when I saw a very inspiring sight . . . a bright-eyed Dramatic Arts major with blonde hair flying in the wind.

She was running, yes running, to her DA 57 class. Such enthusiasm merits an explanation. I found it, after talking with several of the Carolina Playmakers, from whose ranks have emerged such names as Tom Wolfe, Andy Griffith, and Foster Fitzsimmons, who is now on the DA faculty.

★ ★ ★

Kai Jurgensen, director of The Lark and member of the faculty had this to say at tryouts for the first production: "In my fifteen years here, this is one of the biggest turnouts and biggest amount of quality in turnouts that I can remember."

These people look like another great batch of future celebrities. They have a gleam in their eye as they give up a minimum of 13 hours a week working on the set, hammering nails, painting, building platforms, and practicing, practicing, practicing.

The costume shop is open every night going full blast until 11:00 or later. The same little blonde who speeds to DA class gave up the thrill of rush simply because she had to make a decision between the Panhell tea and the first meeting of the Playmakers.

★ ★ ★

This year's crop is viciously tearing down the old stereotype of the "arty, Bohemian, non-conforming Dramatics Major." One of the group told me, "It is the people who don't have what it takes that go around with ostentatious signs of their profession plastered all over them—like the amateur artist who wears a paint spattered blouse and caries an easel under his arm or sticks a paintbrush behind his ear.

"'Bohemians' are not condoned within the drama department any more than outside of it. In fact we all have to suffer because of them."

Besides The Lark, the Playmakers have slated Teahouse of the August Moon, and the very recent Broadway play by Arthur Miller (M.M.'s husband), A View from the Bridge.

It looks as if they are going all out for the audience this year. It seems logical that we can sacrifice The Outlaws of Oxcart Junction or whatever else is playing at the movies that night to see their show. After all, to go to Carolina and skip a Playmakers' Production would be like going to New York and skipping Broadway. And who knows? This crew may be Broadway someday.

Trustees Will Visit At UNC On Nov. 4

The Visiting Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees will be on campus throughout the day Nov. 4, according to an announcement by Chancellor William B. Aycock.

Any student, faculty member or staff member who would like to make a statement about any matter relating to the University may appear before the committee some time during the day.

Students may make arrangements to appear before the committee by making arrangements through the office of the Dean of Student Affairs.

Faculty or staff members are asked to make appointments by contacting W. B. Saunders, chairman of the committee.

The Visiting Committee will probably set up headquarters in the Morehead Building.

The full 15-man committee will be present for the annual fall visit Nov. 4. A sub-committee will probably return to UNC later for a follow-up to the Nov. 4 visit.

The Visiting Committee will be at State College Nov. 5 and Womans College Nov. 6.

Displays Are At Art Gallery

Twenty-seven paintings by 15 artists in residence or exhibiting this past summer at Cape Cod, Mass. will be on view at Person Hall Art Gallery through Oct. 27.

The collection, consisting of oils and watercolors by well-known American painters, was assembled last July and August at Cape Cod. Artists from all parts of the country are represented, and although the Cape itself is not necessarily the theme of each picture, the colorful New England coastal resort is strongly apparent throughout.

Included among the artists are Norman Barr, Jerry Farnsworth, Xavier Gozalez, Lena Gurr, Elliott Orr and Helen Sawyer—all prominent on the current American art scene.

Each of the works is for sale and may be purchased directly at the Gallery, which will be open to the public during its regular hours during the exhibition.

Reporter In Infirmary Has Only Praise After 12-Hour Long Stay

By ANN FRYE

I was there . . . there being the Infirmary . . . about 12 hours Wednesday.

Rumors had told me previously that unless I had an abnormally high temperature, I would be turned away. However, such was not the case.

I had hoped for maybe a shot of penicilin and then be out in time for my 10 o'clock class. The doctor had different ideas.

Dr. Lindsey didn't seem a bit perturbed or impatient, considering that he had been working with numerous cases every day. On the wall of his office I noticed an award for meritorious service during World War II signed by Secretary of the Navy Forrestal.

His work and attitude toward Carolina flu victims were not less meritorious.

The infirmary was full, anyone could tell. But the nurses themselves never once seemed rushed or even tired. In fact, they were cheerful and accommodating.

The three or four nurses assigned to our room took our temperatures three times while I was there, brought in medicine about the same number of times and "looked in" on us at intervals.

Some of the girls in my room ventured to summon the nurses without any misgivings. This was unheard of at a previous institution I attended.

Not only did our own personal doctors and nurses check by, but several interns came to the room for comments on our cases and later to make blood tests and take throat cultures.

The interns were as nice as anyone can be who's sticking you with a needle.

The only times the nurses ever "fussed" at us were when we began roaming up and down the halls with trench coats pulled over white infirmary gowns.

The food served was excellent and well planned for the type ailments most of us were suffering from.

When the doctors made their final round of the day, it was hard to convince them that "I have to get out."

My decrease in temperature, griping and much-expressed need to attend classes finally convinced Dr. Lindsey that I could be released.

Even he understood that nobody, but nobody, would dare miss a DTH 1 lab.

No Gold Digger!

Somebody goofed! And it wasn't us.

But as a result a coed—Margaret Starnes of Raleigh—came out in the Daily Tar Heel sounding very much like a gold digger.

Trouble was the printer dropped a line in her statement concerning what she was looking for in a husband.

Her correct statement was "I think the most important thing for a man to have can be summed up in one word—WORTH. And this has nothing to do with dollars and cents." ("nothing to do with dollars and" was omitted.)

PLAYMAKERS PRODUCTION—Meagan Stuart, as the queen of France, smiles affectionately at bewildered John Sneden, king of France, in the Playmakers Production of "The Lark," to open here next Wednesday. The show will run each evening at 8:30 o'clock through the following Sunday.

'The Lark' Opens Here Next Week

John Sneden, of Tenafly, N. J., and Meagan Stuart, of Ralegih, will appear as the King and Queen of France in the first production of the Carolina Playmakers, "The Lark", scheduled to open at 8:30 Wednesday, October 16, for a five-night run at the Playmakers theatre.

Sneden, a senior in the Dramatic Arts Department, comes to the role of the Dauphin having apepared in no less than eight of the Playmakers shows. He lists "Ondine", "Midsummer Night's Dream", "Anastasia" and "Androcles and the Lion" as his most enjoyable performances.

Charles, the Dauphin, brings many light moments into the Lillian Hellman translation of the drama of St. Joan. A figure of little personal strength, he gains from Joan the will to demand from the Archbishop a blessing for the army of the peasant girl. Calling him "Charlie", Joan inspires him with a confidence he has never felt before.

As the Little Queen, Meagan Stuart, a high school freshman from Raleigh, returns to the playmakers stage.

Tickets for "The Lark" are available at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard, downtown Chapel Hill. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Rocket Steals Show

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10—(AP)—The Soviet earth satellite was outshone by its third-stage rocket in American skies today.

An observation team at New Haven, Conn., reported sighting the rocket, which gave the satellite the final thrust on its historic spin around the world, at 5:23 a.m. (est).

Scientists credited the team with providing the first visual fix on the rocket in this country since last Friday's launching. Both the rocket and the radio-equipped globe it carried into the outer atmosphere are considered satellites as they orbit the earth.

Moon In Two Years

WICHITA, Kan., Oct. 10—(AP—Dr. Wiley Ley, New York rocket expert, told the Beacon in a telephone interview today that the army plans to fire a rocket to a height of 4,000 miles above a pacific atoll within a week.

The firing, he said, is a step in the development of project "Farside," which is designed to circle a rocket around the moon within two years.

The current firing is not designed to launch a satellite.

In a telephone interview from his New York home, Dr. Ley said that by adding one additional rocket unit, a similar projectile some day will reach the moon.

"We can do it in less than two years," he asserted.

Asked to comment on the Russian earth satellite, Dr. Ley said it was "a scientific achievement comparable to the first atom bomb.

READY FOR MIAMI—Phil Blazer, Carolina's 228-pound starting right tackle appears ready for any kind of weather, whether it be a University of Miami Hurricane or a fall breeze. Blazer and teammates will deal with the Hurricanes tonight at 8 p.m. in Miami, Fla.

MIAMI NOTEBOOK:

Tar Heels Go Straight To Work After Their Arrival In Miami

By BILL KING
(Special to the Daily Tar Heel)

MIAMI, Fla—"We'll practice immediately." Those were the words of Coach Jim Tatum after the Carolina Tar Heels had arrived here in beautiful Miami yesterday afternoon about 3:30. The Tar Heels went straight to the Orange Bowl where they will meet the Miami Hurricanes in a big intersectional game tonight at 8 o'clock.

When the team arrived at the double-decked elaborate stadium, it learned that there was to be a high school football game there last night, so Tatum moved the team to nearby Curtis Field for an afternoon workout.

The trip down, a little over three hours, was monotously eventful. The Tar Heels had a full course lunch on the plane (steak and all) then reclined their seats and read or just shot the bull as the tremendous Pan-American airliner made its way over the Atlantic.

Takey Crist, who always has trouble with air-sickness on these trips started taking pills before leaving Chapel Hill to combat that miserable feeling.

Teammates Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe figured it to be psychological so they started taking some of Takey's pills to make him feel better. It must have worked, because Takey survived the trip without a heave, pardon, hitch.

The Pan-American Airlines furnishes "passengers instructions" in both english and Spanish. When the Tar Heels discovered these folders, you would have thought they were on a Spanish convention. Everybody was trying to impress everybody else with his knowledge of the popular (B) language at UNC.

One of the luxuries of the trip was a progress report on the world series. Somebody had radio earphones up front and gave periodical reports on the game as the players voiced their approval or disapproval at the way things were going in New York.

It's tough for the boys to get away from quizzes even while they're cruising over the Atlantic. Such was the case yesterday when the coaching staff passed out assignment quizzes. The quizzes were drawn out in a standard lineup and each player had to draw in his specific assignment according to the number of the play.

When the Tar Heels boarded the busses which carried them to the Raleigh-Durham Airport, the wives of Ronnie Koes, Don Stallings and Paul Pulley were on hand to see their hubbies off. The three boys got a round of sighs and good-natured remarks from the bachelors when the goodbye kisses were distributed.

The Chapel Hillians are staying at the fashionable Shore Club Hotel here in Miami and it's really a sight to see. It overlooks the ocean and is surrounded by those famous Florida palm trees.

It was raining slightly when the Tar Heels arrived at the tremendous Miami airport and the landing was delayed by what the co-pilot termed "Florida's wet sunshine." It cleared up later, however.

It looked like old home week inside the station, as many of the player's families and friends who live in this area were on hand to give Carolina a cordial welcome.

Duke, N.C. State Prep For Games On Saturday

RALEIGH, Oct. 10—(AP)—North Carolina State College went under the lights tonight to wind up preparations for its Saturday night football game with Florida State at Tallahassee, Fla.

Coach Earle Edwards sent his squad through a general review of all offensive and defensive assignments. Dick Hunter, Ken Trowbridge and Tony Guerrieri did most of the booting in a kicking drill.

Hunter, Jim Sciaretta and John Lawrence concentrated on extra point attempts and field goals, while Dick Christy, Lawrence and Sciaretta worked on kickoffs.

The squad learned end John Collar will not be able to make the Florida trip due to an ankle injury. The Wolfpack will leave for Tallahassee by plase at 1 p.m. tomorrow, and return at midnight Saturday.

* * *

DURHAM, Oct. 10 — (AP) — A final rough session today prepared Duke for a jaunt to Texas and a football encounter with the Owls of Rice.

Trainer Bob Chambers counted out one player for the trip, and said another will be able to go. Left behind will be second string left guard Carol Jamison, who injured a knee in practice on Tuesday. Phil Scudieri will take Jamison's place.

Halfback Eddie Rushton, out of action since an injury in the Virginia game, reported in heavy equipment today and Chambers said he would be in shape for the trip. However, the trainer was reluctant to say how much action Rushton will be able to see in the Saturday night game.

The Blue Devils concentrated on defense patterns in today's workout. Bob Brodhead and Pryor Milner led the first and second units on offensive drills.

The Duke Squad, 45 strong, will leave by plane for Houston at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow. They are due back at Raleigh-Durham airport at 3:10 p.m. on Sunday.

Fencing Team Meeting Slated Monday Night

Fencing Coach Barrow announced today that the first meeting of the fencing team will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. in room 304, Woollen Gym.

At this time, plans for practice sessions, election of a team captain, and a proposed schedule for inter-team competition will be discussed.

All persons interested in trying out for the team and all returning team members were urged to attend by Coach Barrow.

Tar Heels

Diamond and Gary Greaves, junior tackles, are the aces of the Maimi line.

But Carolina is capable of countering in every department. The Tar Heels should be up for the contest after their two fine victories over Clemson and Navy. The Chapel Hillians are more confident and should not be hampered by "scared football" which they played against N. C. State.

The Tar Heels have proved their ability to run with the best, thus the air attack could be the difference here tonight. Tatum, however, has spent a lot of time during the week working on ground offense and the Tar Heels will give Miami a chance to prove its defensive agility.

Physically, the Tar Heels should be in good shape with the exception of halfback Daley Goff. Goff injured his shoulder in the Navy game and his status is undetermined at present. If Goff is not able to start, he will be replaced by Reidsville's Don Coker.

Along with Reed and Coker (or Goff) in the Carolina backfield will be Jim Schuler at left half and either Bob Shupin or Ed Lipski at fullback. Lipski will be the starter if Carolina receives and Shupin, should the Tar Heels kickoff.

In the line, Tatum will probably go with his usual starters which consist of Buddy Payne and Mac Turlington at ends, Leo Russavage and Phil Blazer at tackles, Fred Swearingen and Jack Lineberger at guards and Ronnie Koes at center.

The game will be broadcast over WRAL in Raleigh tonight.

The probable starting lineups:

UNC	POS.	MIAMI
Payne	LE	Corey
Russavage	LT	Diamond
Swearingen	LG	Wallace
Koes	C	Newcomb
Turlington	RE	Geatz
Blazer	RT	Greance
Lineberger	RG	Hayes
Reed	QB	Curci
Schuler	LH	Plevel
Coker	RH	Varone
Lipski	FB	Sandie

Braves Win World Championship As Burdette Blanks Yankees 5-0

NEW YORK, Oct. 10 —(AP)— The Milwaukee Braves won the World Series today by crushing the New York Yankees, 5-0, in the seventh and deciding game behind the brilliant pitching of Lew Burdette.

A four-run splurge, highlighted by Eddie Mathews, two-run double in the third inning gave Burdette all the batting help he needed. Del Crandall added a solo homer in the eighth.

The 30-year-old righthander stopped the Yanks cold with seven hits to become the seventh pitcher to win three games in a seven game world series. The last man to accomplish this feat was Harry The Cat Brecheen of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1946.

Burdette beat the Yanks 4-2 in the second game, and 1-0 in the fifth game, each time yielding seven hits. He blanked the Yanks for 24 consecutive innings also. The Yanks scored on him last in the third inning of the second game.

An error by rookie third baseman Tony Kubek, a Milwaukee resident, proved costly to the Yankees and starter Don Larsen, in the Braves' big third inning.

After Burdette had fouled out to lead off the third, rookie Bob Hazle lit the blaze by singling between short and third. Johnny Logan hit a sharp grounder to Kubek whose throw to second pulled Jerry Coleman off the bag. Coleman's relay to first was too late to get Logan.

Mathews then brought a roar from the 61,207 fans by lashing a double to the right field corner, scoring Hazle and Logan. Larsen, who last year pitched the only perfect game in World Series history, was replaced by little Bobby Shantz.

Hank Aaron, the mighty Milwaukee slugger, drilled a single through the middle of the diamond to score Mathews. Wes Covington followed with another single to send Aaron to third. Hank came home with the chopper to Gil McDougald at short. Felix Mantilla flied deep to right to end the decisive spree.

Burdette, a fidgety, 6-2, 180-pounder, simply annihilated the Yankees with his breaking pitches except in the first, sixth and ninth innings. In between the first and fifth innings he retired 11 straight batters.

And he ended the brilliant performance on a dramatic note when the Yankees loaded the bases with two out in the ninth. Bill Skowron hit to Mathews who made a sensational back handed stop and stepped on third to force Jerry Coleman and end the game.

It was the first world championship for Milwaukee and the first for the Braves fomerly of Boston; fourth run on Frank Torre's high since 1914 when George Stallings, "Miracle Braves" humbled the Philadelphia Athletics in four straight games.

It was the first time the world championship had gone to a Western club since Cleveland beat the Boston Braves in 1948.

The victory meant about $9,090 to each Brave receiving a full share. The Yankees' losing cut for each full shareholder amounted to about $5,710.

TAR BABY HALFBACK—Sonny Folckomer a 5-11, 180 pound high school All-American from York, Pa., will be starting right halfback for the Tar Babies Saturday night when they meet the State Wolflets in Raleigh. Folkckomer was an outstanding ball carrier in the Tar Babies opener with Maryland last Friday night.

Tar Babies Face NCS Wolflets In Tough Test Saturday Night

ERWIN FULLER

Carolina's Tar Babies continued their preparations yesterday for Saturday night's Shriners' benefit battle with the N. C. State Wolflets. A crowd of more than 15,000 is expected to be on hand when the fireworks begin in Riddick Stadium with an 8 p. m. kickoff.

Coach Bud Carson sent his charges through a long scrimmage on Navy Field, with every phase of Tar Baby play geting a close look. Carson warned his players that State has a very strong squad and that their game will have to be much improved over the Maryland perfomance to drop the Baby Wolves.

The State yearlings, supposedly one of the stronger units in the ACC and reportedly one of the most talented frosh groups to assemble in West Raleigh in recent years, dumped a capable VPI freshman eleven 19-13 last weekend in their season's opener.

Coach Bill Smaltz's performers displayed a diversified attack in the VPI triumph, netting two TD's on the ground and striking for yet another six-pointer via the airways. A Pekin, Ill whiz, Bob Wolford, termed by UNC scouts who saw the game as a "very dangerous runner", provided most of the offensive fireworks. Twice the 6-0, 180-pound left halfback capped long NCS drives with scoring plunges through the VPI forward wall.

The Wolflets, who employ the same multiple offensive patterns used so successively by the NCS varsity, also possess a strong passing game which promises trouble for the Tar Baby secondary. The final State tally against the Goblers came as a result of successful pass completion.

Anchoring the NCS yearling line will be a pair of top-flight tackles, Greensboro's Bert Wilder and "Tiny" Reynolds of College Park, Md.

Wilder received the Most Valuable Player award for his performance in the 1956 Shrine Bowl game in Charlotte last December, while Reynolds, who tips the scales at 270 pounds, is a veteran of service football. The Wolflets roster shows several other performers who were outstanding participants in the pigskin sport while meeting their military obligations. These service returnees plus the excellent recruits provide NCS with considerable depth at nearly every position, with little difference in the calibre of play.

Saturday night's skirmish marks the first meeting of the frosh teams from the two Consolidated University institutions for a period of more than five years. The Shriners in recent years have matched the Oxford and Methodist Orphanage elevens in their annual benefit contest.

Flu and injuries have severely hampered the Tar Baby game preparations. Ends Vern Hoyle, Bob Campbell, and Jim Hokinson, tackle Dick Benzio, and quarterback Russ Hollers all have had recent bouts with the flu virus, and all but Hollers are definitely out for the State game, as is guard Bill Schumate, who is sidelined with a knee injury sustained in the Maryland game. Holler's status has been termed as "doubtful".

On the brighter side of the Tar Baby ledger, two linemen who missed the Maryland game because of injuries, Danny Sofranko and Rip Jenkins, have returned to action. It is probable however, that both will see limited game activity.

The loss of Hollers could prove to be a devastating blow to the Tar Baby offense. Carson has named Skip Clements as a starter at the signal-calling slot, with Dick Detanna and Worth Hill slated to see considerable action. All three are promising prospects, but none is an experienced play caller.

Game tickets will be available at the gate for $2 each. Station WRAL in Raleigh will provide radio coverage of the contest.

Aycock To Be Installed During Colorful Ceremonies Today

By ANN FRYE

University Day today will be celebrated in all pomp and circumstance at installation ceremonies of William Brantley Aycock as chancellor of UNC in Kenan Stadium, beginning at 10:30 a.m.

The installation today marks the first such ceremonies for a Carolina Chancellor. Former Chancellor Robert House was known as dean when he entered the office.

University students and staff members will be enabled to attend the ceremonies. Classes will end at 9:50 a.m. and University offices will close at 10 a.m.

Many out-of-town guests are expected today in Chapel Hill, including North Carolina and University officials.

Governor Luther Hodges will be on hand to deliver the investiture. The oath of office will be administered Chancellor Aycock by North Carolina Supreme Court Chief Justice J. Wallace Winborne.

Television stations WUNC-TV (of the University), WBTV (Charlotte) and WTVD (Durham) will be televising the ceremonies, beginning at 11 a.m. with the procession of the platform party and faculty.

In case of rain, the installation will be held in Memorial Hall and the faculty procession will be eliminated.

Chancellor Aycork was appointed to this administrative post last February 25 by the trustees of the Consolidated University on recommendation of President William Friday and trustee committees.

A luncheon after the installation and a number of exhibits in various parts of the campus are being held in honor of the new chancellor.

The Law School is displaying Chancellor Aycock's legal writings. (Aycock was formerly dean of the Law School). A portrait and material on Chancellor Aycock is included in an exhibit in the Library, which is also showing selections from the Prestion Davie collection of early Americans (rare manuscripts and books).

An exhibit of the publication of Dr. Blackwell Robinson's book on the founder of the University, "William R. Davie," will be open to the public after noon today in the offices of the University Press.

The Morehead Planetarium will hold two special showings of today's presentation at 2 and 4 p.m.

President Friday will preside over today's installation ceremonies. Eli (Sonny) Evans, president of the Carolina student body, will extend greetings from the student body during the ceremonies.

Representing the Alumni Association during the installation will be James Webb. Greetings from the trustees will come from Victor Bryant of the executive committee, and Kenan Prof. Fletcher M. Green of the Department of History will extend greetings from the faculty. Duke University President Hollis Edens will represent the North Carolina College Conference.

A concert by the University Band will be held before the ceremonies begin. Both the band and University Glee Club will take part in the installation program.

Marshals for the installation will be Dr. J. C. Lyons for the faculty and George Ragsdale, senior class president, for the students.

Carolina students will serve as hosts and hostesses at the exhibits and at a luncheon around 1 p.m. today in Lenoir Hall for out-of-town guests.

Members of the Committee on the Installation of the Chancellor include the following: Henry W. Lewis, chairman; Prof. Richmond Bond, J. A. Branch, Sonny Evans, Dean James L. Godfrey, Prof. Willard J. Graham, Dean H. Arnold Perry, Prof. Arthur S. Roe, J. M. Saunders, Charles M. Shaffer, Dr. L. R. Wilson and Dr. Nathan A. Womack.

Carolina's Powerful Tar Heels Down Miami's Hurricanes 20-13

Tar Heels Take In Florida Sun After Game

MIAMI BEACH FLA. — It's quite an interesting experience to follow a football team around and watch it as it performs its tasks according to a strict schedule in preparing for a football game.

The Tar Heels have been following just such a schedule since their arrival in this beautiful and extravagant land of sunshine, Cadillas and Northerners down on pleasure trips.

There are many diversions here, especially along Collins Avenue where there are great [illegible] luxurious hotels and numerous nightclubs etc. The Tar Heels are being housed along this street (Shore Club) but prior to last night's game have not had the opportunity to see the sights.

One of the fallacies of a night game in a place like this is that there are so many temptations which must be avoided all day prior to the game. But the Tar Heels have followed completely the rules which were set for their own good so they would be at their best at game time.

As a reward win or lose the players will be allowed to spend the day here today on their own, and this is certainly a treat they deserve. Deep sea fishing for those who want it is on the schedule for today and many of the players have been anxiously awaiting a crack at the famous Miami Beach sea inhabitants.

Weather-wise, the team is experiencing typical Florida weather. The temperature has been consistently in the high 80's during the day and at this writing the forecast for the game is around 75 degrees with a chance of scattered showers.

As mentioned before, many of the people here are from the North and, as should be expected are getting a big kick out of the North Carolina accents. Some of the boys have made it a point to accentuate their accent and the Guests love it.

The people here have been greatly impressed with the team for their friendliness and its clean-cut dress. The Tar Heels don't have much Tar Heelia support on hand, but the northern influx and native Floridians have given them great moral support.

PILOTS WINNING DRIVE—Curtis Hathaway was the man at the helm of the Tar Heels mid-way in the third quarter when they made their final game clinching score. Hathaway sneaked over from the three after a brilliant passing attack during a 49-yard drive.

Team Plays To Crowd Of 47,166

By BILL KING
(Special To The Daily Tar Heel)

MIAMI, Fla.—Carolina's powerful Tar Heels withstood a strong Miami attack in the second half and showed an Orange Bowl crowd of 47,166 how football is played in Tar Heelia by downing the Hurricanes 20-13 here last night.

The win was number three in a row for the Tar Heels but Jim Tatum's club could never be sure until the final gun as the two clubs battled ruggedly on the verdant Orange Bowl turf here in beautiful Miami.

Carolina was apparently unbothered by the 78 dereges beat and the Tar Heels opened up a running and passing attack that was too much for the highly-regarded Floridians. The Tar Heel defense was tough in the clutches as it survived numerous Miami thursts, any of which could have changed the entire complexion of this thrilling gridiron battle under the lights.

One by air and two by ground. That's the way the Tar Heels turned the trick in moving into the elite gridiron powers of the nation. For Miami, it was a heartbreaking loss which could have gone either way. The Tar Heels steadily-improving halfback from High Point, Jim Schuler was responsible for the first Carolina tally and it came with 8:25 remaining in the initial period.

The Tar Heels backed the Floridians into their own end zone in setting up the first score. Fullback Bill Sandie was forced to kick and Schuler took it on the Miami 42 and raced back to the 26. Don Coker, playing for Daley Goff who saw no action, then busted up the middle to the 16, thus setting the stage for Schuler to shine. On the next play, the speedy halfback moved off right tackle on the quick opener and raced acros the goal line untouched. It was a terrific bit of blocking on the part of the Carolina right side. Phil Blazer added the extra point and Carolina led, 7-0.

The Tar Heels did it again in the second quarter after neither team was able to do much in the way of penetration for the rest of the first period.

The second Carolina score came on a beautiful two-play pass series featuring Emil DeCantis and halfback Ron Marquete who turned in perhaps the greatest game of his career. Carolina got possession of the ball on its own 22 and after Coker had gained two yards DeCantis ran wide and hurled a beautiful 43-yard pass to Marquette on the Miami 33. On the very next play the situation was reversed and this time it was Marquette who ran wide and pased to DeCantis. Emil gathered it in on the ten and raced over with the second Carolina score. UNC Neighbors Struck By Flu

RALEIGH, Oct. 11 (AP) — Influenza has struck four colleges here but the reported cases have not been identified as Asian flu.

The colleges affected are Shaw University and St. Augustine College, Negro schools, and Meredith and Peace, both Woman's colleges.

During the past week according to Dr. William Senter, physician for the two Woman's colleges, there have been 75 cases of flu at Meredith and 25 at Peace.

Officials at Shaw University stated their 14 hospital beds had been filled since the Sept. 28 football game with Virginia Union College when the epidemic apparently got started.

At St. Augustine College, 25 cases were reported this past week. At other Raleigh Colleges little or no incidence of flu was noted. At North Carolina State College less than 25 victims had been reported out of a student body of 6,000.

At all of the stricken institutions, medical authorities reported the incidence continues to increase and shows no tendency to let up.

At Shaw there was no exact tally of the number of students stricken but one of the nurses at the infirmary said it was "a large number."

Dr. Senter stated that girls at Meredith and Peace who live in Raleigh are being sent home in order to make room for oter victims in the infirmaries.

'No Mementos' Official Says

No formal presentation of the North Carolina state flag to Queen Elizabeth will be made at the UNC Maryland ameg according to student government offi cials.

An official ruling from the Chief Protocol Officer of the State Dept. is responsible for the change in plans David Jones vice-president of the University Club, announced Friday afternoon. Twenty six other schools had also planned to participate in half-time ceremonies.

Despite this change a large UNC banner a copy of the Yackety Yack and two stuffed "Carolina rams" will be sent to the Queen as previously planned.

The two UNC football co-captains will be presented to the Queen and posibly other members of the Carolina student body will be given the opportunity to meet the Royal visitors.

Attorney William McGovern To Participate On Forum Here

MARY MOORE MASON

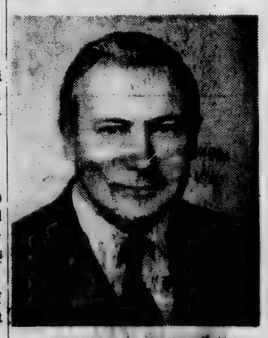
William L. McGovern, Washington, D. C. attorney, will be on the campus Oct. 18-22 in connection with the Human Rights Forums, sponsored by the Public Affairs Committee of the YW-YMCA.

The law firm of which McGovern is a member, is well-known for defense of its members in the recent Congressional hearings which have been concerned with human rights.

McGovern, a graduate of Yale, has also served as an assistant to Attorney General of the U. S. and the specially appointed Deputy Assistant Attorney General of Georgia for the trial of an inter-territorial rate case.

Edward P. Morgan, well-known ABC radio and T. V. news commentator, will visit the campus with McGovern and take part in the program on human rights. He will broadcast his program, "Edward P. Morgan News" from Durham on the evenings that he is here.

The highlight of the program will be a forum on Monday night, Oct. 21, at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall Auditorium. At this time both men will speak on "Human Rights: Their Challenge to America."



McGovern will lead discussion groups at 3:30 p. m. Monday and Tuesday on "Civil Rights and the National Security Program." These meetings are tentatively planned to asemble in Roland Parker lounges in Graham Memorial and are open to interested students only through application to the Y.

Applications may be left at or phoned in the Y building.

Miss Betty Carolyn Huffman, YW chairman of the forum, stated that these groups would be of particular interest to students majoring in political science, international affairs, history and journalism, and urged those students to make an efforts to apply and attend.

An informal discussion on "Human Freedom and Education" is planned for Tuesday evening, Oct. 22, at 8 o'clock in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Planetarium. Refreshments will be served.

Both men will visit classes on Monday and Tuesday mornings, and will make several visits to church groups. McGovern will speak at the Community Church on Sunday morning. He will visit the Canterbury Club's supper meeting that night. Morgan will visit the Wesley Foundation's supper meeting.

World In Brief

Missile Fired

MISSILE TEST CENTER, CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Oct. 11—(AP)—A huge missile, apparently the Air Force's Thor, churned up clouds of smoke and dust today and disappeared into hazy blue skies over the Atlantic Ocean in about three minutes.

The Thor, if it was such, is an intermediate range ballistic missile designed to fly a minimum of 1,900 miles

If this was a Thor, it was the second apparently successful launching of an Air Force IRBM. There have been five known firings. Three were flops.

Sputnik Believed Seen Over UNC

By BILL CHESHIRE

Sputnik — Russia's man-made moon — has been sighted passing over Chapel Hill, according to reports from the Chapel Hill Airport.

The sighting — possibly the first in the Southern United States — was said to have been made between 3:30 and 5:30 p. m. Wednesday by three amateur pilots, one a UNC senior.

The student, Bill Mudd, said he and two other pilots watched the object for about three minutes as it traveled in a southeasterly direction over Chapel Hill. He described the object as "a pin point of reflection about 3 o'clock high."

The other pilots were identified as Charlie Daves and Bob Barron, both from Raleigh.

Mudd said the object appeared to be much faster and higher than the B-57's commonly seen over the airport. He also stated that it left no vapor trail usually associated with high-flying jet aircraft.

He said he and the other pilots watched he object until the reflection of the sun on it suddenly vanished. All three pilots believed the object to be the satellite, he said.

Morehead Planetarium Director Anthony F. Jenzano said he did not expect the Russian moon to be visible in this latitude until early next week, possibly Monday or Tuesday.

He explained that the "moon" will be easily visible only at sunrise and sunset.

He recommended that "moon wathchers" use binoculars in preference to powerful telescopes, since binoculars provide a larger field of vision for locating such small objects.

Legislative Power Grab; Machiavellian Rep. Long And His McCarthyism . . .

Student Party Representative Tom Long has taken a subtle stab at freedom of the press.

Students will remember that Rep. Long became known last year for the original Long Resolution which condemned Umstead State Park officials for denying the use of park facilities to University Negro student Leory Frasier.

Apparently Rep. Lang has let his notoriety go to his liberal head, and now feels he can attack a basic American institution—an institution constitutionally guaranteed in the First Amendment of the Bill of Rights.

Long now wants to investigate the newspapers of other colleges: "Qualifications for editorship, editorial policies, and methods of selecting thg editor . . ."

It is obvious that Long is attempting to enhance his political prestige on the campus. And it is obvious that he desires that the Student Legislature to take control of The Daily Tar Heel's editorial policy.

Now what better group handle editorial policy? Just last week the legislature called off its meeting because only a handful showed up. And last night, Rep. Long's party had not even half its members present—only about ten Student Party Legislators bothered to exercise their elected rights.

Throughout the years, the legislature has held The Daily Tar Heel's funds to an absolute minimum. Perhaps this year, the paper will be cut off entirely. Then it could become a publicity sheet for student government and its subordinate—the Student Legislature.

We should like to suggest that the legislature appoint a committee to investigate the State Student Legislature of which Rep. Long is a member.

Long has appointed his roommate to the legislative selections, apparently with the ulterior motive of being named chairman of the Carolina delegation—through packing its membership with Long forces.

We detest Long's pomposity and his brand of subtle powergrab.

Perhaps this campus McCarthy bears a McCarthyistic investigation . . .

Spectatorism And TV's: Must Intramurals Suffer?

The United States is rapidly becoming a nation of sedentary spectators.

It is much easier to be a Monday morning quarterback than a participant in any field of athletic endeavor.

Physical fitness, we contend, is being sacrificed on the television cross.

Americans watch fights, and baseball and wrestling and football and basketball. And most will tell you with avid enthusiasm:

"No one supports athletics more than I. Yes sir, I pull for my teams."

But what about participation in athletics? Such participation is being limited to a specialized few—football players from Pennsylvania, basketball players from New York and Indiana and other athletes from other areas.

All this, while on the campus here, the intramural athletic program is constantly plagued by forfeits and withdrawals. A dormitory of 100 men can't field a football team of eleven players or a softball team of ten and so on.

One problem might be solved if the University offered some form of remuneration to intramural managers in the dormitories and fraternities. It's a full-time job. And it's worth some recompense—free room or board or both.

Athletics—to be trite—actually does help instill a sense of competition and fair play—if properly administered—in its participants.

Thus the intramurals program should be dynamic. And students should be yanked from their desks periodically—and from television's paralyzing hypnosis.

According to the University Intramurals Department Field Supervisor Don Atkins, "Response this year has been good . . . better than usual."

But Atkins sounded a warning note concerning a trend which always developes, the trend toward multitudinous forfeits later in the year.

It is our hope that the Intramurals program will considerably strengthen its program this year.

If The Daily Tar Heel has to field a team to help the program, then that may be worked out too.

America's physical fitness should not be sacrified upon the cross of spectatorism and sedentarism . . .

Modern Living: Number Two . . .

Modern Living in Graham Memorial Student Union has suffered a severe setback as a result of poor janitorial service and poor maintenance.

Offices in GM have been consistently the victim of fire hazards—huge piles of trash which have accumulated over a period of days.

And the fog-pulling, fast-talking politicians and journalists which frequent these offices have been denied refreshment for their parched throats as a result of a month-broken water fountain on the second floor.

The student union should have its own janitorial service, rather than having janitors appointed by the Buildings Grounds Dept.—which has failed to provide adequate supervision.

Parched throats and fire hazard trash heaps do not make for Modern Living . . .

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Democracy And 'Sputnik' And Satisfied Reds

By GANS

The tables are turned.

Once upon a time, not very long ago, the United States was able to publish the truth to all the world and was quite willing to back these statements up with demonstration.

The Russians at the same time had to fortify their propoganda with falsehood, threats and promises.

The case is different now. Russia is able to print the truth for propoganda purposes and back it up with fact. Granted that this truth is selected and taken out of context; yet, it is this very kind of propoganda that can most sway the minds of men.

It was reported by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, that the Russians, in describing the debacle at Little Rock, published the true Little Rock story. With no story, to show the contrast between Little Rock of Sept. 1957, and the rest of the United States through its history, the average Russian will get a picture of mob violence, of racist antipathy, of a governor who can for a time nullify the law of the land, and of the central governments forcing down the throats of unwilling citizens laws repugnant to them by military coercion.

No one in his right mind would want to say that this was typical of America, or even that the events pictured are in proper perspective, but this is all that the average Rusian would hear about the United States, with the possible exception of the Voice of America which they are told, as Americans are told of Radio Moscow, is a propoganda organ. Incidents will come up which will be harmful to American prestige in the eyes of all the other natives of the world and especially those behind the Iron Curtain. However, the responsible citizens of America must see the ramifications of their foolhardiness, before, not after, they act.

It was not too long ago when the U. S. could boast of its scientific achievement, and the Russians could only talk in terms of probability and five year plans.

With the recent firing of the intercontinental Ballistic Missile and the successful launching of "Sputnik," the earth satellite, the Russians need only to tell of these events and they show to the world a picture of power.

Moreover, they do not tell the world about the uncomforts of Russian life, so unless one listens to American propoganda, the listener will get a partial view of Russia—that of suceess in the fields of science and engineering.

Yet, if the Russians wanted to, they might publish the following account, which would be equally effective in the cold war: "Although the Soviet Union does limit political freedom somewhat, by being united toward a goal, we can and have produced more than the so-called free states of the world. It was through the sacrifices of the great mass of the Russian people that we are able to claim this accomplishment." The majority of Americans would see through the holes in this, but this is the kind of propoganda that wins over the sympathies of the nations that are fence hangers,

This too must be contrasted with the American propoganda of recent weeks, which talks of great plans while the two experiments of the Atlas ICBM fizzled. Moreover, instead of the unified statements of the Russian scientists, there are statements by James Hagerty, to the effect that the U. S. was not in a satellite race with Russia; by a scientist quoted in the New York Times, "Now the pressure is off," by Charles E. Wilson, Senator Wiley, and Dwight Eisenhower, to the effect that there was no danger; by various scientists and men like Stuart Symington, that the danger is at best very great; by certain Washington spokesmen that the U. S. retains the control of the lead in technological and scientific 'progress', and by other perhaps anti-administration spokesmen that the United States needs to catch up.

This is the propoganda dilemma that is confronting the U. S. at present. It is a dilemma of being able to counter the selected truth of the Russians, by prophecy, sophistry, and confusion.

The U. S. must again get it self in position whereby their propoganda system is a help rather than a hindrance. The U. S. must prepare itself scientifically through greater outlay of money so that it can meet Russia's challenge with the truth.

Democracy has a message for all peoples of the world. Democracy's must be clear, based on fact, and uncontradictory.

When it becomes necessary for a paper to print such articles as Thursday's "Random Ramblings" by Mr. Al Walker, it is time to pull down the shades, lock the office door, and call it quits.

A University newspaper is no place for a braggart to parade his drunkenness before the eyes of the public. It would seem that Mr. Walker was in this drunken state which he enjoys so much when he wrote, "Positiveness Accentuated: Drinking Is Fun, Fun . . ." I prefer to think that nobody who had control of his thinking capacity could or would write such an asinine article.

Apparently Mr. Walker is trying to be funny. His first paragraph relating his conversation with another inebriate seems to be pointing toward that goal, it seems more pathetic than funny, however, when a person is proud of a sense of values such as his.

I have no doubt, Mr. Walker, that you feel no twinge of conscience as you "rush past the people of the Salvation Army and other worthwhile charities." Your sole interest is encased in your "wonderful brown sack." It is a rather sad commentary on our society that charities need to station people outside liquor stores in hopes that people like you will toss them a dime.

Congratulations Mr. Walker. You did what you set out to do. You wrote something very positive.

After witnessing the past three football games at Chapel Hill, one connot help but note the lack of real Carolina school spirit as depicted in days of old. I will concede to the fact that Carolina has not produced winning teams in football for several years; however, that should be no excuse for the long faces and a bearly audible cheering section.

Even the cheerleaders fail to show the enthusiasm of a true Tar Heel. Whether we win or lose, the least we can do is not only show the team we are solidly behind them, but we should restore the campus spirit for which all of us have been so proud.

May I suggest that we begin by encouraging students and alumni to follow our team on their games away from home as well as at home. This should by all means include our band and cheerleaders at all games. The team is going to do its part, and with the knowledge of such support, I feel sure that it will restore much of that lost confidence of the team and coaches.

Heed you, medical students. One Frank Crowther, undergraduate philosopher and sartorical arbiter has decided that you are improperly and uncouthly attired on your sojourns uptown. My, my, boys, you shouldn't wear your whites, because in them you look pompous, and you are just begging for attention. Besides you are obviously very castrating to Mr. Crowther.

You say that your hours are long, your schedule is packed, your whites are comfortable and you just don't have the time or energy to change for a thirty minute lunch. Quite true, but that is no excuse, as Mr. Crowther has many friends, among them some doctors, a psychiatrist or so, and the infirmary staff. He even knows an interne.

None of them wear their whites uptown. What Mr. Crowther failed to mention was that none of his friends, except the interne, (who never gets uptown anyway) have to wear whites at all. But all of this doesn't matter, for Mr. Crowther has spoken and you should heed.

Of Dictionaries...

Editor:

Recently while reading the edit page of the DAILY TAR HEEL, I came across a word I didn't know. I looked it up in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary. Three different meanings of the word were listed but none of these would fit sensibly into the context of the sentence. I then went to a more detailed dictionary in the library. Two other meanings besides the three in Webster's were listed. One of these would fit in a vague sort of way, but this meaning is no longer used in modern English.

This made me curious about the other large words sprinkled generously about the page, so I checked these in the same way. Most of these were used correctly. However for each of these words there was at least one more simple and familiar synonym.

I don't pretend to know anything about journalism, but I always thought the purpose of an edit page is to influence the readers in making opinions. This may or may not be true in your case, but if it is, it seems to me the editor would use a simple, direct style of writing that is easy to understand and leaves no doubt about the editors position. A down-to-earth approach is powerful and shows conviction.

Pedantry, however, is an affected, easily-forgotten impotence. Or rather, an obnoxious sterility, ensensate flattery of the ego.

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Intangible Spirit & Satellite Fright

By NICHOLS

I'm curious about these reports I've been hearing of a rebirth of "school spirit" on campus. This phenomenon seems to hit at unusual times. The last time I heard any mention of it was during last year's basketball season. (You remember last year's basketball season, don't you? — 32 straight wins.)

It seems to me that "team spirit" (and winning team, at that) would be more the word for it. I've seldom met anyone on campus who really cared whether or not ol' UNC came out on top in any cross-country meets, soccer games, and the like.

Soccer, for one, can be quite a good spectator sport. It's got speed, teamwork, sharp passing and individual as well as team excellence. And, incidentally, cheerleaders, it has wonderful potential for cheering and like activities. It's no secret that soccer is the national sport in a great many foreign countries. Surely, it must have something to recommend it to such vast crowds.

I do not mean to merely single out soccer, but I think it is a good example of one of the "forgotten sports" here at UNC.

I was watching a very studious looking gentleman working in the library the other day. He was writing frantically with a faraway look in his eye; and, occassionally he would tear up a sheet and start again. Finally, after a long interval of inactivity, he looked up and I heard him say to a companion: "Hey, what's a good rhyme for satellite?"

USIS's Role Aired By Kendall Says 'Fosters Good Relations'

By BILL MERRIMAN

The role of United States Information Service in seeking "peace, freedom and progress" abroad was aired here Friday by a fromer UNC student stationed in Europe with the USIS.

Harry Kendall, USIS agent, spoke before a group of faculty and students about the part he played in fostering good relations with foreign countries.

Kendall said the people of other countries judged the U. S. by actions of any individual that they came in contact with from the United States.

"USIS oficers must be a Mr. and Mrs. America to these peoples" said Kendall.

The United States is a very big figure in foreign news and the people of other countries are interested in the United States, he asserted.

Kendall said a great deal about the Little Rock problem has appeared in foreign news because the people are interested in racial discrimination.

"This looks bad for the U. S. and it is my job to answer any questions that may arise about this subject, "stated Kendall.

A great many questions have been asked about the troops stationed in foreign countries as well as the moral conduct of these soldiers, he said.

Kendall also stated the U. S. must treat these people as they have always been treated and must adhere to their customs.

"You will enjoy yourself more and receive a warmer welcome if you take part in the cultural aspects of others," he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendall received a great amount of good publicity for the U .S. as they attended a New Years party at a Japanese shrine dressed in Japanese kamonas . The people felt more relaxed and willing to talk to them in such an environment, said Kendall.

"You have to tell these people about more than just our foreign policy," he stated.

"They are interested in the way we live and want to show us the way they live. You have to visit their homes and be a neighbor to them."

He also said he tried to meet and talk with as many people as he could so that people in all parts of the country would be better informed about the U. S.

Kendall said a cut in least year's budget has put many of the USIS staff members out of work, but they are making plans to have a fixed annual budget of about 180 million dollars. This would be sufficient for the organization to operate on.

Kendall stated that this foreign relations program works through newspapers, radio, television and motion pictures.

Kendall worked for some time as reporter for the Charlotte Observer and then he started his travels abroad.

Most of his time was spent in Japan where he and his family lived and worked with Japanese people.

Kendall said that his whole family represented the United States.

His daughter attended a Japanese kindergarten where she learned to speak Japanese and his wife attended many speeches and parties given in their honor.

Kendall said that his jobs varried from being a judge at a beauty contest to that of intertaining the governor on unofficial visits.

Heels Receive Team Telegram

Eight hundred seventy-two students signed the team telegram, delivered in scroll form and tied with Carolina blue ribbons, which the UNC football team received in Miami yesterday. The telegram was sponsored by the University Club.

The message read as follows:

"Do it again Big Blue. Toss Miami way out into the Altantic and let them sink. We know you will crush them and bring remains home in a cup. Feed what is left of Miami to the fish. So roll them down you Tar Heel warriors, we are behind you."

A year ago the University Club sponsored a team telegram to Oklahoma, one which was signed by 1443 people. The Oklahoma telegram was 241 feet long, or a little over 80 yards.

On Bridge

Of all the choices that a bridge player has to make The one that occurs most frequently, and where the wrong choice is made more often that anywhere else, is between 3 No-trump and 4 of a major suit. Making the correct choice necessetates precision bidding on the part of both members of a team. There are in popular use today a half-dozen conventions designed to aid in this choice in certain situations, the two most popular of which are the now almost standard Stayman over No-trump convention and the new and increasingly popular Jacoby Transfer System. There is not space to deal with either of these here since they are both long and involved and do not even try to deal with this problem in all of the many instances in which it arises.

The Bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
			1 NT
Pass	2H	Pass	3H
Pass	4H	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening Lead: H 10

Today's hand deals with the case in which one hand is "square" (4-3-3-3 hand pattern) and the other is distributional. West holds the "square" hand with 18 points, the upper limit of the opening 1 No-trump bid. East has 5 high-card points and 2 distributional points with his 5-4-2-2 hand pattern. East's correct call is 2 Hearts, showing 0-8 points. I repeat, zero, and his partner must pass unless he has a maximum. With as many as 9 points in today's hand East would have bid 3 Hearts over 1 No-trump, telling his partner that the combined hands hold enough points to produce a game in Hearts, but not neccessarily in No-trump. But in all cases a bid of either 2-of-a-suit or 3-of-a-suit over 1 No-trump announces at least two extra points if played in the suit named, and, of course, at least a five card suit. If this approach is used over opening 1 No-trump's, as it is standardly, then you may bid, say 2 Diamonds, with six cards to the 10 and no pionts, and fully expect your partner to pass, and the chance of making 2 diamonds is far, far, greater that of making 1 No-trump.

Back to today's hand, since West has a maximum and four hearts (he needs only three since East announces five) he can safety raise to 3 Hearts. East in turn has nearly a maximum 2 Hearts bid and if he is courageous at all will bid 4 Hearts.

At first glance the hands look like they are "fixed", but it will be observed that three of the Kings in South's hand could be transferred to North's and yield not one trick more.

Holding South's hand this department favors the 10 of Spades rather than the 4 as an opening lead on the probability that East is short in the suit and a forcing card may prove better. The 9 of Hearts is also acceptable as an opening lead since it does not in any way affect the trick taking ability of the King regardless of where the Ace lies.

The play is as easy as they come. East must give up a club and a spade, and if South never leads a diamond, then he must lose one, and only one, in that suit. The correct play in the diamond suit is to finesse the Jack and play the Ace Hoping that South holds the King doubleton. If the suit breaks 4-2, which is to be expected odds-wise, East's fourth diamond can be ruffed out. So the contract rests on the success of the Heart finesse. Oddly enough, when this hand was played on Sept. 30, only two out of eight pairs were in Hearts, and only one of these at the game level.

Dr. Abraham Widra, above, of the UNC School of Medicine, has been granted $15,000 by the U. S. Public Health Service for a three-year research project on cell structure and genetics of certain pathogenic yeasts.

IDC Selects 'Sweetheart'

Anne Miller, sponsored by Ruffin Dormitory, was crowned "Sweetheart of UNC Dormitories" by Tom Walters, IDC President, at the annual IDC dance held in the basement of Cobb Dormitory last night.

A bouquet of roses and a ten dollar check were given to the 1957 dorm sweetheart after she was crowned.

Walters said, "The crowd was very good considering the UNC Miami football game was broadcast at the same time of the dance." All students were invited, to the dance, though it was held mainly for the dormitory men.

Bobby Hass and his jazz quartet "a real swinging group" says Hass, played for the dance. Cookies and punch were served for refreshments.

Martha Fortune, sponsored by Everett, and Carol Tieslau, sponsored by Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, were the two runnerups.

He also said, "Thanks to Betsy McKinnan and her Independent Women's Council for decorations for the dance."

The only qualification for the beauty contest was all contestants had to be coeds.

Suhrawardy Resigns

KARACHI, Oct. 11—(AP)—Pakistan's Prime Minister H. S. Suhrawardy resigned today after 13 months in office.

As an avid sight-seer and affable talker, he became well acquainted with the American people on a recent U. S. tour. He was considered a strong link in Pakistan's American ties through SEATO and other pacts and principles.

After he quit, Suhrawardy's Awami league supporters promptly put on a protest march charging he was forced out. Suhrawardy resigned in a dispute with the five Republicans in his coalition cabinet over reorganizing West Pakistan into four or more small provinces. Suhrawardy opposed the move.

Queen Departs

LONDON, Oct. 11—(AP)—Queen Elizabeth II sipped a champagne cocktail tonight at a palace farewell party on the eve of her visit to Canada and the United States.

The royal family, British government officials and the U. S. and Canadian Ambassadors were there. U. S. Ambassador John Hay Whitney excused himself early to fly home and help with Washington preparations.

The royal couple leave London ariport at daybreak in an American-made airliner to Ottawa. The Daily Express said the tour would prove to be the toughest 10 days of Elizabeth's reign.

The British picture her as a goodwill missioner showing British royalty's new humanized look to North Americans.

As White House guests, the British believe, the Queen will invite President and Mrs. Eisenhower to visit Buckingham Palace. The feeling here is that the Eisenhowers will accept.

Elizabeth is due at Government House in Ottawa 15 minutes before dusk Saturday.

On Monday she opens the Canadian Parliament, meets with her Canadian Privy Council and receives VIPs at a reception.

She and Philip leave Ottawa Wednesday for Williamsburg, Va. They will spend the night there.

Fellowship Sponsors Study Group At UNC

The Presbyterian Westminster Fellowship is sponsoring study groups this semester in conjunction with other church groups and the YW-YMCA.

Each study group is limited to twelve students who will enter into free discussion of a topic in which they have a common interest. There will be a resource person who knows the subject matter well and can be referred to for information and resource materials and a student leader to moderate the discussion.

Discussion in study groups is to be kept strictly on the subject, and members have been asked to read material ahead of time in order to be familiar with the subject.

Meeting times of the following groups are subject to change in case of schedule conflict. Any interested persons have been invited to join the groups.

The following topics will be under discussion: "What We Believe" (Christian Doctrine); "Race Relations;" "Contemporary Novels and Plays;" "Prayer;" "Science and the Christian Faith;" "Suffering, Pain, and Death;" and a Bible study on "Genesis."

On Monday at 5 p.m., the subject "Suffering, Pain, and Death," will be discussed in the Nurses Dorm Lounge. Miss Janet Sutton is the resource person; the student leader will be elected from the members.

Of special interest to nursing, medical and pre-med students, the group will consider the meaning of suffering and the medical approach to suffering. It will discuss death, immortality and preparing oneself for death, as well as the practical implications of a Christian view of suffering and death.

Florida State Employs Moose

Roy Clifton Moose former UNC profesor and a founder of the Carolina Quarterly, joined the English Department of Florida State University this year.

Even before his graduation from Carolina in 1949, Moose began his literary career. In addtion to being one of the founders of the Carolina Quarterly Review of Literature, he was also one of its editors.

Upon receiving his AB degree from the university, Moose was awarded the Thomas Wolfe Memorial Award for fiction which was the third and last time the presentation was made.

After graduating at Chapel Hill, Moose, a native of Catawba, went to Oxford University in England on a Roary International Fellowship and received the B.A. degree with honors in 1953 and the M. A. degree in 1956.

At the present time Moose is writing a novel and is working toward his doctorate from the University of North Carolina.

Moose, in order to encourage creative writing at Florida State University, is interested in having a literary magazine established on the Florida campus that would be similar to the Carolina Quarterly.

Tar Babies Will Be Pitted Against State's Wolflets Tonight At Raleigh

Locals Hard Hit By Flu

By DAVE WIBLE

"We might not have 11 players but we'll be there." Such were the mournful words of freshman football coach Bud Carson as he looked over the list of players who can be counted out of competing against the State frosh tonight in Raleigh because of injuries or the flu.

The greatest team loss is quarterback Russ Hollers the team's No. 1 signal caller who led the Tar Babies to victory against Maryland a week ago.

A Tar Baby roster shows that there are five other capable quarterbacks to take over the responsibility but a check with Carson shows that four of these are also sick.

Henry Clements might be able to shake the bug long enough to play, but it is doubtful. If he cannot make it Bill Hill will be given the opportunity.

The quarterback slot is not the only one hit by illnes there are five members of the first squad who will be sitting this contest out.

Carson said that he won't know exactly how well off he will be until just before the suqad takes the field tonight. All in all there are 14 flu cases on the squad.

Bob Campbell, a 6-5 210-pound monster from Philadelphia and a standout last week is considered to be the greatest loss in the Tar Baby line. End Jim Hokanson and guard Jim Shumate are other first-stringers who are on the "flu list."

The Tar Babies are not to be counted out however. Spirit has been running high in the Carolina camp and the yearlings promise to go all out with the hopes of avenging their big brother's opening game loss to the Wolfpack varsity three weeks ago.

Carson hopes that the starting lineup will look something like this: At ends he has given the nod to big Mike Grendzy a 6-5 210-pounder from Chester, Pa., Bob Hawkins a 217-pounder. At the tackle posts will be Bill Crabtre weighing in at 230, and Joe Kulpa, who is five pounds lighter. The guards will be Rip Hawkins and Jim Joy. Holding down the pivot slot will be Tom Cabe.

In the backfield Clements is slated to be the quarterback with Frank Riggs running from the fullback position. The halfbacks will be Bill Welch and Sonny Folckomer, a stand out in last week's game.

The game is scheduled to get underway at 8 p.m. at State's Riddick Stadium. Game ticket will be $2 each. Radio station WRAD in Raleigh will cover the contest.

HEADED FOR RALEIGH—Pete Modrow, Jim Joy, and Joe Kulpa are three of the Tar Baby linemen which will face the frosh of State College in Raleigh tonight in Riddick Stadium. Modrow and Joy are guards and Kulpa is a tackle.

Fifth-Ranked Duke Favored To Top Rice

HOUSTON, Tex., Oct. 11 (AP)—Duke, the nation's No. 5 team, was a one-point favorite today for tomorrow night's 8 o'clock CST intersectional football game in which Blue Devils match their powerful defense against a Rice offense that has averaged 499 yards in two games.

The Blue Devils arrived today and found their roles as favorites had dropped from three points to one. Rice officials said continued good weather could push the attendance near 60,000.

Duke still has a star halfback, Eddie Rushton, on its injury list but is expected to start the same lineup of eigth seniors and three juniors a week ago. Rice is expected to start the same team that trampled Stanford last week but four Owls are not expected to see service.

Don Gillis, star linebacker and right guard who missed the Stanford game, had been expected to see limited atcion but Coach Jess Neely said today Gillis definitely will not play. Other Owls sidelined are J. D. Smith, a first string guard, and two second stringers, guard Charley Knight and fullback Dave Kelley.

Coach Bill Murray of Duke indicated Rushton, the team's leading ground gainer last season, may play. Meanwhile, Wray Carlton, the third leading rusher in the country after three games, will continue as Rushton's replacement.

Carlton has gained 316 yards in 54 carries while leading Duke to a No. 5 ranking in team rushing with an average of 320 yards per game.

The Rice total offense average of 499 yards, currently ranked No. 5, Duke has allowed Virginia, South Carolina and Maryland to average only 146 yards on offense. Stanford and Louisiana State averaged 215 yards against Rice.

Tar Heel Harriers Seek Win Over Virginia Cavaliers Today

By DAVE WIBLE

The Tar Heel Harriers, with one win to their credit against no losses, have made the long trip over the mountains to Charlottesville, Va., the home of the University of Virginia, where they will tackle the Cavaliers' cross-country team this morning.

The Tar Heels, the ACC's defending cross-country champions, won their opening meet last weekend against Clemson 25-32.

It was in this meet that Carolina's Wayne Bishop, running in his first meet for the varsity, set a new record on the Clemson course covering the 4 miles in 19:36 minutes, 36 seconds better than the old mark.

It must have been a good day for running for the next three men—two of them Clemson's and one a Tar Heel—were also under the record. The Tar Heel was Captain Everett Whatley.

Since that meet, the Carolina squad hasn't had a chance to make much progress. The fast spreading and far crearhing "Carolina flu" has hindered some of the squad from working out during the week.

The only member that it has bnocked out of competition though is Fick Authur who will not make the trip. Authur was also forced to miss the Clemson meet.

Not much is known of the strength of the Cavaliers, other than that they have three good milers during track season, Frank Bloor, Bill Farrier and John Hayden. How well they do as cross-country runners is not known. Last year the Virginia boys were the first to fall in the hands of the Tar Heels.

Making the trip for Carolina will be Biship, Alex Coffin, Doug Henderson, Pickle Hunter, Howard Kahn, Cowles Liipfert, John Reaves Everett Whatley, Joe Friedberg and Frank Sirianni.

Only the position of finish of the first eight Carolina runners will count toward the final tabulation. Cross-country is scored the same as golf, low score winning.

The next meet will also be on the road. The Tar Heels will meet the Maryland Terps Oct. 19. It was at their first meeting with the Terps last year that the Tar Heels suffered their only defeat of the year.

Unbeaten N.C. State Meets Seminoles Today

TALLAHASSE, Fla., Oct. 11 (AP)—North Carolina State, unbeaten in three games and ranked 13th among the nation's football teams, meets Florida State here tomorrow night.

The visiting Wolfpack will be out to equal a mark set by the 1946 team under Beattie Feathers. That club won its first four games as it posted an 8-2 record and then wept on to play Oklahoma in the Gator Bowl.

Florida State, after losing the first game played between the schools in 1952, has beaten North Carolina State four years in a row.

The Seminoles have a 1-2 record, having lost to Boston College and Villanova after beating Furman in their opener.

North Carolina State, which shares the Atlantic Coast Conference lead with Duke after victories over North Carolina, Maryland and Clemson, has the best rushing defense in the ACC and two of its top ball carriers in halfbacks Dick Hunter and Dick Christy.

Tomorrow's game marks the fourth straight on the road for the Wolfpack. They'll fly back home to Raleigh late Sunday morning and fly back to Florida next week for a Friday night game at Miami.

Kickoff time tomorrow night is 8 o'clock.

at mid-field and the Tar Heels walked off at halftime with what seemed a comfortable 14-0 margin. But the Miamians had just begun to fight. With a little over four minutes gone in the third quarter the Hurricanes' big three backfield of John Varone Sandie and quarterback Fran Curci had made it 14-7 with Varone Converting. The pay of play came when Curci hit Varone at the Carolina five and the big halfback bulled over for the score. The ball changed hands twice after that before Carolina was able to cross the goal line again. This time it was the Tar Heel's second unit doing the honors with quarterback Curt Hathaway climaxing a 49-yard Carolina drive.

The drive begn after Don Kemper had recovered a Varone fumble on the Carolina 49. Hathaway hit Marjuette three times. During the move the second pass carried the 14th point for the Tar Heels. Once again the two clubs battled Carolina to the Miami 18 and a first down. And the third moved the Tar Heels to the five. From there, DeCantis carried twice and moved to the one and Hathaway sneaked over from there. Pell missed the extra point and Carolina led 20-7.

Miami's final score and the last of the game came with 10:01 remainin ign the contest. This time it was the running of Sandie which turned the trick for the Floridans. Mami got possession on the Carolina 43 and Sandie carried twice moving to the 15. Varone then moved to the one on a cross. Buck and Sandie carried it across. Varone's kick was no good. The Hurricanes threatened again last in the final quarter, and it was then that Carolina's defense proved itself. Miami—the ball inside the Carolina 40 to 12 plays but—was unable to score.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

Bill Tyer discusses features of a training program for operators with Miss Edith Sanders.

"There's always something different"

"In my job, there's always something different coming along—a new problem, a new challenge. When I got out of college I wanted to make sure I didn't settle down to a job of boredom. There's never been a chance of that at Bell."

That's Charles W. (Bill) Tyer talking. Bill graduated from Texas Christian University in 1953 with a B.S. in Commerce. He went right to work with Southwestern Bell in Fort Worth.

How did he make his choice? Here's what he says: "From what I'd seen it was an interesting business with tremendous room for expansion. And a big feature with me was the opportunity to choose my location. I wanted to work in the Fort Worth area.

"I came in under the Staff Assistant Program for college graduates. I spent several weeks in each of the company's five departments. Then I went back for six months of intensive training in our Traffic Department.

"After training, I was promoted. One of my first jobs was setting up and supervising a customer service improvement program.

"In January, 1956, I was again promoted. My present job is assistant to the District Traffic Superintendent. My responsibilities include instruction of PBX operators, employee and public relations, and scheduling operators to handle calls to and from 185,000 telephones.

"No—there's no chance for boredom!"

Bill Tyer is typical of the many young men who are finding their careers in the Bell System. Other interesting careers exist in the Bell Telephone Companies, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Western Electric and Sandia Corporation. Your placement officer has more information about these companies.

Kenan Ceremonies Link Present Day And Old University

By NEIL BASS

". . . Over the years the house has grown, the cornerstones are many, the laborers and the watchmen have not striven in vain . . ."

Newly installed University Chancellor William Brantley Aycock spoke these words yesterday in a poetic description of the University's history and current trends — his installation address in Kenan Stadium.

The ceremonies were dual — a combination of the old and the new — a commemoration of the University's cornerstone laying in 1793 and the embarcation of a new administrative reign.

Upon the University's 164th birthday, Chancellor Aycock was duly vested — by Gov. Luther Hodges — with administrative authority over the University.

CEREMONIES BEGIN

Ceremonies began at 10:30 a.m. with music provided by the University band. The academic procession ensued, with University faculty members on parade in swaddling robes and appropriately colored hoods.

Invocation was delivered by the Rev. Samuel Hays Magill — appropriately in a dual role as minister and as representative from the Division of Student Affairs.

Following the invocation, the entire assemblage sang "Faith of Our Fathers," a connecting link between the dualistic type of program.

Greetings to the new chancellor were presented by Student Body President Sonny Evans, on behalf of the students; President of the Alumni Association James Webb, for the alumni; member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees Victor Bryant, trustees;

History Dept. Chairman Fletcher Green, on behalf of the faculty; Duke University President Hollis Edens, on behalf of the North Carolina Conference of Colleges.

President Edens, turning to Chancellor Aycock upon conclusion of his address, said:

". . . Carolina Blue and White has never shone more brightly than today . . ."

Consolidated University President William Clyde Friday presided over the overall ceremonies and made introductions.

Included on the rostrum but not participating in the ceremonies were:

Former Consolidated University President Frank Porter Graham, current mediator fo the United Nations; and Former Chancellor Robert Burton House, whose transference to the English Dept. faculty was described by Chancellor Aycock as the "transplanting of a mighty oak without the withering of a leaf."

OATH OF OFFICE

Directly ensuing the University Glee Club's rendition of "Integer Vitae," the oath of office was administered by Chief Justice of the N. C. Supreme Court John Wallace Winborne.

Gov. Hodges followed the oath with the official investiture of office.

Chancellor Aycock's address hit upon such highlights as:

(1) Enrollment: "Some propose freezing enrollment . . . our leaders, over the years (have) promised that every child should have an equal opportunity through education . . ."

(2) Teacher Shortage: "The foremost problem . . . is an increasing shortage of excellent teachers."

(3) Academic Freedom: "Academic freedom is freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of religion on the campus."

(4) Student Freedom: "Student freedom, like academic freedom, is an essential attribute of a great university."

(5) Liberal Arts: ". . . Liberal arts classrooms must produce the leadership to make of it an age of peace."

(6) Research: "A university is a center for both teaching and research."

(7) Extension Service: "A prime purpose of 'service' is to carry the research and teaching functions of the University to the people of the state."

Resources Termed Key To Solution Of 'Impending' Enrollment Crisis

By NANCY HILL

The University of North Carolina stands ready to meet the "impending crisis" in enrollment facing colleges and universities in the United States today granted it receives the resources necessary to "grow greater as we grow larger," Chancellor William Brantley Aycock said in his inaugural address here yesterday.

Citing the history of the University through crisis and prosperity, the newly-installed Chancellor stated that though some have suggested freezing enrollment at or near the present level, these forget "that our leaders, over the years, have taken our people—rich and poor alike—to the top of the mountain and promised that every child shall have an equal opportunity through education to develop his leadership qualities."

CITES TEACHERS SHORTAGE

Citing problems facing expansion of the university in quality as well as quantity, he said, "the foremost problem . . . shared by our colleagues in other colleges and universities . . . is an increasing shortage of excellent teachers."

"Teachers in this university understand the limitations on the financial resources of this state . . . It is sobering and disquieting to members of our faculty—and perhaps shocking to many of our citizens—that our salaries in general are dropping below those paid by some of the universities in the southeastern United States."

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

Concerning academic freedom, the Chancellor continued, "Academic freedom is not a subsidy granted by higher authority to provide intangible compensation to teachers."

He defined academic freedom as "freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of religion on the campus. We recognize and accept the legal limitations such as the laws of libel and slander, but we reject the economic, social and political pressures which would fetter research, publication and teaching."

"The discovery of truth is yet so far from the high noon of achievement that it must still have upon it the dew of the morning. It is our function to implant in students a standard pattern of beliefs and attitudes—even our own.

CITIZENS IMPORTANT, TOO

Aycock said that while the nature of technical training in Communist countries is very much the same as that in the United States, a great difference lies in the emphasis on culture. "While the Soviets train scientists who produce satellites we must develop scientists who produce satellites and citizens in a democracy," he said.

"Our dual mission cannot be achieved without academic freedom, and for this reason the precious attribute must be understood and safeguarded by all," he said.

"Closely associated with the concept of academic freedom is student freedom," he continued.

He said that most students here at the university understand the responsibility of freedom, to fail as well as to succeed.

STUDENT LEADERSHIP HIGH

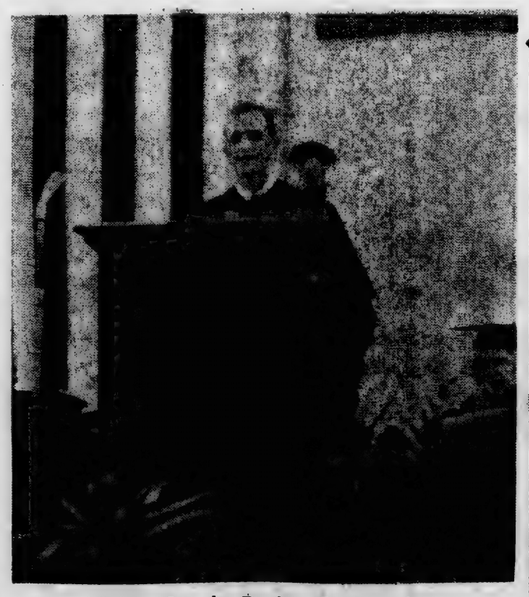
Critics of student freedom "too often . . . measure the effectiveness of student leadership under student freedom against a hypothetically perfect alternative. But measured over the years by realistic standards, the verdict is clear that the quality of leadership by students in this university is high."

Aycock termed the College of Arts and Sciences" the youthful heart of the university," in a day when increasing emphasis is being placed on specialized training.

"The scientific laboratories in our universities produced the atomic age. The liberal arts classrooms must produce the leadership to make it an age of peace," he said.

RESEARCH MUST CONTINUE..

Commenting on the need for increased research, Aycock said, "This university must have the specialized facilities which enable us to continue our search for knowledge and to develop a larger number of research scholars and teachers."



The Extension Division of the university is in trouble, he said, because the Budget Act of 1957 requires that after 1959 the division must be self-supporting.

"We hope that a readjustment in the new policy will be made in order that educational extension may continue to be a significant part of this university's mission."

Saturday Was 'Day Of Celebration' As Aycock Assumes Chancellorship

By JACKIE HAITHCOCK and BEN TAYLOR

For many, Saturday was a good time to get a few added winks of shut-eye. For others it was a chance to make the first trip home.

But for those who made it to the installation of William B. Aycock as chancellor of the University of North Carolina, Saturday was a day of warm celebration despite the crisp fall breezes that nipped across Kenan Stadium.

It was the hour and a half in a day when some 600 persons gathered on the south side of Kenan Stadium to celebrate simultaneously the 164th birthday of the oldest state university in the nation and the installation of a new chancellor.

It was a day when the 60-voiced UNC Men's Glee Club donned new dark blue blazers as they gave their rendition of "Integer Vitae" . . .

"He who is upright, kind, and free from error,
Needs not the aid of men and arms to guard him.
Safely he moves; the child to guilty terror,
Safe in his virtues."

It was a Saturday when the crowds, bundled in overcoats and fur pieces, were strung across the top and side rows of bleachers that customarily support closely knit and enthusiastic sports fans.

It was a solemn day—a day of respect for university leaders and educators when the university band departed from its customary reportoire of marches and fight songs and offered a pompous rendition of the "Coronation March."

It was a day when cameras clicked madly and TV cameras hummed quietly to catch the long line of prominent leaders, educators, administrators and friends of the university who marched in the accolade.

It was a scene of color, with the green of the loblolly pines, and the purple and yellow of robes contrasting with the gray of the skies over the stadium.

It was a day when university "greats" returned to the mass and the crowds. Dr. Frank Graham and Louis Round Wilson were among them.

It was a sound, with the words of Voltaire—"By what right could a being created free, force another to think like himself?"—replacing the customary "Give me a C—"

It was a light moment in a solemn day as Victor Bryant, a university trustee, referred to ex-chancellor House's career as a "mediocre musician."

It was a day when a man of many honors was installed as a new chancellor of a university—but a man who was different in that he was named an honorary Texan in 1945 while teaching at the University of Texas.

It was a time of exploration and reminiscing for those who made their return visit to the university library and law school to see exhibits set up especially for a special day.

It was a day of customary rush for Governor Luther Hodges who had to leave the ceremonies a few minutes early to meet another engagement.

It was a day of celebration, of variety, of ceremony and honor. It was an unusual day for a sports center like Kenan Stadium.

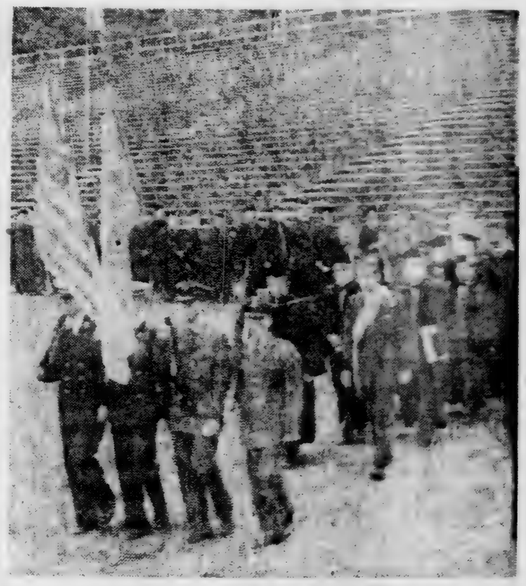
But it was a day with a Carolina customary ending as the notes of "Hark the Sound of Tar Heel Voices" sounded forth from the bell tower at the end of the program.

Asian Vaccine Expected Here

By STAN FISHER

The University Infirmary expects to have 250 doses of Asiatic flu vaccine by Monday evening, according to University Physician Dr. Edward M. Hedgepeth.

This vaccine will be available to students between the hours of 7:30-9:30 o'clock Monday evening.



Students arriving at the Infirmary to receive the shots are asked to report to the clinic entrance of the hospital. (This is the door ordinarily used by students reporting to the Infirmary.) The vaccine will be administered in the out-patient department of the hospital.

Further shipments of the vaccine are expected in the Infirmary periodically. Students will notified of its arrival by notices in this newspaper.

Dr. Hedgepeth has this to say about the arrival of vaccine:

"This is not a treatment; it is a vaccine to be used in the prevention of further flu cases. Persons having colds or flu currently, or persons allergic to eggs or chicken,

Genesis Of Progressivism And The Man At The Helm: Chancellor William Aycock

"If any man can convince me and bring home to me that I do not think or act aright, gladly will I change; for I search after truth, by which man never yet was harmed." —Marcus Aurelius . . .

"Ne'er look for birds of this year in the nests of last." —Miguel De Cervantes . . .

"Let us remember that revolutions do not always establish freedom." —Millard Fillmore . . .

. . . To perceive the educational needs . . .

Chancellor William Brantley Aycock and the genesis of local University progressivism . . .

Chancellor Aycock's installation address was not only poetic and warmly human . . . It delved into the deep, far-reaching crux of American University problems — inundating and swelling enrollment.

The Personable and Dynamic Chancellor Aycock said of enrollment:

"American education faces . . . the . . . critical problem of increasing enrollments . . . Some propose freezing enrollment at or near the present level . . . Our leaders, over the years have taken our people — rich and poor alike —to the top of the mountain and promised that every child shall have an equal opportunity through education to develop his leadership qualities . . ."

Chancellor Aycock has reaffirmed our faith in him and his progressivism.

The Daily Tar Heel has long fought against entrance examinations. We feel they impose an unnecessary restriction upon students from rural areas — like the chancellor — who have not had the benefit of a college inclined curriculum.

Such entrance examinations were instituted, we believe, to close University doors to the threatened entrance of Negroes.

Thus we are extremely pleased that the chancellor believes all students should have an equal opportunity for education's higher benefits . . . without discrimination.

The other impressive point upon which the chancellor hit was "liberal arts."

It has long been our contention that liberal arts curricula should never be sacrificed before the onslaught of technical education and technology in general.

Adlai Stevenson touched upon the necessity to reconcile liberal arts and technical curriculas during his recent address on the campus. And Chancellor Aycock has reiterated this point.

A tremendous start for a tremendous man of education . . .

Chancellor William Brantley Aycock . . . Bill . . . and the genesis of local University progressivism . . .

Nobody bothers any longer to say "I think I'm taking the flu." Now it's "I'm going to the infirmary. I've got 'The Symptoms.' "

What "the symptoms" are depends on the possessor, but everything from the sniffles to an upset stomach seems to come in for identification as Asian 'flu.

* * *

President Eisenhower said about the advent of the Russian Sputnik, "We are suddenly a nation of scientists" Where the 'flu is concerned, we seem to be all at once a nation of medical experts. The better informed among our "experts" talk about mutant viruses and 70 per cent effectiveness of the present vaccine.

But even as in the case of man-made satellites, the real experts haven't said much. The people who really know their business are quiet on both space and disease fronts.

* * *

There appears to be no cause for panic about the present epidemic, if such it is, of Asian 'flu, if that's what it is. In anticipation of the spread of 'flu in the United States this fall, Harper's this summer published an article comparing the prophesied pandemic with the 1918 epidemic. The outlook, by comparison with the severity of 1918 statistics, was good. The deaths occurring in 1918 were often due, Harper's said, to complications and not to the 'flu itself. With the advent of wonder drugs, the possibility of the development of these often fatal complications is greatly reduced.

Statistics on our present epidemic change every day, but the death rate due to 'flu is extremely negligible. It may be that when the final numbers are tabulated aud the facts known, the epidemic which people in the U. S. dreaded will have fallen far short of the mark which self-styled experts set.

According to an Associated Press wire story that came in Friday, the British people view Queen Elizabeth II's visit to North America as a good will mission intended to show Americans and Canadians the "new humanized outlook" of the British monarchy.

What is meant by "new humanized outlook" is anybody's guess, but the royal couple's 10-day tour is billed by the British press as the most grueling the couple have made.

They were due to arrive in Canada yesterday via BOAC.

Carolina is fortunate that the queen will be on hand Saturday for the Maryland game, but it's doubtful that students will be awed enough to cut on the cheers. Cheers are after all, part of the America she has come to see.

The Ivy League Bag Brown Birds: Bolder Plumage, Independent Pants

Gail Godwin

In Thursday's Daily Tar Heel, I was given undue credit for somebody elses' hard labor instead of my own insipid efforts directly above. However, in reading the column that "I" wrote, I came across an interesting piece of news about a future possibility of a mens' fashion column in this paper. The item went on to say, quote: "There ought to be a real hassle over who tells whom what to wear. It seems to me that it ought to be simpler to just design an accepted uniform as it is."

I was highly honored at having been credited with this priceless remark. It is exactly my sentiment. Now I feel that the duty has been thrust upon me to elaborate.

* * *

As to who tells whom what to wear, I have always wondered if boys dress for girls as do girls for boys. Upon this depends who should write the fashion column, a boy or a girl. Since I am writing today's fashion column for the gents, and since I am a girl, this will be addressed to boys who strive to catch the eye of the opposite sex.

Contrary to popular opinion, girls are not as gung-ho for the eternal stripes, pants buckles, buttons in the shirt backs, round shouldered look as everybody thinks they are. Personally I look twice at a man that dresses like a man. Conformity is fine to a certain extent, but when it gets to the place that you can't pick your boyfriend out in a crowd it is a different story. I would go cross-eyed if I looked twice at every Ivy Leaguer.

But when a square-shouldered (preferably his own) individual clad in a solid worsted suit and a shirt whose stripes dare to go east and west instead of north and south strides across my path, I turn my head to pay tribute to the Elegant Look.

* * *

Now, more than ever, men have such a variety to choose from. In this month's Esquire I saw everything from cashmere blend suits to raincoats with fur collars (Before you laugh, look at them. They are sharp.) There was one picture of a black and white check wool sport coat. I daresay if some Cary Grant-ish looking student wore that coat, he would be approached for autographs.

In the New Yorker Hathaway is advertising a brand new color—Devil-may-care Indigo. "This dashing indigo is Hathaway's protest against those wishy-washy shades that have become so deplorably common. We intend it to sound a clarion call for bolder male plumage," declares the famous shirt manufacturer.

And I spotted another full-page ad entitled, "Can Pants Be Independent?" I, too, would like to ask that question. Can they?

It is like an occasional breath of fresh air from the country to see feet in a pair of smooth fitting cordovan loafers—without tassels. To see a thick imported tweed, sport coat composed of colors other than tree-trunk gray and paper-bag brown. In fact, I think I will just go on back to the country. The men really dress like rugged individuals out there. Of course there are a few smart ones who have gone and sewed buckles on the back of their overalls! . . . .

Question: What was your opinion of the outcome of the World Series?

Harold Williamson — "Since the Red Sox couldn't make it, there was no team that I would rather see win than the Braves. I pulled for them through the entire series. Their victory was a great achievement."

Curtis Gans — "I am very happy about the outcome. This vindicates the wonderful support given to the Braves in Milwaukee. However, I hope that the Cards take it next year."

Benjy Seagle — "I love to see the Yankees lose. The Braves have done the impossible which is really wonderful. Watch out for the Los Angeles Dodgers next year."

Ron McCarter — "I liked to see the end of Yankee dominance. It was a healthy thing for baseball that the Braves won."

Sonny Evans — "I thought the World Series this year was great. I am always glad to see the Yankees get beaten."

Rick Von Biberstein — "I was behind the Braves all the way. There is no doubt that we will win again next year either."

Larry Summers — "I picked up a little cash on the series, so you can see that I was satisfied. The turning point was the fourth game. After that it was a breeze."

Albert Higgins — "The Yankees have monopolized baseball too long. Its a national pastime, not a New York pastime. The beer will be better than ever in Milwaukee."

Rand Bailey — "The best team won. Burdette's feat of winning three games, proved him to be a great athlete. It was the best series in years."

Don McCarson — "I have been waiting four years for this. Not only are the Braves going to win next year, but they will establish a dynasty similar to the Yankees.'

Charley Meek — "I am not a fan, but I love to see the Yankees lose. I won't ventura an opinion for next year."

Yardley Yodels & Gripes, Etc.

Mr. Grayson Mills:

When I wrote a letter to the Daily Tar Heel regarding an article you wrote, I had not the slightest intention of kicking off a verbal war. You seem intent on making a go of it however, so I find it a matter of pride and mild necessity to answer your latest remarks in Odes On Music, in the Oct. 9th Tar Heel.

I quote: "The reader wrote in true Jonathan Yardley fashion . . ." I, for one, have always found making insults one of the cheapest, trashiest forms of verbal combat, and for that reason hope that I will be able to avoid doing so in the following letter. I cannot say the same for you. It is not, however, the insult which I mind; it is the implied lack of either willingness or ability on your part to cope with a situation placed before you.

I wish, and many other people who have talked with me about our respective points of view do too, that you would have the consideration for your somewhat misled readers to make some manner of statement upon your own preferences in music. I have been very interested to note that almost all the particular artists or compositions you have given your blessing to have been things with great emphasis on the beat.

Dixieland is fine — at its best it is the happiest, most lifting music played. Krupa is fine — his big band, featuring my personal favorites Anita O'Day and Roy Eldridge, was one of the high points of jazz history; he never has had a musically satisfactory small group, save when a powerful horn like Harry Edison has joined him and overshadowed the heaviness of the drums and Eddie Shu's underrated but far from exceptional talents.

I cannot say that rock'n'roll is too fine. Where, may I ask, is your taste? I am sure that you and I agree that at times rock'n'roll can be very lifting. That does not allow it the right of taste. Is there taste in the monotonous piano behind the Platters, or in the Everly Brothers whining hillbilly style?

With regard to the above paragraph, might I reassert my firm belief that jazz must have taste. This is not to say that I want to put everything on a plane which would make it acceptable at a Westchester tea — it is to say that noise and inadeptness are not excuse for music. And it is not to say that taste makes the music. The Dave Pell Octet is very tasty, but the musical content is not always very lifting, and it is not always good jazz, deapite the claims of the Victor A. and R. man.

Finally, I must criticise your role as a critic of new jazz releases. Never forget that as a critic you are guiding the consumer habits of anyone who takes you seriously. I imagine that you are aware of the great influence a fine critic like Nat Hentoff has upon the readers of Down Beat.

Oh well, to each his own. I wish you would review Ellington's Such Sweet Thunder. I'd love to read your comments on that.

Ed: In the vent that this is published, might I have the good fortune to have a better keyboard job done? The last was a disgrace.

Tar Heels Basking In Sun After Third Win

By BILL KING
(Special To The Daily Tar Heel)

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—Normally on Saturday morning after a Friday night game you'd expect a football team to be sacked out in an air-conditioned room trying to rest a few of the bruises inflicted by the other team on the night before.

But Miami Beach is not normal and neither is a football team which has been here since Thursday doing nothing but living, eating and sleeping football.

Early yesterday morn. 9 o'clock in fact, this reporter stumbled down into the lobby of the Shore Club to get a paper and find out what time the Carolina football team would be getting out of bed. You know what? Everybody had been up for quite some time. Only 24 more hours to enjoy this and nobody was letting the moss grow under his feet.

Most of the players were milling around in the hotel lobby but a few brave souls had already hit for the beautiful swimming pool out back. Out came the old pencil and notebook for a few comments from the boys who played and defeated Miami, 20-13 in the Orange Bowl Friday night.

Here's what a few of them had to say:

Curt Hathaway (quarterback): "We had heard about their defense but it was their offense which surprised me. They were plenty tricky in that backfield.

"It really feels great to be winning a few and if we keep hustling, there's no telling how far this club can go."

Don Coker (halfback): "It was a great team victory. I thought our second unit looked very good. Its really great to be able to play with this club.

"We made lots of mistakes but our hustle compensated for that. Our defense was set up in a way that we couldn't stop their passing but we didn't mind giving them a few yards rather than letting them go for the big gains."

Mac Turlington (end): "We didn't play as well as we did against Navy and Clemson. The second team looked very good and everybody hustled.

"Miami has a good first team but I believe we beat them because we had the better second unit. Desire is the thing which keeps this club going. We make up for our mistakes by hustling all the time."

"Buddy Payne (end): "We played the worst game which we've won all season. The Miami defense was great. I just don't know where all those guys came from when we had the ball. Still, I don't believe Miami is as good as Navy or State and I think State will give them a tough time with that multiple offense.

If we play good ball and keep hustling, I see no reason why we shouldn't make it five straight. It's no trouble getting the boys "up" now. We've just got to keep working on little details to quit making so many mistakes."

Jim Schuler (halfback): "We didn't play as well as we have played. They were good, but didn't really hit hard. I do believe, however, they'll beat State. We got a little tired toward the end because of the heat."

Emil DeCantis (halfback): "We made up for it by hustling. Our offense was not as good as against Navy but Miami has a very good team."

As a parting shot from this resort center, this reporter would say that the most outstanding thing about the Miami game was Carolina's ability to hold the Hurricanes when the occasion demanded.

Time and again the Miami club penetrated deep in Carolina territory, but a stout defensive front wall made things a little rough for the Miami running and passing attack.

Certainly this Carolina team has proved itself a capable ball club both on and off the field. The Tar Heels have captured the hearts of the Floridians and New Yorkers and leave nothing but the best impression here in the sunny land of Florida.

should not take this vaccine. I can only administer the vaccine as long as it lasts."

It is too early to estimate what course the flu outbreak will follow, Dr. Hedgepeth said. However, the next few days will definitely determine the course of the virus and what further precautions must be taken, he added.

Students On Bridge

Today's hand illustrates the type of decision that plagues Duplicate players, but which doesn't disturb rubber-bridge players in the least.

The problem is: should East make one more effort at a major suit contract—or should he bid 3NT? Either contract can be made (with overtricks). The hitch is: which place will produce the most points? If E-W make 4H, they score 420 points. But if they bid 3NT, they score 430 if they bring in an overtrick. And 10 points difference may mean several match points difference at Duplicate.

THE BIDDING: Neither side vulnerable

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
Pass	1NT	Pass	2C
Pass	2NT	Pass	3NT(?)

Actually, when this hand was played two Mondays ago, most East-West couples were in 4 hearts, making five. (Routinely; they lost one spade and one diamond). They were beat by two couples who chose the NT contract and lost exactly the same two tricks. But top board went to the East-West couple who bid and made 6 hearts! Presumeably this couple brought in this contract by either getting the J of clubs as a lead or by developing a squeeze later in the play. (E-W won all four clubs via a marked finesse, five hearts, two spades, and the ace of diamond.)

Two things should be noted at this point. E-W would have the same slam in No Trump, as the cards lie, but neither slam should be bid. Any E-W couple making six would get a top, whether the aggressive slam is bid or not. But if there are only five in the hand, E-W couples bidding slam would lose to everybody—NT or suit contract bidders.

Duplicate success hinges on proper decision in close cases like the above.

The winning N-S couple on the above hand, incidently, was a couple which somehow held E-W to only four hearts.

The two-club response, by the way, is a conventional request for a 4-card major. West's return to 2NT denied a 4-card major suit, but did show a maximum 1NT opening. (With a minimum, he would have made the artificial response of 2D. With either 4-card major, he would have bid in that suit.)

Petite Musicales Commences Today

The Petites Musicales concert series, sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board, will commence this evening with a concert given by Herbert Shellans.

The program of folk songs will be presented in the lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p.m., and will include some 20 songs, many of which Shellans collected while on field trips in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Shellans is a graduate student in the folklore curriculum, where he holds an assistantship. He is chairman of folk music for the junior division of the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs.

Mr. and Mrs. Shellans are now living in Chapel Hill.

Square Dance Group To Meet

The Women's Gym will ring to the sound of "swing your partner" when the Square Dance Club begins its yearly activities.

The first meeting is scheduled for Oct. 16, at which time officers will be elected. The group now plans to meet every other Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the dance studio of the Women's Gym.

Richard Love, spokesman for the group, said the club is open to all persons interested in square and folk dancing. Purpose of the club is to gain interest in this type of dancing. Miss Ruth Price is sponsor for the group.

Last year's activities included an appearance on a children's program over WUNC-TV and an entrance in the square dance competition between women's dorms and sorority houses.

Love said tentative plans are being made for this year's club to visit other colleges with square dance teams.

Miami Game On TV

The film of the UNC-Miami game will be shown by WUNC-TV Sunday at 9:30 p.m.

This will be a showing of coaches' films of the game only. Previously games played in Kenan Stadium have been shown in their entirety by WUNC-TV at 8 p.m. on Sundays.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

No Hurricane Warnings

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Yesterday for the first time this week, there was no Hurricane warning for the Carolina Tar Heels. Jim Tatum's club had survived a pretty rugged gust in the Orange Bowl Friday night, but yesterday was relaxation time for the Tar Heels.

Only the memories of a gruelling two-hour and 15-minute battle against a powerful Miami team remain now, but for Carolina fans it was pure agony. It was one of those games in which absolutely nothing was certain until that final buzzer sounded the message that the storm had subsided — the Tar Heels had captured the Hurricanes.

By this afternoon, the Tar Heels will be back in Chapel Hill ready to begin the same familiar grind they have experienced throughout this football season. This time they'll be preparing for Maryland and thoughts of the Miami game will serve only as an aid to ready Carolina for Tommy Mont's Terps.

Bad Officiating

Nobody could possibly visit the Orange Bowl without being impressed. Its vast interior and double-decked seating is something to see. Truly it is one of the more beautiful stadiums in the country.

One of the biggest complaints about the game Friday night was the officiating. This writer would like to get in his two cents worth about the legal work. It was awful. This personal complaint is registered not for conformity sake; after all we won didn't we? But some of the calls which the officials made were down right assinine.

One thing that irked Carolina fans greatly was the feigned injury of Quarterback Fran Curci of Miami with seven seconds left in the first half. With Miami on the Carolina four-yard line, Curci fell to the ground in order to stop the clock (which he did). He then started limping off the field but turned around just before he got to the sidelines and came back to run the next play. P.S. — Fred Swearingen intercepted Curci's next pass.

Halftime And Majorettes

While the halftime show was not of the New Year's Day Orange Bowl variety, the Miami Band and 25 majorettes did furnish the fans with some good intermission entertainment. Miami coed, Janis Wadsworth, Miss Majorette of America, showed the fans how she won the title with some expert baton twirling.

One of the unusual things about the game was the fact that the fans filled up the end zones before they did the better seats. There were lots of empty seats in the house whose capacity is 76,000, but attendance (47,166) was good considering the other diversions here.

If you like casual dress, you'd love it down here. Hardly anybody wore a coat and tie to the game. Even the Miami band was dressed for the 78 degree weather. The musicians were attired in Bermuda shorts, white shirts and ivy league hats.

Traveling In Style

It's about a 20-minute ride from the hotel where the team is staying to the Orange Bowl, but the Tar Heels went in style with police escort and all. The policemen seemed to get a big kick out of racing along in front of the bus bearing down on the sirens, and the Tar Heels had a good time making book on whether the cops would make it up some of the more narrow streets.

There is a lot of speculation as regards to Carolina's ranking this week, but the prospects of making the top 10 don't phase the players much. Everybody seems content to play them one at a time and nobody is much concerned about how high the so-called experts rank this club.

Members of the press, especially the North Carolina writers, were delighted at the air-conditioned press box in the Orange Bowl. The box sits at the top of the stadium on the south side and the writers are provided with an elevator to make the long trip up.

Today at 12:30 p.m. the Tar Heels will arrive back at Woollen Gym, and it would certainly be great if they could get a warm reception from the student body. In case anybody wants to get the jump on the rest, the team is scheduled to arrive at Raleigh-Durham at 11:30 o'clock this morning.

Pack Yearlings Pile Up Early Lead For Victory

By ERVIN FULLER

RALEIGH — A smartly-prepared aggressive NC State freshmen eleven mashed Coach Bud Carson's dreams for a perfect season as they handed the flu-weakened Tar Babies a 33-19 licking before a Sudan Temple Bowl Game benefit crowd of more than 7,000 fans here tonight.

The Wolflets thrice in the first two periods capitalized on UNC mistakes to take a 19-0 lead into the dressing room at half-time. A pair of blocked punts and a short kick put the State yearlings in business early in the contest.

The game was less than eight minutes old when the Wolflets scored their first six-pointer. Giant tackle Dick Reynolds broke through the UNC line to smear quarterback Russ Hollers attempting to punt after a long kick and a 15-yard clipping penalty had set the Tar Babies back on their own 7-yard line, and his running mate at the other tackle slot, Bert Wilder, covered the loose pigsskin in the Carolina end zone for the NCS TD.

State scored again with 1:13 remaining in the initial period when quarterback Ron Wojcicki connected with flankman Larry Gill for an eight-yard scoring heave. The toss culminated a drive which began on the Carolina 43 when UNC signal caller Skip Clement punted out of bounds at that point. The drive required 11 plays, with backs Baker, Harden and Leech accounting for most of the yardage.

UNC end Mike Greenday halted a deep State penetration into Carolina territory midway in the second period when he snagged a stray State aerial on the Carolina three-yard stripe, but the Wolflets came back moments later when fullback Jim D'Antonio bulled his way over from the Carolina five after a pass completion in a fourth and nine situation had kept the State drive moving. The clock showed 3:11 when D'Antonio's plunge gave State a 19-0 lead.

After intermission, the Wolflets came back strong to add two more markers before allowing the Tar Babies to score. They marched 75 yards with the second-half kickoff for their fourth touchdown.

This opening drive featured both sharp passing and elusive running, with Mike Delnegro slicing over guard from six yards out for the TD. Woller, D'Antonio, Gibson and Delnegro all made vital contributions to keep the drive moving.

Late in the third period State returned a short UNC boot to the Carolina 25, from whence they moved in five plays for their final marker of the evening.

End Larry Gill grabbed a jump-pass good for 12-yards for the largest single gainer in this series and Cackovic plunged for the score after an illegal procedure penalty had moved the pigskin to the UNC 1-yard marker.

Only in the final period did the Tar Babies display the form which produced a 14-7 victory over Maryland last wek. Three times in the last 15 minutes the UNC yearlings crossed the goal-line, but by this time State mentor Bill Smaltz's regulars had built up a sufficient cushion and State reserves were in the contest.

The initial Tar Baby scoring drive began on their own 34 and ended with "Moe" Smith scoring on a drive through the middle from seven yards out. Folckomer, Hollers and Riggs came up with fine runs to aid Smith and boost the sagging Carolina offense.

Harriers Win Virginia Meet

The Carolina cross-country team came through with its second victory in as many meets yesterday afternoon when they outran the Virginia Cavaliers 21-37 on the Virginia home course.

Tar Heel Wayne Bishop was again the pace setter for the defending conference champions, finishing about 250 yards ahead of the second place man, Tar Heel captain, Everett Whatley.

Bishop's time for the run proved to be the second best on the course. Jim Beatty, Carolina's All-American runner for the past two years, set the record time of 18:59.4 at the conference championships held at Virginia last fall. . . . .

Carolina was without two of their fine runners at the meet yesterday. Dave Scurlock and Fick Authur did not make the trip because of colds. It is expected that they will be in top shape for the Maryland meet next weekend.

Coach Dale Ranson was very pleased with the performances of his charges. "They did a real good job, and I am very pleased with the teams continued improvement. We hope to reach a peak next week when we run against Maryland," the Carolina mentor said.

The Tar Heels have been pointing for the Maryland meet all season. The Terps take cross-country very seriously and always have a strong team. Last year the Maryland harriers, in the first meet with the Tar Heels, came out on the small end of the score which in cross country means that they won.

The Maryland run will be at Maryland next Saturday.

The Summary

Bishop (UNC), 19:18; Whatley (UNC), 20:05; Lilpfert (UNC), 20:19; Farrier (V), 20:24; Bloor (V), 20:37; Havens (V) 20:47; Kahn (UNC) 20:49; Coffin (UNC) 21:22; Sabanosh (V), 21:51; Reaves (UNC), 21:56; Hunter (UNC), 22:17; Henderson (UNC), 22:21; Webster (V), 22:30; Perkins (V), 22:58; Velle (V), 23:48.

Baseballers To End Workouts With Practice Session Monday

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Fall practice officially ends tomorrow afternoon for Carolina's baseballers, at which time pictures of the team members will be made. In addition to the still photos, action shots of several members of the pitching staff are on tap.

Coach Walt Rabb has requested all individuals who participated in the fall workouts to attend this afternoon's session. Equipment will be due at the close of the activities.

Rabb described fall practice as "a definite success." He has been especially pleased with the progress his hurlers have made. He feels the time and effort spent in correcting pitching faults will pay off in improved performances next spring.

Rabb termed the squad as a whole as "considerably improved" as the result of the drills. For the past several days, the majority of each practice session has been consumed with intersquad games, providing the coaching staff with the opportunity to give individual instruction in ironing out weaknesses.

The baseball mentor is high in his praise of junior pitchers Ben Harding and Ben Hammett. He is counting on these two, plus soph Wayne Young, to bear the brunt of the pitching load next spring. A pair of freshman twirlers, Bob Deaton and Jerry McNeil, has also impressed Rabb.

The Tar Heel coach faces a big rebuilding job, for personnel losses due to graduation and other factors were very heavy. Last spring's UNC nine finished in the runner-up slot behind powerful Duke in ACC competition.

Swimming

All persons interested in varsity or freshmen swimming are asked to meet with Coach Pat Earey Monday in room 304 Woollen Gym at 4 p.m. No past experience is necessary.

THE LITTLE SAVER

Among America's great savers, George T. Coffee is a legend. One day, George discovered that by going to sleep with his shoes on, he could save a full 60 seconds dressing in the morning. Multiplying this by 365 days—gave him over 6 hours saved per year. Then, multiplying this by 8 years—gave him 48 hours—or two full days saved! George was giddy. "Think of it," he mused. "Two full days saved to do anything . . . read, sleep or go to Europe!"

Another time, George passed a store that advertised "Save $50 When You Buy These $100 Suits!" George immediately saw the fantastic opportunity . . . realizing that he could save $100 by not buying any of these suits. Thereupon, he proceeded not to buy ten suits and rolled up a tidy $1,000 in a few seconds.

However, the best saving George ever did by far—was when he happened on the Van Heusen Vantage Shirt. Vantage is a shirt you don't have to iron . . . so you save on laundry bills. Wash it—hang it up to dry—that's all. "So what," you sneer, "aren't there other shirts that can do the same thing?" "Mebbe," we sneer, "but Vantage is a cotton shirt—with all of cotton's natural softness, porosity and comfort. And it only costs $5!"

Men—grab a pencil in your fist. Figure out your laundry bill for shirts for a year. Then figure out the price for seven Vantage shirts. You'll find that Vantage shirts actually pay for themselves in the laundry bills you save! See you at the bank.

P.S. You can also save yourself the trouble of searching for lost collar-stays. For Vantage shirts have Collarite sewn-in stays which can't get lost, keep the collar neat, always.

news brief

Arkansas Session

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., Oct. 14 (AP)—Gov. Arval Faubus said today that he definitely plans to call a special session of the Arkansas Legislature to deal with the racial integration problem at Little Rock Central High School.

Faubus said that the only question was the time. He would not speculate when he would issue the call.

"It won't be anything hasty," he said.

One solution which the legislature may consider, he said, is action similar to that of the Florida Legislature in setting up legal machinery for the closing of any school which is integrated by the force of federal troops.

Sputnik Exchange

Washington, Oct. 14 (AP)—A Russian-American agreement to exchange satellite information was disclosed today, while U. S. moonwatchers got one of their best looks yet at Russia's Sputnik Rocket.

A team of the Smithsonian Observatory at Cambridge,Mass., was able to train telescopes and cameras for about a minute on the rocket, which fired the Red satel ilite into space Oct. 4 and then took off around the world on its own.

The team did not spot the satellite, believed a few minutes behind the rocket itself.

Hodges Says No

Luther H. Hodges of North Carolina denied here today that he had been authorized by the Southern Governors Committee to contact Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas again in hopes of settling the stalemated situation at Little Rock.

Hodges, one of the four southern Governors who conferred recently with President Eisenhower about a settlement of the Little Rock crisis, asserted "there are no plans at the moment" to confer with the Arkansas Governor.

Hodges' comments were made on the NBC-TV show "Today." The Tar Heel Governor is in New York with a delegation of North Carolina officials to seek new industry for that state.

No Open House

Open houses in all sororities, scheduled for tonight, have been postponed indefinitely upon advice of University Physician Dr. McG. Hedgpeth. The Daily Tar Heel was informed last night

There was no definite confirmation by Dr. Hedgpeth, who said he merely advised such action.

AMANDA MEIGGS as Anitra, the Greenclad, left, is shown as she appeared in last year's production of "Peer Gynt" and as she will appear as Joan of Arc in the current presentation of "The Lark," which opens tomorrow evening at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre.

Symposium Bill's Fate Undecided; Student Leaders Refuse Comment

Amanda Meiggs Stars In Playmaker Production

When the curtain rises tomorrow evening at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre, audiences will witness a most unusual transformation in Amanda Meiggs playing the leading role of Saint Joan in Lillian Hellman's "The Lark."

The last time Tar Heel theatregoers saw Amanda on stage, she appeared as the Greenclad in the Forest Theatre production of "Peer Gynt." Miss Meiggs brought to the role of Anitra, the Greenclad, a tremendous energy and excitement, dancing her way through a sensous characterization.

Called "exhuberant" by reviewers as the seductress Anitra, she employs this quality in her interpretation of Joan.

"The exhuberance of Joan is of a different nature, however," says Miss Meiggs. She described it as a spiritual excitement which comes from with the character herself. "Nor must we forget the earthy qualities of Joan, for she never loses touch with reality.

"She is a defiant, determined girl inspired with a divine purpose, but she still has time to laugh with her countryman, La Hire; to learn cards at the hand of Charles VII, King of France; and to cajole the King into giving her an army to fight the British."

A difficult and intriguing change, it will be interesting to watch the performance tomorrow evening and compare the two women for whom Miss Meiggs will be remembered on the Carolina campus.

"The Lark," which runs through Sunday in the Playmakers Theatre, is the first in the series of dramatic presentations rendered by the playmaking group.

Tickets for the five evening performances are available at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Flu Causes Stoppage Of Phys. Ed

An increase in the number of casualities to the "slant-eyed monster," Asian flu, has rsulted in the cancellation of the required physical education program and the intra murals program, it was announced today by University Physician Dr. Edward M. Hedgepeth.

Infirmary physicans have termed the outbreak an eipdemic as far as the number of persons being treating between 250 and 300 cases per day.

Contrary to campus rumors, there is no definite temperature at which victims are retained in the infirmary. It is left to the individual case and the discretion of infirmary officials.

Non More Vaccine

Flu vaccine was dispensed last night at the infirmary and further "flu clinics" will be held as more vaccine arives. Dr. Hedgepeth stresses the fact that no one currently sick with colds or flu, or persons allergic to eggs or chicken should take this vaccine.

At this point in the outbreak there has been no oficial word about closing school, according to Dr. Hedgepeth.

Dr. Hedgepeth has this to say about the present stage of the flu outbreak:

"I though it would be wise to call off all physical education classes and intra-murals for the remainder of this week. We will have a notice in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel as to next week's situation concerning physical education classes and intra-murals."

Dr. Hedgepeth added that he doubts, but does not entirely rule out, the possibility that practicing doctors in Chapel Hill might have a stock of asian flu vaccine at the present time.

Introducer, Others Request No Publicity Till Legislature Meets

By NEIL BASS and MARY LEGGETT BROWNING

There is overt dissention among student government officials as to the handling of student funds.

Last Thursday night, University Party legislators Jerry Oppenheimer and Al Goldsmith introduced a bill allowing the Carolina Symposium to keep legislative appropriations in the Bank of Chapel Hill, separate from the Student Activities Fund.

Student government statute BW-22-49 requires that organizations receiving legislative appropriations handle their allocations through the Student Activities office.

Student Body Vice President Don Furtado, speaker of the Student Legislature, left his desk Thursday night to assail the bill. Furtado hit at the "precedent" being established. He pointed out that student funds should be under direct student government supervision.

Yesterday, Furtado reiterated his sentiments in a statement to The Daily Tar Heel. Later he withdrew his statement by saying the matter would be worked out later without comment at this time.

Introducers of the bill, Oppenheimer and Goldsmith, paid a visit to The Daily Tar Heel offices during this period, along with Carolina Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford.

Hallford, Goldsmith and Oppenheimer requested that no publicity be issued until later. The delegation said negotiations were presently under way toward solving the controversy, and that publicity at this time would be detrimental to the arrangement.

The delegation moved to student government offices for a talk with Student Body President Sonny Evans. Evans called Speaker Furtado. And Furtado later withdrew his previous statement.

There was talk in student government offices of a presidential veto of the bill enabling separate funds handling by Symposium officials.

Later, Co-Introducer Oppenheimer entered The Daily Tar Heel offices to say that there were no statements from student government or from the Carolina Symposium, and that all previous statements had been canceled.

Symposium Chairman Hallford had previously said he wanted the matter to remain quiet for a while for fear the controversy would create the impression that the Carolina Symposium and student government would appear in direct disagreement.

Symposium funds were handled separately last year, according to Hallford. And last Thursday night's bill was introduced purely to make the transactions legal, he said.

President Evans has as yet failed to sign the enabling bill and the possibility exists that the measure will die of a pocket veto—failure of the president to sign the measure within the constitutionally stipulated ten-day period.

Marine Corps Representatives Here Today

The Marine Corps announced today that representatives from the Marine Officer Procurement Office, located in Raleigh, will be on campus Oct. 15 and 16 to talk to students interested in obtaining a commission in the Marine Corps.

College men may earn a commission in the Marine Corps while attending college, through the Platoon Leaders Class Program. The PLC, as it is better known, requires no special or additional courses while in college since training takes place during two summer vacations. Men enrolled in this program are commissioned upon graduation from college.

Future Phi Betes Working Harder For Their Keys Now

By ANN FRYE

Future Phi Betes now are working harder for their keys here.

Requirements for membership in Phi Beta Kappa, revised last February by the executive committee of the UNC Chapter, technically went into effect September of this

Under a new quality point basis, requirements for junior membership is 2.6; senior, 2.3; and transfer, 2.4 or 2.5.

In announcing the new eligibility requirements, Dean of Awards Ernest L. Mackie said that not since the establishment of the UNC Phi Beta Kappa Chapter in 1904 has there been any material change in membership requirements.

Briefly, the changes in the by-laws are as follows: 1. Juniors, 75 semester hours completed here with a quality point average of 2.6. ("A" carries three quality points, "B" two quality points, "C" one quality point, "D" zero quality points, and "F" carries minus four quality points.)

2. Seniors 105 semester hours completed here with a quality point average of 2.3.

3. Transfer students, with advanced standing of more than one but less than four semesters, 75 semester hours completed here with a quality point average of 2.4; or with advanced standing of four semester, the candidate must have completed at least 45 semester hours here with a quality point average of 2.5 and be registered for the fourth semester.

General regulations in addition to those above: a grade of "F" made after the freshman year here or at a previous instution renders a student ineligible, and in computing averages, required courses in hygiene and physical education are not included.

In determining the eligibility of transfer students, no grades made at the previous institution shall be included, except an "F" made during the freshman year which carries a penalty of minus four quality points. Any other "F" after freshman year automatically makes the student ineligible.

Under the old by-laws, five semesters of full time work were required with a minimum average of "B" for a student to become eligible as a junior, (with "A" evaluated as 97.5, "B" as 92.5, "C" as 85 and "D" as 75).

When the University adopted a policy whereby an average of "C" was necesary for graduation, the number of students qualifying for Phi Beta Kappa increased to a proportion which almost exceeded the constitutional limit set up by the United Chapters.

The UNC Chapter experimented with several sets of regulations and finally submitted in February. The committee approved the changes in March.

It was later decided by the UNC Chapter that the old by-laws would remani in effect until September.

For 20 years she was a national committee woman for the Democratic Party.

Phi President-Elect Jim Tolbert will make an inauguration address. After the speeches the Phi will hold a short reception and will serve refreshments.

President-elect Tolbert invited all who are interested to attend.

The other officers being inaugurated include Jess Stribling, speaker pro tem; Don Jacobs, treasurer; Don Gray, sergeant-at-arms; Ronnie Pruitt, critic; and David Matthews, parliamentarian.

Student Legislature Vacancies Filled

PRINGLE PIPKIN

The main business coming before the Student Party last night was the filling of seven vacanices in the Student Legislature.

The only contested seats were two in the women's district. After three ballots Patty Wall and Pat Hammer got the seats. All other nominations received acclaimation.

In Dorm Men's II Al Walters and Denton Latz will represent the SP. Davie Jones and Denis Rinzler got the seats in Dorm Men's III.

Richard Eisenburg will fill the SP seat in Town Men's III. The vacant seat in Victory Village was not filled. It has remained "open for months and months' " said John Brooks.

These nominations will be presented to Student Body President Sonny Evans, so he can appoint these people to the Student Legislature.

In his legislature report to the body Tom Long, SP floorleader, failed to mention his bill to study the policies concerning student newspapers at other colleges.

He said the University Party had filled all its vacances in the legislature by "virtue of a monarchial system." He gave other details of last Thursday's meeting.

In speaking for one of the woman candidates (who did not win) Dave Jones said that she was going with a member of The Daily Tar Heel staff.

He said she might be able to help the party through her connection.

At the next meeting the SP will begin nominating candidates for the fall electons which will be held Nov. 11.

The students who were nominated for the vacancies in the Student Legislature will serve for about four weeks.

The SP advisory board has been given the power to name a man to fill the vacant seat in Victory Village.

Hood To Speak To Conference

"Campus Discipleship" will be the theme of the Carolina Christian Fellowship weekend conference, Oct. 25-27, to be held in Greensboro. Keith Hood of Columbia, S. C., will be guest speaker.

The conference, which will be attended by students from a number of colleges and universities throughout North and South Carolina, will feature study groups and a series of addresses by Hood on the conference theme.

Carolina Christian Fellowship, an interdenominational group, is a local chapter of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. Its purpose is to bring together college students who are interested in deepening their spiritual life by Bible study, prayer and Christian fellowship.

The Christian Fellowship meets each Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Choral Rehearsal Room of Hill Hall and holds a supper meeting each Friday at 6 p. m. in an upstairs room of Lenior Hall.

Carolina Students are invited to these meetings and the weekend conference. Interested persons may contact the president of the group, Alan Harris, or the vice-president, Miss Nancy Stockwell.

UP Sets Meet This Evening

The University Party will hold its first meeting at 7 p. m. on Tuesday in the Rendezvous Room in Graham Memorial. Charles Bernard, assistant to the Director of Admissions and former member of the Political Science Department, will speak on "Student and Party Responsibility in Student Government."

Announcements concerning party membership and nominations will be given at the meeting. Following this, an informal question-answer period will be held for the benefit of new students. Refreshments will also be served.

The University Party would like to extend an invitation to all freshmen and transfer students to attend the opening meeting.

Economists & Finance Officials Selected For Business Seminar

Eight prominent economists and finance officials have been scheduled as speakers for the 1957-58 Seminars in Economics and Business within the UNC School of Business Administration.

Leon N. Moses of Harvard University will open the seminar series today, at 4 p. m. in the Faculty Seminar Room of Carroll Hall. Moses, an assistant professor of economics, will discuss "Some Aspects of Location Theory."

Dean Maurice Lee of the Business Administration Shcool announced the completed schedule for the seminars, which are attended by representatives of Duke University, N. C. State College, Wake Forest College and other institutions.

Princeton University economist Oskar Morgenstern will be the second speaker on Nov. 12. He is profesor of economics and director of Princeton's Economics Research Project.

The December guest will be R. E. Davis, director of business research for the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., who will report on his company's business research program.

Slated to appear after the first of the year are the following: William Vickery, Columbia University economics professor, Jan. 16; James S. Currie, State Commissioner of Revenue, Feb. 11; Sidney Davidson, Johns Hopkins University accounting professor, March 11; James Tobin, Yale University economics, March 25; and Simon Kuznets, Johns Hopkins economist, April 18.

The seminars, Dean Lee explained, are designed to bring to the UNC campus outstanding business leaders and educators "to serve as a stimulus for the faculty and graduate students in business administration and economics."

Infirmary Wheels Are Finally Set In Motion

The University Infirmary and University Physician Hedgpeth are to be highly complimented for the reputed procurement of 250 doses of Asiatic Flu vaccine.

The move was long overdue.

The serum should now be administered with as much rapidity as is humanly possible.

And students should take full advantage of its procurement.

News has already reached us that neighboring institutions are suffering raging epidemics. Such an epidemic should be averted here.

The secondary respiratory infections which follow in the wake of Asiatic Flu are exceedingly dangerous—pneumonia and the like.

Preparations should be immediately made for the handling and administration of the procured vaccine.

Abortive Pre-Season Polls & Scholastic Prositution

The football forces of Coach Jim Tatum beat down the Miami Hurricane wave in what was termed as "upset" Friday night.

We feel, more and more, that pre-season pollsters were exceedingly pre-natal in their neglect to rank Tatumian footballers.

The team is now ascending the rank ladder—step by step — with ever-increasing momentum. We look for brighter silhouttes upon the athletic horizon.

We condone winning football. But we do not condone—nor will we ever—subordination of the University's scholastic program to its athletic program.

Scholastic prostitution may mean better athletic teams. But the University's scholastic standing and national prestige may be victimized in the long run.

There is room for winning football and winning scholastics—Make that winning scholastics and winning football.

We do not condemn scholarships for athletes. It's the below the board techniques which we shall never condone.

Bargianing for athletes—below the board—and exhorbitant salaries for athletic coaches—far more than those paid struggling professors—are the price often paid for a winning team.

This is scholastic prostitution.

Althletics—professional athletics on the college level—should undergo a large-sized house-cleaning.

Winning athletics and high ethics can be very compatible roommates.

We should like to see more of this partnership.

Nationalistic Nasser & Middle East Tumult

More repercussions from Nationalistic Nasser of Egypt.

Just recently Ego Nasser of Egypt threw his weight across the Suez Canal.

Now Nasser is sending troops into ally Svria's boundaries in an obvious atempt to throw a powernet over the Middle East.

Nasser is Communist-tainted, and it becomes increasingly evident that Communist-tainted policies are becoming his dominating bed fellows.

Both Egypt and Svria get their arms-muscle from Russia.

And the United States 6th Fleet is in the Mediterranean on training maneuvers. Thus the United States' muscle is tentatively flexed.

There is emminent possibility that Iraq, a Baghdad Pact ally of Turkey, will send troops to Jordan to defend it against any open threat to peace.

The Middle East is again in tumult—the oil-rich Middle East.

And Nationalistic Nasser again attempts to throw his communistic power net over the area.

The United States must remain alert. Our western-inclined friends must not again be disillusioned by Democracy's failure to support its allies.

Silence Isn't So Golden..

There is a great deal of controversy over whether student funds may be handled privately without direct supervision from the Student Activities office.

Student body Vice President Don Furtado made a very admirable stand before the Student Legislature last Thursday night when he condemned any handling of student funds without direct Audit Board supervision.

And Furtado—a man who seldom hides his convictions and is forthrightly frank and capable—yesterday vehemently reiterated his stand in a statemnt to The Daily Tar Heel.

Furtado was later pressured by Carolina Symposium officials (The Carolina Symposium is the recipient of the debated funds—taken from the direct control of the Audit Board) and University Party introducers of the bill enabling the symposium to keep its funds privately in the Bank of Chapel Hill into withdrawal of his statement.

The Daily Tar Heel was urged to keep quiet.

The Daily Tar Heel will not keep quiet. We are somewhat distressed that student funds were put in private hands without direct student government supervision. And we admire Furtado's original stand against such action.

We do not desire that Carolina Symposium unity be shattered.

But students should be informed of the governmental haggling over who should control what funds.

We urge—as Furtado did—that the bill be vetoed by Student Body President Sonny Evans.

And we deplore silence when student funds are concerned.

We will not keep quiet.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Red Chinamen: The New Breed & Recognition

By GANS

The United States' policy toward Red China must be restudied and revised.

This was the theme of former Secretary of State Dean Acheson's talk some two weeks ago. What should be added, and what he neglected to add, is that the U.S. should now recognize the reality of Communist China. Moreover representatives of the Communist regime should be given a seat in the United Nations.

The necessity for this major revision should be obvious. Standing out boldly as the primary reason is the fact that the Communist regime is the political control of the nearly 500 million people of the geographic area called China.

Moreover, it may be noted from the writings of many noted students of Chinese affairs that the revolution in which the Communists gained control of China was a popular one. The people wanted communism because they saw in towns across the Russian border people who were clothed better and ate better than the Chinese people under the Nationalist regime of Chiang Kai-shek. No amount of propoganda can obliterate this fact.

Nor can anyone say today that the average Chinese does not eat, better, does not travel more comfortably, is not clothed better, and has not more industry that he can boast about than ten years ago when the Nationalist regime was still grimly hanging onto power. No stories about bloody purges in which a handful of Chinese are involved can change this.

Other reasons for de ure, as well as de facto, recognition of Red China should be obvious. During the Korean War when 100,000 Chinese soldiers poured from behind the Yalu River to send the United Nations armies hurtling backwards and General MacArthur to civilian life, the American government and the U. N. protested the action to a government to which they did not give cognizance of existance. It is a curious situation when you give up your life to citizens of a country that does not exist but whose bayonets seem awfully real.

This problem simply stated is that if you come across a bear or a lion in the forest, you don't ignore its existence. You must, if you are to survive, recognize its existence and find methods by which to deal with it.

Moreover, the enigma of Red China has been a source of diplomatic imbarrassment to the United States as recently as this past summer. When several U. S. students went to China in order to investigate how the people lived there, the State Department was in a posiion of having to chastise the students because they went to a country where diplomatic recognition was not accorded, and having to reconcile this with American ideals of "free" education. Moreover, when Secretary of State Dulles denied newsmen the right to report from Red China, he had to reconcile this with the American ideal of the Free press. When he finally allowed newsmen to go over, but did not allow Chinese newsmen to come to the U. S., he was forced to answer the question of what has the United States to hide.

The votes on admission of Red China to the U. N. have each year become closer, and if the U. S. is to keep what little initiative it has left amongst the powers of the free world, it had better vote in Red China soon before the General Assembly goes over the head of the United States.

China holds the largest population of all countries in the world. It therfore becomes the number one manpower reservoir in the world in time of war. It stands at the gateway of the resource rich Southeast Asian countries of Burma, Malaya, and Indoesia, but perhaps now most important of all, with its new industry, China is becoming the largest factor in Asiatic trade.

With the present prohibitive tariffs in the U.S., Japan and other smaller Asiatic strongholds are being forced to deal with China to maintain subsistence. The economies of these countries can become very readily China—dependent, rather than dependent on the U. S. If this comes about, and U. S. policies remain constant, the influence of the U. S. in Asia will be minor indeed.

For all the above reasons and for the added reason that in aiding Chiang Kai-shek in the past the U. S. has lined the pockets of the few and benefited the many not at all, the United States had better look to reality for its policy. The U. S. must recognize Red China if American influence in the Far East is to continue.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

The Return To Isolation: Ike's Administration

Whit Whitfield

The people of these United States are extremely fortunate that the "good ol' days" are gone forever. Remember when we were the undisputed world leaders under the Roosevelt and Truman administrations?

This was terribly unfair to the rest of the countries of the world. They hardly had a chance. Soviet Russia was then only a second rate power. Now, under the dominant leadership of President Eisenhower and the progressive Republicans we can no longer boast so loudly. This has been good for the national ego. We can hope to profit by our experience.

We have been good winners for so long that it is only fair to take the real test of sportsmanship and see what type losers we are. This chance we owe to the foresight of the Eisenhower administration.

During the Democratic administrations of Roosevelt and Truman the United States was ruler of the world. There was no one else who could boast as many ships, planes, guns, stategic military bases, etc., etc., etc. Now the story is somewhat different. No longer do the American scientists hold their former positions as demi-gods. The Soviet demigods now are in the limelight.

The "world traveler" is bungling almost every attempt he makes at diplomacy, and some of our former friends have been lost, while others are looking to us with dubious eyes. It might truthfully be stated that the year 1952 was the beginning of the end for American Supremacy. The mighty monarch of the western hemisphere has lost its golden touch.

This is a good sign. A sign that the world is not in a rut, so to speak—a sign of progress.

We may soon shed all our responsibilities as a world leader. We have given so many of them over to Soviet Russia that they are beginning to learn how to handle them. It is generally thought, we believe, that Russia is only too willing to accept them.

When this time comes, the United States can retire on its laurels and once more assume its isolationst policy of the early part of the twentieth century. This will save the taxpayers great sums of money. This is where the Eisenhower tax cut comes in. It would seem to many that this is a rather drastic way to reduce the budget, but not really. It is by the easiest way, and that should be the way to do things—the easy way.

This new twist of fate is a good change from the "good ol' days." Because of inconsistent foreign policy, internal strife (Little Rock), and scientific lag. We need the propaganda, not Soviet Russia. The shoe is now on the other foot. So how does it fit?

A PERSPECTUS:

Ol' Miss' Dominion On Racial Disorders

MISSISSIPPI STATE COLLEGE:

The incidents arising from the integration of Little Rock and Tennessee High Schools have left a dark blot on the heretofore clean slate of the South and of the United States.

Such action as was taken by radicals on both sides of the question is inexcusable, and has cost the United States immensely in the loss of world wide respect.

Violence in opposition to the integration of public schools is not the answer. Violence only leads to needless bloodshed. Opposition through legal methods is the only hope that the South has to prevent integration.

The situation in Little Rock last week with National Guardsmen and Federal troops standing guard is an example of the work of radicals and rabble-rousers working for both sides . . . a tragic thing.

Many southerners regret President Eisenhower's decision to call out Federal forces, but we must face realities. The United States government is not and can not permit violence to block the order of its courts. We, here in the Deep South, can not win with force.

It is evident that many Southern people think that demonstrations . . . even violent destructive demonstrations will end integration attempts, but this only makes the Federal Government clamp down even more. The good citizens of the South certainly do not want mob violence, but the action of the Supreme Court in declaring segregation illegal, in many of their minds left them with seemingly no alternative.

Even more than violence, the proposed abolition of public schools in many Southern states would paralyze one great area of the United States. One hundred years of toil and sweat would be blotted out in one quick move by state legislatures. With Mississippi and many other Southern states ranking very low educationally in the United States, it would be cutting off the nose to spite the face if public schools were abolished.

Yes, the problems are many, but violence is not the answer . . . careful rational thinking and planning from both sides of the question with disregard for petty hatred and jealousness is the only way that the problem can be solved.

Let us not fool ourselves into thinking that we can force the United States government into doing something it has no intention of doing. We must work out the situation . . . together.

VIRGINIA TECH:

Not too long ago nine men decided to remake the country. These nine judges of the Supreme Court were not in a hurry. They did not ask that the "reconstruction" be carried out over night. Within the South there were many men who sought ways to meet this "law" without violence. The plans of these men require time for fulfillment. Sadly, this time has not been allowed them. Impatient Federal Judges and the NAACP have decided that this "rebirth of the South" must take place now, this September! Why, I ask myself, won't they give us time to solve our own problems in our own way? We Southerners did not like the decision of the nine men in Washington but we do recognize authority and we realize that if we are to continue to live as a free people, we abide by the laws of our free society, no matter how distasteful these laws may be. But the use of Federal troops to force compliance with this new legal requirement certainly runs the risk of increasing the desperate feeling of the Southerners who see themselves coerced by a great powr from Washington. We are ready to comply with the law of the land but we will not have this law shoved down our throats with a bayonet.

Mary Baldwin Speaks On Asiatic Slant

Now that the Asian flu vaccine is being made available to the student body, each student should take advantage of receiving the inoculation.

The fact cannot be stressed enough that the reason the college is taking so many precautions is because of the epidemic tendencies of the disease. If measures were not taken in advance here at Mary Baldwin as well as throughout the United States, the entire national health program could be crippled should an epidemic develop.

Asian flu, even though it may attack large numbers of people, has an extremely low mortality rate and is in general a mild disease with few complications. It would be well to remember that out of a million and a half cases in Japan, there were only five deaths.

In most cities, this vaccine has not been offered to the public. The shots are being given only to people such as: transportation workers, physicians, nurses, city workers, and government officals.

The following facts about Asian flu were taken from an article in the Richmond Times-Dispatch on September 30. The disease itself lasts normally about a week. But "secondary infections" as pneumonia, and ear and sinus infections are common. Asian flu is person-to-person spread; similar to the common cold, it is contracted through droplets taken in through the nose and throat. It is contracted through contact with those having the disease; thus it is easy to see how fast an epidemic could spread through the Mary Baldwin community.

We should be proud that Mary Baldwin was one of the first colleges in Virginia to apply for the inoculations. Join with your fellow students and get your shot as soon as possible. Every shot given lessens the chance of an epidemic.

UNC Faculty Members Speak At High School Press Meeting

High school students gathered at the UNC campus in Chapel Hill for the 16th anual Scholastic Press Institute Saturday morning heard Kenneth R. Byerly and Miss Jo Anne Smith of the UNC School of Journalism discuss "Opportunities in the Communication Field" at the opening session of the one-day meeting.

The young writers representng 44 junior and senior high schools throughout North Carolina were welcomed by Norval Neil Luxon, dean of the UNC School of Journalism. Director of the 1957 Institute is Chris Folk of Charlotte.

Speaking on the community journalism, Byerly pointed out the many outstanding newspapers among North Carolina's 153 nondailies and 21 smaller dailies. "They offer good pay, many opportunities, a chance for public service and you'll have a lot of fun, too," he said. He stressed the importance of training in journalism and an all-round education, pointing to the facilities in both at UNC.

He had a word of caution too. "As a newspaperman you must report peoples' troubles," Byerly said, "but if you like to see people in trouble and enjoy 'pouring it on' in reporting them, you will have your newspaper and yourself in hot water all of the time. You have to like people. To be a good reporter I believe you must have the milk of human kindness in your heart and reflect this in your reporting."

Miss Smith speaking on "Opportunities for Women in Journalism" told the girls in the audience that there has been a steady growth in both the kinds and number of opportunities open to women. She said an enterprising, enthusiastic woman journalist can find almost any type of job desired, "although she may have to look a little harder and longer than her male counterpart."

Women no longer are restricted to the society page, Miss Smith added, but have won acceptance as general reporters in many newspaper city rooms and press association bureaus. "We even have a few women sports writers and editorial writers," she commented, "and there are many excellent public relations possibilities for women with both civic and private organizations."

The Scholastic Press Institute is sponsored by the UNC School of Journalism and Extension Division, the Daily Tar Heel and the N. C. Department of Public Instruction. Student officers are George Rembert of Charlotte, president; Charmaine Austin of Charlotte, vice-president; Rozetta Younts of High Point, secretary; and Sandra Hursey of Durham, treasurer.

With the exception of a business session in the afternoon when new officers and advisers will be elected, the entire day will be devoted to panel talks on various phases of newspaper and yearbook production. The keynote speaker at the closing banquet beginning at 6 p.m. at the Carolina Inn will be David Stick, Kitty Hawk writer and former director of the Institute.

THE BIDDING: neither side vulnerable

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1H	DBL.	4H	Pass
Pass	4NT	Pass	5D
Pass	Pass	5H	DBL.
Pass	Pass	Pass

As the cards lay, a small slam in diamonds can be made by East-West (Five diamonds, five clubs, the ace of spades and the 12th trick comes by pitching two of East's spades under the last two winning clubs and ruffing West's second spade in the East hand).

But six diamonds should never be bid, and East's double is signally correct.

The hand is shown just to illustrate tip-top bidding on everybody's part.

South's opening one-heart is routine. West's double may trouble rubber bridge players, but the strength showing bid is imminently correct at Duplicate where overcalls to complete for part scores are wild and frequent.

North's four-heart preemptive raise is a well-chosen bid. It is done with a modicum of strength and distributional advantages. It may shut out the opponents from a game.

East feels four hearts may be set, but he cannot afford the bottom board he will get if his guess is wrong, so he passes.

South passes and now West goes into a huddle With only three cards in the majors, he comes forth with the beautiful bid of 4NT—which absolutely cannot be construed as the Blackwood request for aces.

This so-called "Unusual No Trump" bid is a conventional way to ask partner to sacrifice in his best minor suit. And when North passed, East obediently came through with the 5-diamond bid.

South passed —, suggesting his original opening was made on minimum values. When West passed, a delicate decision was thrown back on North's shoulders.

He properly decided East-West would make their minor suit game (worth 400 points), so bid five-hearts hoping-and-expecting not to be set more than two tricks (for a loss of only 300 points of doubled).

East had to double at this point. There was no way to envision the makeable slam, the set seemed probable for two or three tricks, and he feared a pass would tempt partner to sacrifice at six.

As the cards lay, this would have merited them a top score had West "sarcified", but this would be losing bidding in the long run. Fate and careful bidding by opponents had limited East-West to 300 points even though they had bid as perfectly as they could.

Booters Go After Second Win Today

Carolina's once-beaten varsity soccer team will seek its second victory here today when it faces the Washington and Lee Generals at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

After suffering a heart-breaking 4-3 loss to small Lynchburg College Tuesday, Coach Marvin Allen's squad is anxious to return ti the win column.

To show it means business, the sjuad held three long scrimmages with the freshman team on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and displayed scoring power which was noticeably missing in the Lynchburg contest.

In Wednesday's scrimmage, the freshmen, who had beaten the varsity once during a short scrimmage, "held the Carolina eleven to a 3-3 tie, but that was all as the varsity rolled to 4-0 and 5-1 victories over the spirited freshmen on the last two days.

Leading the forward line against Washington and Lee will be Carolina's sophomore center forward sensation, Mike Thompson, who has scored four goals for the Tar Heels so far this season.

Working with Thompson on the forward line will be Ted Smith and Tom Rand at the inside positions, while Rick Grausman will be at the left wing position. Charlie Whitfield will be at the right wing position, replacing the injured Coleman Barks.

The Washington and Lee team will have revenge in mind when it faces Carolina today. The Tar Heels defeated the Generals last year in Lexington by a 4-1 score.

Flu Halts Murals And Phys. Ed

The fast spreading, far reaching, excusable "flu" which has crept upon the Carolina students during the past two weeks has caused all forms of University sanctioned exercise to be discontinued.

All required Physical Education ciurses have been called off for the rest of this week as has the schools intramural program. The action was taken on the advice oi infirmary officials to help curb the increasing number of colds and coughs on campus.

The Intramural Department announced yesterday that their program will begin next Monday. The games schedueled to be played this week will be played next week. There will not be a new schedule sent out from the department.

The intramural office advises organization to keep the schedules they now have as they will be in effect next week.

Wake Forest Tickets Are Now On Sale

Tickets for the Carolina-Wake Forest game on Oct. 28 went on sale yesterday and will remain on sale until Friday afternoon at 1:30, according to the University Athletic Assiciation.

Student passes will be 1.75 each and one guest ticket will be allowed at 3.50. ticket office hours at Wollen Gym are 8:30 to 4:30 Monday thru Friday.

Each student must present his own athletic pass book and ID card in order to secure his pass . . and he should have both with him for ID porposes when he goes to the stadium.

For admission to the football game, each student must present his pass, in exchange for a reserve seat ticket, at Bowman Gray Stadium, at the west gate for visiting students. This must be done before two pm on the day of the game . . Students wishing to sit together, must appear together at the stadium and make a request.

3rd Rod & Gun Meet Is Set For October 22

The third annual Rod and Gun Field Meet will be held October 22 at the Durham Wildlife Club Area. This is a co-recreational event under the supervision of the Intramural Department.

Four activities will be held and trophies will be awarded to the team winner and to individual winners. The four events are archery, trap shooting, target rifle shooting, and bait casting.

Four students may compose a team in the competition. The team does not have to represent any specific organization. One hundred and six students participated in last year's event. This was an increase of 26 participants over the number in the event two years ago. This indicates a real interest on the part of the student body in the general area of outdoor recreation.

Durham Wildlife Club members will be on hand to assist the Intramural Department with the program.

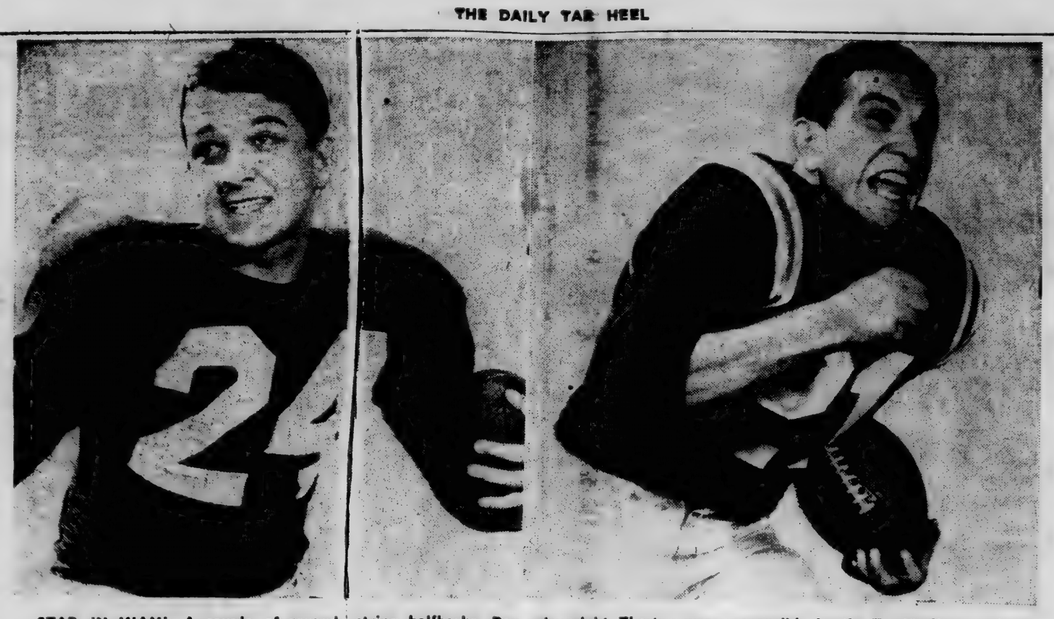
Entry blanks and detailed information may be obtained at the Intramural Office in 315 Woollen Gym. These entries are due in the Office on Friday, October 18.

Freshman Cage Practice Begins This Afternoon

The freshman basketball season gets underway this afternoon with a 3:45 o'clock practice session. Buck Freeman assumes the coaching responsibilities vacated by Vince Grimaldi. At the moment Freeman has no assistants but he expects some help in the near future.

Freeman expects between fifty and sixty boys to try out for the team. This number depends a great deal on the number of individuals who have been able to resist the flu and are in playing shape. All boys who have a basketball background and desire to try out for the team should attend the workout this afternoon.

This years team will be built around the three scholarship players, Jim Donohue, Lou Brown and Doug Moe. Donohue played his high school basketball at St. Anns Academy in New York. Brown is a product of St. Michaels in Jersey City. Moe comes to Carolina from Bullis Prep in Silver Spring, Maryland.



Podres And Shantz Are ERA Leaders In Majors

NEW YORK, Oct. 14—Left-handers Bobby Shantz of the New York Yankees, who made one of baseball's finest comebacks, and Johnny Podres of the Brooklyn Dodgers captured the major league earned run championships in 1957.

Podres thus became the first Dodger to lead the National League in this category. Dazzy Vance, a righthander, was the only other Brooklyn pitcher to win the ERA title. Vance finished on top in 1924, 1928 and 1930.

Figures compiled by the Associated Pres disclosed today that Shantz took the Tmerican League crown with a 2.45 earned run average. This pint-sized 32-year-old hurler allowed only 47 earned runs in 173 innings while winning 11 games and losing five.

A year ago with Kansas City, Shantz wound up with a 2-7 record and an ERA of 4.37. He was acquired by the Yanks last February in a mammoth trade.

STAR IN MIAMI: A couple of second string halfbacks, Ron Marquette (left) and Emil Decantis, turned in one of the finest performances of their career in Carolina's 20-13 win over Miami Friday night. The two were responsible for the Tar Heel's second score, passing to each other on successive plays for the tally.

Dale Ranson Pleased With Harriers; Terps Offer Tough Challenge Friday

In an interview yesterday, Coach Dale Ranson seemed quite pleased with his Carolina varsity cross-country team's showing against the Cavaliers of Virginia last Saturday. "I am very pleased with the overall showing of the team against Virginia, and I thing we have an excellent chance of beating Maryland next Friday," he remarked.

The Tar Heels won the meet 21-37 for their second consecutive triumph against no losses. Carolina captured the top three places and once again the big man for the Tar Heels was Wayne Bishop, with a time of 19:18.6. The conference record, held by Carolina's incomparable Jim Beatty, s 18: 54, and as Coach Ranson said, "When you come that close to one of Jim's records you are doing some real running." Captain Everett Whatley finished second at 20:05 and Cowles Liipfert was third with a time if 20:09.

The varsity harriers are busily preparing for their upcoming meet next Friday with the powerful Maryland Terrapins at College Park. This promises to be the Heels' toughest test of the season since the Terps have at least four top-flight runners, with plenty of good reserves.

Led by Bob Hams, Frank West, Charlie Fleming, and the great Burr Grimm, Maryland is one of the top teams in contention for conference honors. Carolina will be out for revenge since the Terps took home a victory from here last year.

One of the outstanding highlights of this meet should be a duel between the top runners of both clubs, Carolina's Wayne Bishop and Maryland's Burr Grimm. Bishop has out distanced everyone in sight in Carolina's last two meets, setting a track record at Clemson. Grimm, on the otheir hand, has turned in many brilliant performances during his career, the best of which was a 4:06 mile last year.

Although several team mebers have bad colds, none is yet diagnosed as the Asiatic flu, and Coach Ranson said. We'll just have to hope nobody is out Friday."

Maryland To Pay Debt

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 14 (AP) — Gov. McKeldin plans to present Queen Elizabeth II two Indian arrows Saturday as part-payment on an old Maryland debt to the Crown.

The colony's charter, granted to Lord Baltimore by King Charles I in 1632, requires that one-fifth of all the gold and silver found in Maryland be submitted to the Crown along with two Indian arrows each year

"We haven't had any gold or silver, and of course, there have not been any Indians here for years," McKeldin said. "But I got in touch with my good friend, Gov. Gary of Oklahoma, and he promised me two of the finest Indian arrows made."

QUEEN ELIZABETH II

Caravan Plans Start As Queen Begins Visit

As Queen Elizabeth today boards a Royal Canadian Air Force plane and a short time later begins her United States tour, UNC students are climbing aboard the student caravan, bound for the UNC-Maryland game, which Her Majesty will attend.

At the game the Royal couple will sit with President and Mrs. William Friday, Gov. and Mrs. Luther Hodges and other officials. In an adjoining box will be 16 students representing the University of Maryland.

At halftime, the queen will be presented momentos of her visit by a delegation of UNC students. These gifts will include a large UNC banner, a copy of the Yackety Yack and two stuffed Carolina rams for the young Duke of Cornwell and the little princess.

A tight schedule, however, will necessitate the British couple's leaving 15 minutes before the game is over.

University Club plans to present Her Majesty with a state flag were cancelled by the U. S. State Depatment.

Plans for the UNC student caravan to the game are well under way. The University Club has been pleased by the number of students who have made arrangements to make the trip to Maryand.

Information concerning Caravan accomedations may be obtained by contacting the information booth in Graham Memorial.

The main body of the Caravan, from 10 to 14 buses, will leave Chpael Hill from the Morehead Planetarium parking lot at 3 p. m. Friday. These buses will arrive in Washington six hours later.

A dance has been planned for Saturday evening from 10 p. m. until midnight. The North Carolina Society of Washington will sponsor this dance at the National Press Club, which is located at 14th and F streets in the ballroom on the 13th floor.

A small charge for the dance will be collected at the door. The UNC Glee Club will sing several selections during intermission.

New Varsity Theatre Plans Opening Soon

The New Varsity Theatre, which has been undergoing an extensive renovation, will open either Friday, Oct. 18, or Friday, Oct. 25.

The New Varsity will have a Cinemascope screen 30 feet wide. A Westinghouse air-conditioning system of the most modern design will serve the entire theatre. The seats will be of the push-back chair type, wth nylon backs and leather cushions.

H. B. Meiselman of Charlotte, the new owner, has announced that Andy Gutierrez would be the manager.

School Closing Not Announced

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Contrary to rumor, classes have not been called off today.

It is not likely that it will be necessary to close school University Physician Hedgpeth announced yesterday.

Director of Student Activities Sam Magill conferred with Dr. Hedgpeth and Faculty Dean Godfrey on the flu situation and the possibility of closing school yesterday afternoon.

So far there has been no official recommendation or move to close school today, Thursday, or Friday.

If the situation warrants calling off classes, the students will be notified immediately, Magill said.

The infirmary is studying the flu cases, and specialists have been trying to determine its nature, according to Magill.

General college students have been asked to get medical excuses from their faculty advisers until further notice.

Dean Cecil Johnson of the General College made this announcement yesterday.

Student Body President Sonny Evans said the "flu epidemic here on campus is bordering on the critical."

He said, "it is my understanding that it has been determined that this is not Asian flu, but that this is a virus of a different nature but just as contagious."

He stated that one dorm has over 50 percent of its members in bed and that several fraternities have "virtually their entire membership in bed."

He cited as "the terrible part of the situation" the fact that students who can not be accommodated at the infirmary have to go to their dorm rooms "where no medical aid is available."

"I hope that the administration and Dean of Faculty will investigate the situation very carefully and will consult with those doctors who know in making their decision on whether or not to call off classes," he said.

At 4:30 yesterday afternoon the infirmary was filled very near its top capacity with 68 people.

However doctors continued to receive a wave of patients. It was reported that 11:30 yesterday morning, which, incidentally is the doctor's lunch hour, there were 43 people waiting to see the doctors. All were seen before the doctors left.

Physical education, sorority open houses, and intra-murals have been called off during this week.

At press time yesterday Dr. Hedgpeth said the infirmary would probably dispense around 40 Asian flu shots between 7:30 and 9:30 last night.

He said that when more vaccine comes in, he will notify the students through The Daily Tar Heel.

Playmakers "The Lark" Begins Run

"Carolina Playmakers at home and abroad" might well be the theme of the first production of the UNC drama group, "The Lark", which begins its five-night runs at the Playmakers Theatre on the campus tonight at 8:30.

In this French play by Jean Anouilh appear two students who call a foreign country "home," and two others who have been actives in European theatrical organizations.

Miss Lore Schuller, now of Wadesboro, is a native of Bucharest, Rumania, where she resided until coming to the United States to live and study. Miss Schuller is a dramatic arts major at UNC and has taught drama for the past three years at Wayland Baptist College in Plainview, Texas.

Peter Sinclair, an instructor in economics at UNC who hails from Montreal, Canada, has appeared in many of the Playmakers shows. In "The Lark" he takes the role of Warwick, representative of England at the trial of St. Joan.

Two other cast members, Benjamin Clymer and Jack Jackson have done community theatre work abroad. Clymer, of Nilm, Del., worked with the Heidelburg Players and the Salzburg Studio Players, Germany, before coming to UNC to do graduate work in library science.

A Charlotte resident, Jackson appeared with the Paris American Theatre Group and with the Wiesbaden Theatre Guild while doing a stint with the U. S. Air Force in France and Germany.

"The Lark" tells the poignant story of Joan, the Maid of Orleans, in a new translation by Lillian Hellman. Tickets for the production may be ordered from The Carolina Playmakers, Box 1080, Chapel Hill.

Beatrice Cobb Is Speaker At Phi Fall Inauguration

Miss Beatrice Cobb, speaking at the inauguration last night of the Philanthropic Literary Society Officers, emphasized the need of a leader now to know how to speak in public.

She said, "the whole field of public speaking has expanded." The speaker cited the number of civic organizations which require the ability to speak in public if one is to be active.

The Phi and Di are undoubtedly a "training forum" she said. The Phi was in her opinion a good place to develop one's public speaking talents.

She talked briefly of the history of the Phi. Eight governors of North Carolina were members of the Phi, according to the speaker.

She said the Carolina Blue and white comes from the Di's blue and the Phi's white.

In introducing Miss Cobb, Representative Jess Stribling said that she was a "fine and gracious lady," and he gave some information of her past accomplishments.

President Jim Tolbert in his inaugural address said "we are on the threshold of success." During the coming year he said he would strive to make the Phi "the outstanding organization on campus."

"I challenge you to find a better course in leadership" (than the Phi), he said. Although North Carolina could train the leaders, the new president said too many went to other states.

"There is no greater glory than service to one's state," he stated. He claimed that the Phi should impress on the minds of the students their duty to the state.

He concluded, "North Carolina will not settle for the role of medi-

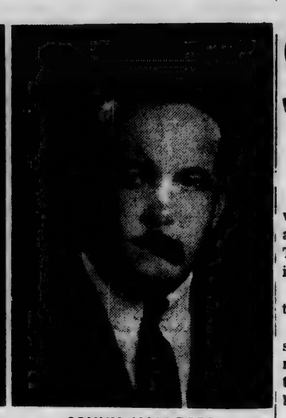
Independents Meet Thursday

The first meeting of the Independent Women's Association will be held Thursday, Oct. 17, at 7 p. m. in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2.



The Executive Council and senior representatives from each dorm will be introduced and purposes of the IWA will be explained.

President Betsy McKinnon has urged all independent women on campus to attend this meeting. "We are eager for all the women to learn about the IWA and take an active parts in its program," she said.

As elections will soon be held for junior representatives from each dorm to the IWC, any girls interested in running for this position have been particularly urged to attend this meeting by the president.

Calls Fund Removal "A Bad Precedent"

By PATSY MILLER

Student Body President Sonny Evans yesterday announced he would veto the bill allowing the Carolina Symposium to keep funds appropriated by the Student Legislature in the Bank of Chapel Hill. The bill was introduced last Thursday night in the legislative meeting.

Evans further stated that he is acting on the recommendation of the Carolina Symposium Executive Committee.

At the same time, Carolina Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford stated: "The only reason for the introduction of the bill last Thursday night regarding the funds was to give the legislature full opportunity to express itself as to what the correct fund handling procedure should be for the 1958 symposium.

"The legislature in an overwhelming majority of 20 to 9 approved of giving this year's symposium the same latitude which previous symposia have been allowed. We appreciate this expression of confidence on the part of the legislative majority."

"However," Hallford said, "since the motives of the symposium have been questioned and misinterpreted, its officials would prefer to remove any small doubt as to their position and, therefore, have taken the following action: we request President Evans to veto the bill.

"We insist that all funds granted by the student legislature to the symposium be handled through the Student Audit Board, despite any inconvenience that this may impose on its work."

Evans said that "no one can question the motives of the Carolina Symposium in pursuance of this privilege" to keep funds in the Bank of Chapel Hill.

"However," he stated, "everyone agrees that this is a matter of procedure, and that the removal of student funds to an independent source is a bad precedent to set. Sonny Hallford and the members of the symposium executive committee have done a truly outstanding job of re-organizing the entire program, and I am certain that every organization and every student will cooperate with them in the achievement of their goal."

Hallford said, in connection with setting precedents, that the symposium was not seeking to set precedents or to ask for special privileges in handling student funds.

The matter was brought up in the legislature, he clarified, because "one or two individuals had raised a question" of following symposium procedures of two years ago. The symposium wanted to be sure that it was acting openly and with the full approval of student government officials at all times.

There is no major controversy between the symposium and student government officials, Hallford said.

"It is the desire of the Carolina Symposium to follow both the letter and the spirit of the law as set forth in the Student Government Constitution and defined by the laws of student government. The Carolina Symposium has not and will not take any steps which are out of line with these principles," Hallford declared.

Presbyterians Plan Weekly Study Groups

A prayer study group sponsored by the Presbyterian Westminster Fellowship will be held every Wednesday for the next six to eight weeks from 5 to 6 p.m. in the vesper room of the YMCA.

This group will discuss the nature and meaning of prayer, the elements of prayer ,aids to prayer, and ways to deepen personal devotional life.

U.P. Hears Bernard

By EDITH MACKINNON

"Define your objectives, and be clear in your deliberations," was the advice given to University Party members last night by Assistant Director of Admissions Charles Bernard.

At the initial UP meeting Bernard spoke to old and new members on "Student and Party Responsibility in Student Government."

Beginning by defining a political party as "an organization composed of certain individuals having common ideals and objectives with the sole purpose of gaining a political office," Bernard of continued by saying the party accomplished this purpose by defining its policy and capturing the desired seat.

Bernard stressed the fact that the University and it operations were a continuing operation. In this operation the student can be seen as both conservation and revolutionary.

"Sometimes we are afraid that the students are too conservation", said Bernard. "They need to cry aloud for certain causes."

At the same time, he contiued, "we are also afraid their idens can be too much in revolt." Describing the University as a "continuing organization," he explained that the student only continues through four years.

Bernard stated that the administration is often concerned that the student movements "are so temporary and have not been given enough

Asian Bug More Serious: Class Suspension Justified . .

The time has come for action.

The slant-eyed Asiatic flu bug is harassing the student body with ever-increasing momentum.

Students in the University Infirmary yesterday totaled 65, not counting transients who wandered in with temperatures less than 102 degrees and were sent back to their campus residences or went home for additional medical care.

The University Infirmary facilities are inadequate to care for the increasing wave of flu victims. University Physician Hedgpeth and his staff are working conscientiously and courteously, but the tide of victims is overwhelming.

Student Body President Sonny Evans has recommended that classes be suspended for several days to prevent further contagion of the dreaded disease.

University Physician Hedgpeth has said that he knew of no such action, and that he had made no recommendation to that effect.

It is our feeling that a number of students are being denied adequate medical care. If this is the case, then remedial action should be taken immediately.

If students have to be sent home and classes dismissed for a three or five-day period to insure that they receive proper mdical care, and that the semi-epidemic be halted before it develops to epidemic proportions, then such action should be taken.

It will be too late after a student or students contract a secondary infection—such as pneumonia—and a fatlaty results.

We concur with President Evans. We feel that now is the time for dismissal of classes . . .

The health and general welfare of the entire student body is at stake.

The University Administration —Faculty Dean James L. Godfrey, Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver and University Physician Hedgpeth — should demonstrate some leadership and foresight before the situation becomes a great deal more serious.

Dr. Hedgpeth is working in an all-out fashion. Perhaps Asiatic Flu would not have been upon us if vaccine had been procured at the semester's birth, in lieu of early this week procurement.

This is an opportunity for Dr. Hedgpeth and others to exert foresight and demonstrate a little initiative before the semi-epidemic progresses further.

The time has come for action.

A stitch in time may save a fatality—which would look very bad for infirmary officials.

Now, now, now . . . suspension of classes is in order. . . .

Presidential Veto Solves Symposium Funds Problem

Presidential veto of the legislative bill enabling the Carolina Symposium to keep its funds separate and apart from the Student Activities fund is completely justified.

And Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford has demonstrated a great deal of foresight in recommending that the veto action be taken.

Hallford wanted symposium funds in the Bank of Chapel Hill purely, he said, for expediency's sake. It would have saved a great deal of time. But, as legislature Speaker Don Furtado said, the proposal was seting a dangerous precedent. Other organizations might have followed suit until the situation got entirely out of the Audit Board's control.

Hallford quickly recognized the situation. And demonstrating devotion to the Carolina Symposium and its tremendous potentialities, he relented and requested the veto for the sake of unity.

The situation has been settled quickly and adequately.

Student government and the Carolina Symposium have apparently settled any difference of opinion which may have been present.

All student government should now continue its cooperation with the symposium in order that an excellent program may be worked out for the spring session.

The program is too beneficial to be torn by strife. Too much strife has already been evidenced in the ousting of former Chairman Frank Crowther.

All should join hands—along with able faculty Adviser Bill Geer and Chairman Sonny Hallford to boost the symposium to realization of its full potentialities.

And we suggest that student government and the symposium get their signals straight before any more proposals are instituted concerning the program's welfare.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Bi-Animalism: Elephants & Donkeys Too

Gail Godwin

A great number of people have been approaching me and asking when I am going to get down to business and air my views on the daily political situation. The answer is — never. I think quite enough is said without me adding my limited supply of knowledge. If I had a penny for every article that came out about Little Rock when it was the hottest thing on the press, I could retire from Carolina and begin my novel.

It would really never do for Carolina Carrousel to become a political column. First of all, its writer adores, simply adores, the Constitution. It is by far the most far-sighted piece of planning ever set down on paper, it seems to me.

I think the Democrats are indispensible, because all my ancestors were Democrats, but the Republicans are pretty important also, because if it weren't for them what would our two-party system be? Both parties have had their share of up and downs. A party is popular if its up and in. Likewise it is unpopular if it's down and out.

I must confess. I like Ike. If he wasn't criticized for playing golf, he would be ostracized for wearing polka-dotted pajamas, or something. I have no sound political reason for liking Ike. I just think he's likeable. Evidently, several other people do, too.

As for segregation or integration, some people are "fer" one and other people are "agin" one and never the twain shall meet. Integrationists just can't understand those narrow-minded segregationists, and v ice-versa. The quickest way to loose friends and not influence people is to argue the plight of Old Black Joe with a member of the KKK, or to extol the assets of the slavery system to a memebr of the NAACP. So why bother. You know you're right anyway.

Shall we give more money to Slobbovia, or shall we cut the slobs off? After all they might stab us in the back. Why didn't we shoot a satellite into the air before the big red Russians did? What's the matter with our Supreme Court?

I know the answer to none of these questions. I do not have a degree in economics or Law, and I can't even remember the formula for Satellite. Anyone who was looking to Carolina Carrousel for a potpourri of political sermons had better read Drew Pearson instead.

The truth is, I have always loved elephants and donkeys both.

There is a practice going on at the University here that seems to me rather paradoxical. All those students who receive any money from the State of North Carolina through the University, are required to sign a loyalty pledge. This includes scholarship holders and self-help students. This pledge says that the undersigned will remain loyal to the Constitution and uphold the state's laws and things like that. It sounds pretty much like you're in the army.

What would happen to you if you refused to sign this thing? It just doesn't ring true to me.

The Asiatic flu has accomplished what Darwin Bell and the Veterans Union couldn't for two years. It has caused the cancellation of all gym classes this week.

It seems to me that it would be a good idea to cancel all classes, if they are going to do away with PE. After all, gym class has by far the most healthy atmosphere of any of the courses on this campus. Most of the other courses are in stuffy classrooms, just loaded with bacteria, and sneeze droplets and other unhealthy elements which could cause a major standstill in this place.

QUARTERLY QUARRELING:

Moving Mots Meet At Fiction Session

Frank Crowther

"They have encouraged and printed the best writing of our immediate past, and they continue to provide a hearing—too often the only hearing—for writers whose mark is yet to be made. They harbor many bores and reveal a few true spirits. They are deliberately unpopular and frequently impossible. Without them we should be far poorer than we are." These words of praise for the still surviving Quarterlies and Reviews of today were from the poet, critic and teacher, Dudley Fitts, a man of considerable scholastic and literary facility who nevertheless has retained a warm yet critical affinity for such endeavor.

When we survey the past histories of these publications, one can well imagine what Mr. Fitts intimated by describing the journals as "birds in transit" . . . wavering sometimes in an uncertain age." Some are hangovers from the experimental Twenties, others are undoubtedly ephemeral, and still others "have the grand cachet of authority." The Carolina Quarterly, we trust, will remain in the latter classification.

Thursday past, we were invited by the present editor, Christian Lefebure, to sit in on the final meeting of the Fiction Board and observe their procedure for the selection of short stories. This was to be their fourth general meeting and the works had to be narrowed from an even dozen to the final four which would be published in their first issue this fall.

The members of the board are hardly what one would call a static, even-tempered or homogenous organization. They range in age from 18 to 25, in scholastic standing from freshman to graduate student, in temperament from a mild romantic to an emphatic iconoclast, male and female—each one a determined and expressive individualist.

Before the meeting began, one might have suspected that the Student Legislature were about to convene, for there was a great deal of lobbying. Several of the members had seemingly taken one or more of the authors and their works under wing and appeared determined to battle through the night. They gave the impression that they were making a last stand for their own coups de plume. Each of the stories was thoroughly dissected, some examples of which follow:

WORK ONE: "I think we should send this one back for revision; basically it's a good story, but the treatment is lacking . . . that's true, the beginning was very slow . . . do mountain people actually talk like that? . . . it seems to go to pieces at the end . . . yes, he seems to taper and then falls flat . . . very poor plotting . . . this one needs a good deal of rewriting." Decision: Rejected with combined criticisms.

WORK TWO: "It's definitely not publishable . . . I think he feeds too much of a western flavor into it . . . why not advise him to send it to one of the "pulp" magazines? . . . ha! don't be mistaken, that's a hard market to crash . . . well, I think we all will agree that it got corny and isn't the caliber story we are seeking." Decision: Rejection with criticism.

WORK THREE: "Now this one seems to be a weird abstraction of Shakespeare . . . I liked the writing, but wasn't quite sure what she was trying to say . . . it looks more like it should be performed rather than read just as a story . . . did anybody find a plot? . . . yes, but it's a little strained and ethereal . . . I either didn't understand it or am not qualified to criticize in this case . . . It would depend too much purely on personal taste . . . is it publishable? . . . well, I like it—in a warped sort of a way—but would have to vote against publication . . . she uses some kind of trick to correlate the characters, but they don't quite make it . . . we'll have to reject it." Decision: Rejection with complimentary criticism.

WORK FOUR: "I think that anybody who can take a lizard and a little boy for a subject and end up with a story like this deserves to be published . . . it's a fine story, although it appears to be a tiny segment of a larger story . . . what's being said; was there a crisis? . . . no, it was more of a mood sketch . . . I wasn't extremely impressed with the writing . . . oh! how can you say that? . . . I think it was delightful . . . (e could see that many felt this one of the best) . . . literally, it's a child's story, but I felt much loser to it than that . . . I feel we ought to publish it . . . me too . . . I don't remember the ending . . . read it when it comes out in the Quarterly!" Decision: Accepted for publication.

WORK FIVE: "(hissing from one or two) . . . Well I liked it! (lone female dissention) . . . the story was very weird with no good reason for it . . . why did the little child put the snow in his mother's face? . . . that's symbolic . . . yeah, but of what? . . . (there ensued a very lengthy discussion of symbolism) . . . it's describing something of very little interest to people in the first place . . . it's confusing as to whether he likes his mother or father . . . it could be revised, leaving in the snow scene, especially . . . yes, that was a very interesting and well drawn part . . . revise? . . . revise." Decision: Return with note of criticism and ask to revise.

WORK SIX: "Now this was a very mature story: the children are very good, but don't you think the mother was slightly overdrawn? . . . No, I think we were obviously directed toward the children . . . yes, that was the author's intent . . . I just knew the father was going to come and then he didn't . . . dammit! . . . one thing disturbed me a little: there seemed to be no people around until the middle of the story . . . well, obviously there were people on the train at Christmas time . . . don't you remember the fellow looking over her shoulder? . . . it's a very well-written story and I feel we should publish it . . . I second that . . . (general agreement)." Decision: Accepted for publication.

This is only a sampling of part of the discussion and criticism. Of the twelve, they finally decided on four and, even though there were a few grunts here and there, most of them were satisfied.

We look forward to another fine issue of the Carolina Quarterly, saluting Mr. Lefebure and his diligent cohorts.

World In Brief

The Queen Laughs

OTTAWA, OCT. 15 (AP) —Queen Elizabeth II laughed like a delighted school girl today when she set off a dynamite blast to start work on a 31 million dollar section of the Trans-Canada Highway. The section will be known as "Queensway."

It was "Queen's weather" for the event at Ottawa's Hurdman Bridge —sparkling sunshine, crisp autumn air and a soft rustle of falling leaves.

Elizabeth and Phillip, her husband, drove to the bridge to be called Queensway" after her, in an 8-car motorcade.

The slight 31-year-old monarch looked a bit wan and tired on her fourth day in Canada. But she waved from her convertible, a wool robe tucked her legs, at thousands along the 16-mile route.

"Still Occupied"

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 15 (AP)— Gov. Orval Faubus said today that he wasn't mollified by the Army's announcement of a sharp reduction in troops which have enforced court-ordered school integration here over the Governor's opposition.

The move "doesn't change a thing; we're still occupied," Faubus declared.

Army Secretary Brucker said yesterday that half of the approximately 1,000 paratroopers who were sent here to protect nine Negro children in attendance at previously all-white Central High School would be returned to their base at Ft. Campbell, Ky.

And he said only 1,800 of the federalized Arkansas National Guard would be retained on that status with the remaining 8,500 being released.

Salesmen Needed

Agents to sell subscriptions to the new campus humor magazine, THE RAM AND EWE, are needed, according to Editor Bill Michaels. The job is on a commission basis. Anyone interested is asked to come to the office in the basement of Graham Memorial or call 7-1801 and inquire.

though, that, in the long run they may be harmful."

"Students are people respected at this University," Bernard told the UP gathering. "Your thoughts and actions mean a great deal to us," he said.

According to Bernard, political parties are essential for popular student government on this campus. In speaking of the political campaigns, he said they were sometimes seen as "much talk, a tremendous amount of action and loss of sleep signifying nothing."

But the meaning becomes clear as the preparations for campaigning continue, Bernard feels. "It means you are exercising your God-given right to speak, vote and participate," he said.

In conclusion, Barnard directed the UP members to "think." "Be political animals in the organization. Be sensitive to student opinion and pressure groups. My only hope is that you as a group will define your objectives for a continuing University," he said.

Harry Braxton, UP chairman, announced that in next week's meeting nominations would be held for legislative seats for dorm men and women's districts and for town women's districts. Sophomore class officers will also be nominated at this time.

Dance, Free Film Committees In Search Of New Members

By WESTBROOK FOWLER

Seniors Frank Lowe from Baxley, Ga., and Mike Strong from Rhinebeck, N. Y., will head GMAB's Dance and Free Films Committees this year.

Lowe, chairman of the Dance Committee, is majoring in economics. As one might expect, the Dance Committee is responsible for sponsoring dances throughout the year.

This committee has a special responsibility in that the dances are not scheduled ahead of time. The committee plans them whenever the occasion arises.

Securing a combo, or orchestra and a place to have the dance are the committee's two most important functions. In addition, it must get permission to have a dance from the Dean of Women's Office and from the University Dance Committee.

Dances are usually held either in the social room of Cobb Dormitory or in the Rendezvous Room at Graham Memorial.

Mike Strong, one of GMAB's vice presidents in charge of entertainment, serves as chairman of the Free Films Committee. Mike meets with his committee about once a month.

At these meetings they go over the different film catalogues and select movies for the following four weeks.

The Free Film Committee's selections are shown free to any students who wish to see them. The student government, using the fees students pay at the beginning of the fall semester, makes these showings possible.

Movies are shown every Friday at 8 and 10 p. m. and on Saturday at 8 p. m. Those scheduled for the remainder of October are as follows:

Oct. 18 - "Tight Little Island"
Oct. 19 - "The Glen Miller Story"
Oct. 25 - "Lavender Hill Mob"
Oct. 26 - "Woman in Hiding"

Any student who is interested in being on a GMAB committee is invited to come and sign up at the Information Office in Graham Memorial.

STUDENTS ON BRIDGE

At Duplicate: Hold Declarer To As Few Tricks As Possible

Every North-South pair reached the 3NT final contract by one sequence of bidding or another. Some Norths bid 2NT (perhaps the best bid) right away, but every couple arrived at the right contract.

But every couple did not score the same. Four brought in five NT (for tie top scores), two made four, but the rest made only three (for tie bottom scores North-South, top East-West). What caused the difference?

	NORTH S 973 H Q10 D AJ97 C AK93
WEST S K85 H 9842 D K1064 C J7		EAST S J432 H KJ3 D 83 C 8642
	SOUTH S AQ10 H A765 D Q52 C Q105

THE BIDDING: neither side vulnerable

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
			Pass
1C	Pass	1D	Pass
1NT	Pass	3NT

This is board No. 19 of the Oct. 14 regular Duplicate game.

This writer doesn't know, but he suspects West's opening lead is the key play which makes or prevents declarer from romping off with five. (With East as opener, declarer North can virtually toss the cards up in the air and still fake five!)

With the bidding as presented above, west should be clever enough to avoid the rule-in-book fourth diamond as an opening lead. But what to lead-looking at this hand?

He doesn't want to lead from the king of spades, nor does he want to lead clubs, since South opened them (and also since neither partner made an effort for a major suit contract, suggesting North-South may be loaded in the minors).

If West finally chooses the deuce of hearts, he is off to his best lead. The two kings serve as possible entries, and as the cards lay, this is the only lead which will hold the contract to three or four (depending on how East and South play the hearts.

Even if diamonds were not bid in the above sequence, West should not risk underleading his K-10 near tenace. There is too great a danger of finding the J and 9 with partner and giving declarer a Queen he would never have won had he been forced to open the suit.

At Duplicate bridge, it as inadviseable to make "desperation leads" that will set the contract if partner has such and such holdings. Frequently, with a stray king and queen or two, the best lead is from nondescript holdings, the top of a worthless (unbid) doubleton or tripleton.

You protect your holdings by forcing declarer to open your suits. This does not mean that we are recommending such leads at all times.

A suit headed by a sequence, KQJ, QJ10, Etc., should usually always be opened with the top of that sequence. The fourth longest with five-card suits and one or two probable entries is a reasonable lead, though even in cases like the above, underleading may cost the defense a crucial trick.

Finally, look who won East-West above. It was not some cuple who figured out a bizarre defense which would beat the declarer one time in ten. It was all the couples who led and waited, patiently holding declarer to exactly what he had bid, 3NT. East-West got the top though the game was the North-South way.

Asian Flu Hits Carolina Football Camp

Asian Flu has hit the Carolina football team.

At his press conference yesterday, Coach Jim Tatum appeared quite concerned about the dread disease hurting his club when it goes against the University of Maryland at College Park Saturday.

Tatum told sportswriters that about one-half of his team was down with some kind of cold infection and that he had no idea about the status of several of the boys.

Center Ronnie Koes and halfback Ron Marquette appear to be the most seriously affected and both are in the infirmary. Quarterback Curt Hathaway and halfback Don Coker were released yesterday but are still feeling bad and Jack Lineberger, Jim Jones and Stu Pell, all top members of the team, are suffering from the disease.

"I don't know what the final outcome will be," Tatum remarked, but right now it looks as though we won't be able to scrimmage the same eleven men together anytime this week.

Things Could Get Better By Saturday

Tatum added that another big problem was the fact that so many of the reserves were also down with colds.

"I don't want to make any lineup changes for the Maryland game," he stated, "but right now it looks as though I might have to."

What about the physical condition of halfback Daley Goff, who missed the Miami game because of a shoulder injury suffered against Navy? "Daley is not recovering as quickly as we expected," said Tatum. "He came out to practice Monday and his shoulder was still sore."

Thus, it seems that the Tar Teels, who have been very fortunate physically this season, have some problems which they must remedy before Saturday. However, the situation could be better than it seems at present. Perhaps by game time Saturday, most of the boys will be back in top shape—Let's hope so.

Terps May Be In Best Shape Ever

Physical problems are nothing new to Maryland Coach Tommy Mont. The man who succeeded Jim Tatum at Maryland must be conceded the unenvious distinction of being about the nation's number one hard luck coach.

Last year, Mont's problems sometimes seemed unbelievable. Every day it seemed that something else would happen to the Terps and this year the pattern has been about the same, although not quite as serious.

But now things are looking much better for Maryland. It is we who now face the unenvious distinction of going up against a Maryland team which, for the first time in two years, will be at almost full strength.

Hale Gives Scouting Report On Terps

Owen Hale, one of the men who assists the freshman football team, has seen the Terps in three of their four games this season and yesterday he brought the news that Maryland should be in relatively good physical shape Saturday.

"Five first stringers who have been out of action this season will be ready to go against us," Hale stated. "Their situation looks good at present."

Hale mentioned three boys particularly who will help the Terps. Quarterback John Fritsch played a fine game in Maryland's 27-0 win over Wake Forest last Saturday. Dickie Lewis is the starting signal-caller but Hale figures Fritsch will see a lot of action.

The Tar Heel scout also mentioned tackle Fred Cole and fullback Phil Perlo as couple of returnees who should aid the Terps considerably.

The man who impressed Hale most was a senior end named Ed Cooke. "Now there is a boy who'll play you a real tough ball game," Hale stated. "He's a fine pass-catcher and a good defensive man."

Tatum, who coached Cooke at Maryland, was in accord with Hale's appraisal of Cooke. "That boy has what it takes," he said.

Hale saw the Terps lose to State (48-13) and Duke (14-0) along with the Wake Forest game. "Against Wake Forest and Duke," he commented, "they looked very good. I don't know what happened against State; they just beat themselves."

Maryland Likes To Pass; Defense Good

According to the scouting reports, Maryland likes to throw the ball. Hale seemed to think that Fritsch is a better thrower than Lewis.

"Maryland uses the pro-type pass, the drop back, Hale stated. "That way the passer gets lots of protection."

What about the Maryland defense, Hale was asked. "I think Maryland has a very good defense," he answered. They looked especially good against Duke. That ball game could have gone either way."

For a football team which wasn't even considered in pre-season polls, the Carolina Tar Heels must be given the nod as one of the country's most surprising football contingents.

Polls Recognize, Neglect Tar Heels

This week, the Tar Heels have moved into fourteenth spot in the Associated Press ratings (and that's the only poll as far as we are concerned).

Victories over Navy and Miami brought the name of Jim Tatum to the fore again, this time as coach of the Tar Heels. The two big intersectional victories came at a very good time, and now the experts are sitting up and taking notice of this football assemblage down at Chapel Hill.

Just for the record, the United Press didn't place the Tar Heels in the top 20. Makes you wonder what a team has to do to get recognition from some quarters. Navy, incidentally, is rated seventeenth. Wow!!

Michigan State Star Named Back Of Week

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michigan State senior Walt Kowalczyk, a sensation as a sophomore but a cripple as a junior, had the greatest day of his football career against the University of Michigan last Saturday and earned the designation as Associated Press Back of The Week.

Kowalczyk scored only six of Michigan State's points in the Spartans' 35-6 triumph, but he was the player who broke the game open and set State on the way to a victory that gave them the No. 1 rating in the nation this week.

The power-running Spartan halfback smashed through the Michigan line for 113 yards in 13 carries, an average of 8.7 yards, made runs of 33 and 21 yards and sparked two other touchdown drives.

Afterwards he said: "That line was just popping out for me. I felt real good and figured it was my day."

Kowalczyk's day didn't surpass by much the big days enjoyed by Jake Sandefer of Oklahoma, Jon Hobbs of Wisconsin, Wray Carlton of Duke, Nick Pietrosante of Notre Dame, Bob Mulgado of Arizona State and Bill Austin of Rutgers. They were his principal rivals for back of the week honors.

Sandefer scored the tie-breaking touchdown and set up the clincher in Oklahoma's 21-7 victory over Texas.

ACC Cage Preps Get Underway

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Those dyed in the wool fans who like football season because it means that it won't be long until basketball comes rolling around were happy yesterday as basketball practice started in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Over at Chapel Hill, Carolina's National Champion Tar Heels held only an informal workout under the tutelage of Assistant Coach Buck Freeman pending the arrival Monday of Coach Frank McGuire.

The Tar Heels, still laden with talent despite the loss of ace Lennie Rosenbluth, are expected to be in contention for top conference and national honors again this year.

Tuesday was the first day basketball practice was permitted under ACC and NCAA rules. The rules forbid any intercollegiate games before Dec. 1.

However, North Carolina State's Wolfpack will break the ice Nov. 28 with its annual varsity-frosh game.

A squad of 17 reported to Coach Everett Case at State College. Nine lettermen will form the nucleus for the 1957-58 Wolfpack. They include guard Whitey Bell and center John Richter.

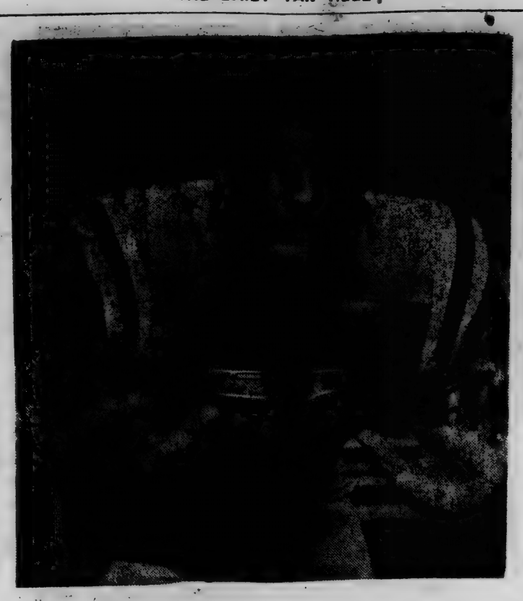
State's athletic office announced that the squad had elected Bell as its captain for this season. Bell, a six-foot "shorty" from Warsaw, Ind., first came to State in 1953 and saw much action his sophomore year. However, he went into the Army and returned to State last year.

McGuire's Tar Heel squad will include all of last year's startng five except Rosenbluth — Joe Quigg, Tommy Kearns, Pete Brennan and Bob Cunningham. Also returning are several of last year's reserves and some top freshmen talent led by Lee Shaffer. Widely-heralded Harvey Saltz is expected to be on hand after being out of school last year.

Over at Duke, Coach Hal Bradley will have all of last year's starters. The squad roster include such stars as Bucky Allen, Jim Newcome, Paul Schmidt, Jerry Robertson, Hayes Clement and Bobby Joe Harris, and some good sophomore prospects.

Coach Bones McKinney started his first year as head coach of Wake Forest's Deacons with yesterday's workout. His squad includes such veterans as Wendell Carr, Olin Broadway, Dickie Odom plus some sophomores and junior college transfers.

Reports from Maryland say Coach Bud Millikan could come up with one of the best Terrapin quints. The team will be built around four starters back from last season, Nick Davis, John Nacincik, Perry Moore and Jim Halleck.



South Carolina will take the court minus Grady Wallace, top scorer in the nation last year, but Coach Frank Johnson has Gene Prater to help console him for the loss of Wallace. Returning veterans at Clemson include Vince Yockel.

Soccer Match Called Off Due To Flu

Carolina's varsity soccer match with Washington and Lee had to be called off yesterday on account of illness. Washington and Lee showed up with only 19 players, and their coach expressed doubt that he could field a regulation 11-man team.

The W&L coach said he had left many of the team members at home and he requested that the game be called because of sickness on his team.

Although the Asiatic flu has hit hard here at Carolina, the varsity booters were still ready to go yesterday. Their next game is next Monday afternoon against the Virginia Cavaliers at Charlottesville.

ASIAN FLU VICTIM: Carolina's regular center, Ron Koes, is one of the Tar Heels hit hardest by the Asian flu. The Tar Heel lineman is in the infirmary and it has not been determined whether he will see action against the University of Maryland, Saturday.

MICHIGAN STATE TAKES FIRST PLACE

AP Ranks Tar Heels 14th

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

History repeated itself yesterday. The nation's sports writers and broadcasters again placed Michigan State ahead of Oklahoma as the No. 1 college football team in the weekly Associated Press poll.

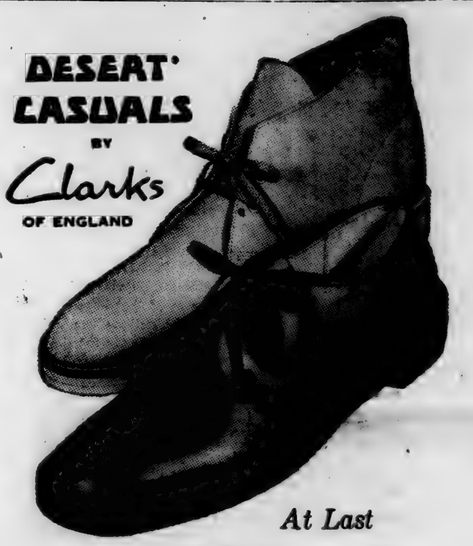
It was almost exactly a year ago—Oct. 23, 1956—that the experts voted Michigan State into first place ahead of the all-winning Sooners. Today, they did it again, giving Michigan State 1,797 points and Oklahoma 1,704.

Michigan State, second last week, mauled Michigan Saturday 35-6 margin while Oklahoma, hard pressed by Texas, won its 43rd consecutive game 21-7.

A year ago Michigan State had won impressively from Notre Dame to go ahead. The next week Oklahoma turned its ferocity on the Irish, regained first place and didn't lose it until today. The Sooners were the preseason choice this year and had been first in each of three previous weekly ballots.

This time 92 of 196 voters put State's Spartans on top and 67 rated them second. In the point scoring on the usual basis of 10 for each first place vote, 9 for second, etc., Texas A&M came in a poor third with 1,215 points.

Duke, victorious over Rice by just one point, retained fifth place. Iowa moved up from eighth to sixth while Oregon State remained in seventh.



Notre Dame, on the strength of its 23-21 victory over Army, jumped from the second 10 up to eighth, followed by Auburn. The Arkansas Razorbacks, who upset Baylor, replaced Army in 10th place.

The top 10, with first-place votes in parentheses:

1. Mich. State (92)	1,797
2. Oklahoma (64)	1,704
3. Texas A&M (5)	1,215
4. Minnesota (6)	1,184
5. Duke (5)	893
6. Iowa (10)	867
7. Oregon State (1)	691
8. N. Dame (3)	585
9. Auburn (6)	548
10. Arkansas (5)	373
The second 10:
11. Mississippi (1)	225
12. N. C. State	148
13. Wisconsin	124
14. North Carolina	100
15. Navy	53
16. Pittsburgh	39
17. Louisiana State	36
18. Michigan	30
19-20. Washington State, Rice and Army (tie)	29

Classes Will Not Be Canceled Chancellor Aycock Announces

Campus Epidemic Said To Be Mild

By BILL CHESHIRE

As teams of physicians made their rounds of dormitory and fraternity house patients yesterday, University Chancellor Aycock announced that classes will continue. He said his decision in this matter was made on advice given him by University Physician E. G. Hedgepeth and "those advising him."

Meanwhile, Student Affairs office released results of a survey conducted Tuesday night. This indicated that between 700 and 750 UNC students were holed up in their dormitory or fraternity house rooms recuperating from "acute respiratory infections," and infirmary officials reported they were seeing approximately 300 students each day.

Those actually hospitalized numbered about 65.

Explaining his decision to keep the University open, Chancellor Aycock said that "the best medical advice seems to be to continue classes." He went on to say he had the utmost confidence in the judgment of Dr. Hedgepeth the other medical officials.

"We can be grateful for the presence here of the Division of Health Affairs and the readiness of its personnel to cooperate when needed by the students of the University.

"If I had to be sick today, I had rather be sick right here in Chapel Hill than any place I know," he said.

Agreeing with Aycock's' decision was Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the School fo Public Health.

"Dismissing classes in view of the present mild epidemic of influenza here would have no value and would not be advisable," he said. "Calling off classes would be the wrong thing to do."

He added that "in moste ases students are better off in their dormitory rooms than they would be if admitted to the hospital."

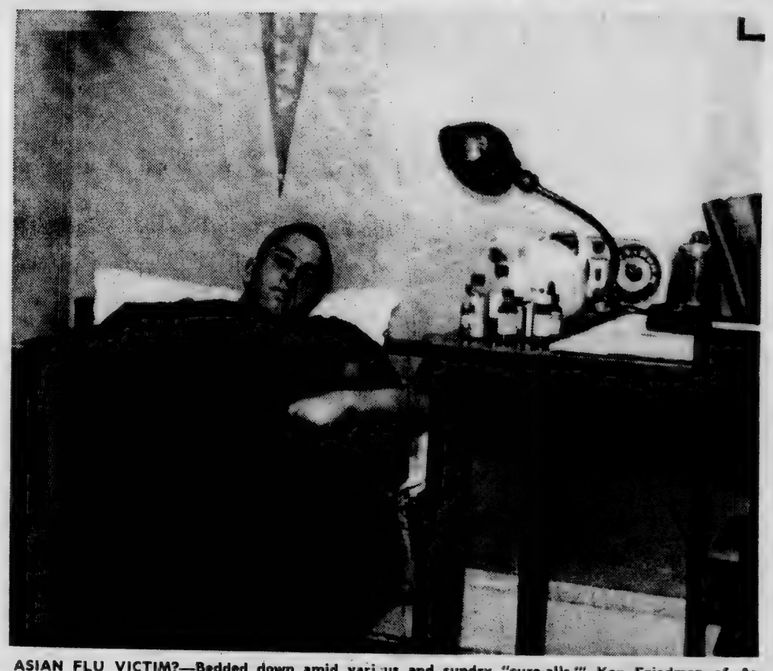
Apparently in answer to some criticism over the lack of sufficient flu vaccine, Chancellor Aycock pointed out that upon advice of Dr. Hedgepeth, the Chancellor's office authorized the purchase of 5,000 doses of the vaccine on July 31. The order was later increased to 7,000 doses, he said.

Because of the requirements of the Armed Forces, however, the expected delivery of 5,000 doses was deferred. The limited supply received prior to the opening of school (100 doses) was given to the football team and to members of the hospital staff. The recommended practice is to vaccinate medical personnel first.

Since the opening of school, over 1,000 doses have been received and administered to medical staffers. Approximately 250 doses have been received this week and the vaccination of students has begun, it was reported.

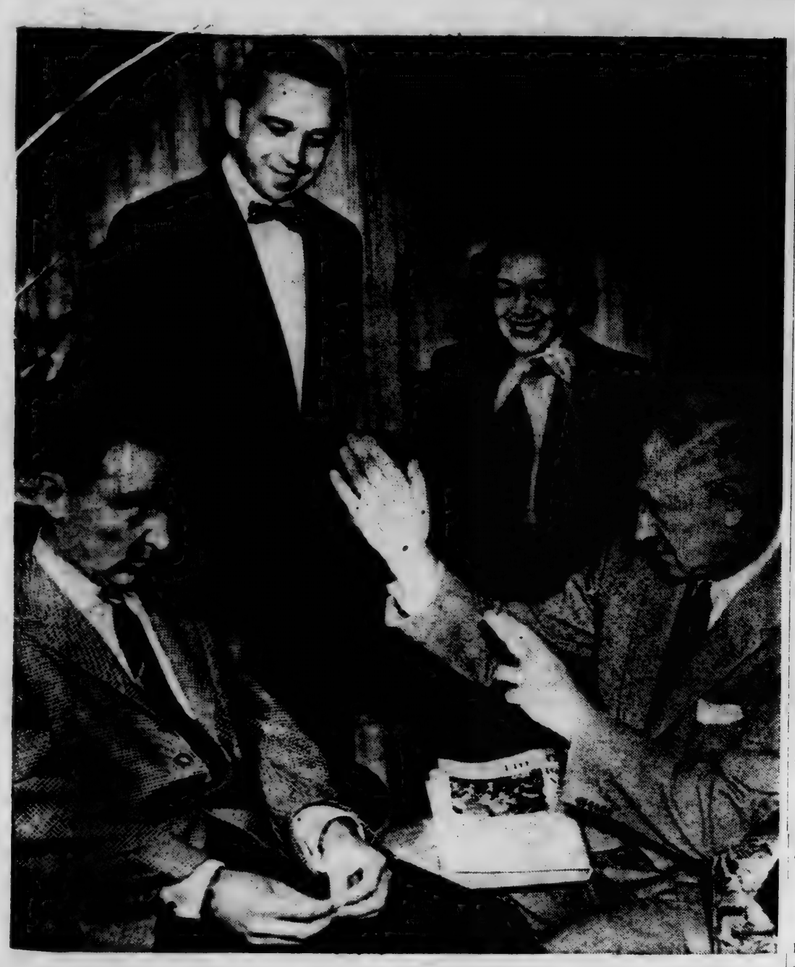
Yesterday Dr. Hedgepeth released the following remarks concerning the infirmary situation:

1. It is better to be ambulatory or in dormitory or fraternity house rooms than in the hospital —for those with mild cases of flu.



2. More serious cases are admitted to the infirmary, and the N. C. Memorial Hospital today made available a ward for students to take care of the overflow, in the event the ward is needed.

3. Admission to infirmary beds is determined in each case on an individual basis by an examining physician. The degree of temperature is only one of the criteria considered.



4. In fraternities and sororities the members are taking care of one another in food and nursing needs. In dormitories, roommates are helping, and the dormitory counselors and officers have taken the initiative in bringing food and providing nursing and other services. All this is in addtion to visits by the medical teams from N. C. Memorial Hospital.

5. Most of the students are getting well in from three to five days.

The outbreak here has not definitely been diagnosed as Asian influenza. Tests are being made to find out. Meanwhile the situation has been termed "an epidemic of acute respiratory infection."

ASIAN FLU VICTIM?—Bedded down amid various and sundry "cure-alls," Ken Friedman of Asbury Park, N. J. recuperates from his battle with the multitudinous microbes. Currently the infirmary, dorms and Greek houses are filled with students in the like situation. (Norm Kantor Photo)

Try Hiding A Pin From Polgar; Undoubtedly, He'll Uncover It

If you think you're good at hiding things, you should go see Dr. Franz Polgar, who will present his two-hour "Fun With the Mind" show at Memorial Hall on Oct. 29 for the benefit of the Campus Chest.

For years he has defied anyone to hide any object so that he can't find it.

Noted commentator Lowell Thomas once bet $100 the genial wizard of the mind couldn't find a pin he would hide. Polgar located the pin under Thomas's collar in about 30 seconds.

Hard-boiled skeptics on the staff of Look Magazine thought they'd make a monkey of the mental marvel when they hid a silver money clip in the Empire State Building and then told Polgar to go find it.

Exactly 15 minutes later, Polgar had located the money-clip-in a drawer within a safe in the locksmith's office in the subbasement of the world's largest building!

So confident is Polgar of his unerring ability to locate hidden objects that frequently, as part of his program, he challenges the audience to hide his check for the night's show. If he fails to find it, the show is on him.

He has never failed, despite the fact that many audiences have resorted to diabolicially contrived hiding places. In Hollywood they hid the check under the upper plate of a man's denture!

In Texas the check was rolled up and shoved into an empty chamber of the police chief's .38 revolver; a Detroit audience tucked the check under the hat of an elderly lady sitting in the center of the theatre.

Polgar has had to find his evening's pay in brassieres, hearing aid, under toupees, in the heel of a lady's shoe, sealed in a tennis ball, and in the plaster cast on a girl's fractured ankle.

The $64 question, of course, is: How does he do it?

The answer, in a word, is "Telepathy," or as Polgar prefers to call it, "though - transferrence." He claims no magic powers, nor does he resort to any of the faker's mumbo-jumbo.

Polgar does admit, however, to the possession of highly-developed extra - sensory perception. In less technical language, this might be described as a sixth sense.

The procedure used by Polgar to locate hidden objects in simple appearance, although baffling in the results achieved. He requires only the assistance of the person who knows the whereabouts of the concealed object. This person is instructed to give Polgar mental directions — without uttering a sound!

The system is sure-fire — for Polgar.

In addition to his telepathic stunts, Poglar's program will also feature uncanny memory stunts, a truly remarkable and hilarious demonstration of split-second hypnosis and other mystifying phenomena of the mind that prompted the Saturday Evening Post to report, "Audiences gasp at this mental wizard!"

Tickets for the show are available at Memorial Hall, the cashier's counter in the Y and at the information desk in Graham Memorial.

Town residents may purchase tickets at Danziger's or at Pace's in Glen Lennox. Tickets are on sale for $2, but students presenting an ID card may buy them for $1.

Soviet Russia Accuses U.S. During UN Meet

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 16 (AP)-The Soviet Union called on the U. N. today to halt a surprise attack on Syria allegedly planned by the United States and Turkey. Russia offered to join other U. N. members in supplying military forces to meet such an attack.

The Russians charged that United States is urging Turkey to launch an attack with "lightning speed," in order to confront the U. N. with a situation whereby the world organization "may have no time to take steps to prevent aggression."

The Soviet accusation came on the heels of these swift developments in the U. N. on the explosive middle east situation:

1. Syria informed U. N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold that an attack by Turkey was imminent. Syria rejuested the 82-nation General Assembly be called into session immediately to appoint a U. N. commission to investigate the situation on the tense Turkish-Syrian frontier.

2. The United States juickly endorsed the move to have the Assembly consider the situation in the Middle East. "A prompt investigation of the developments should help to ease tensions as well as to clarify who it is that threatens peace in the area," A spokesman for the U. S. delegation at the U. N. said.

It was apparent that the Soviet Union and Syria were making associated moves in the United Nation.

The Soviet accusations against the United States were contained in a 1,200-word letter from Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to Sir Leslie Munro, president of the Assembly. Copies of the letter were distributed several hours after the Syrian request for assembly action was released.

"There is reliable information that the Turkish General Staff, together with American advisers, has elaborated detailed plans for an attack by Turkey on Syria, their intention being to carry it out im-

New Dorm Advisor Plan Presented By Evans To IDC

By DAVIS YOUNG

A plan for completely reorganizing the dormitory advisory system as it now stands was outlined at last night's Interdormitory Council meeting by Student Body President, Sonny Evans.

Evans' proposal was drawn up through the cooperation of the student government Executive Committee and the I.D.C. Executive Committee. It stated in effect: Dormitory advisors shall be payed at the rate of $1,000 dollars a year; these advisors will spend 15-20 hours a week in their rooms.

It went on to say: Men selected for this job will go through a rigid screening test; they will have to power to ask a resident to leave a dorm; and they will take a lighter academic load.

Evans in showing the need for this new program cited many instances of poor dorm counseling as it exists, laxity in the enforcement of quiet hours and a general disunity among dorm residents.

He stated: "There is no tradition of studying in the dormitories here on campus and the facilities in the library at the present time are not sufficient to handle the rush.

"Dormitories should be competing among themselves. A spirit of strong individual dorm unity should exist. A dorm is not a hotel, but rather a home away from home. It should therefore be treated with more respect than is now shown.

"Through the proposal that I have brought before you tonight I see a new concept in dormitory life. A boy would be able to bring his problems to a competent advisor, who would be responsible to the University to be in his room a certain number of hours.

"He would be assured of individual attention which is not being exhibited now. Through the presence of this advisor the group as a whole would benefit, for I can see improved study conditions resulting from the authority invested in him."

Present at the meeting with Evans was Sonny Hallford, attorney general of the student body. He told the DTH following last night's meeting: "In this new proposal I hope to see the evolution of a sense of unity, pride and self-respect among dorm students. It's merits are easily seen and I urge general support of this bill."

news brief

U. S. Might Attack

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16 (AP)-Secretary of State Dulles warned today the United States might attack Russian territory in retaliation for any Soviet aggression against Turkey.

He said at a news conference, however, it was unlikely any such war would break out in the Middle East.

"Certainly if there is an attack on Turkey by the Soviet Union," he said, "it would not mean a purely defensive operation by the United States with the Soviet Union a privileged sanctuary from which to attack Turkey."

College Would Comply

RADEIGH, Oct. 16 (AP)-North Carolina State College would comply with a suggestion from Clemson College that State not send Negro members of its athletic teams for contests at the South Carolina College, Dr. Carey H. Bostian, State College chancellor indicated today.

But how State would comply with the suggestion has not been decided, Dr. Bostian said, and likely will not be decided "until we know we have a problem."

State, which now has a handful of Negro students among its nearly 5,000 students, presently has no Negroes on its varisty teams, but it may have one next spring when the tennis team is selected.

Honor Council Reviews Rule

The Women's Honor Council would like to bring to the attention of all students that a witness to a violation of the Honor rules, who fails to report such Code, Campus Code, or social violations is considered as guilty as the violator.

Students who have any questions concerning the procedure or rules under the Honor Code are urged to contact an honor council member.

Members of the Women's Honor Council are Kit Whitehurst, Chairman; Lucinda Holderness, Punkin Coe, Nancy Turner, Dorothy Pitman, Doris Peter, Sarah van Weyk, Pat Dillon and Cindy Seagraves.

Nude Fraternity Man

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 16 (AP)—University of Nebraska authorities confirmed today it was not a bag of laundry found hanging from the doorknob of a sorority house here last week.

The laundry bag contained a nude fraternity member, apparently deposited at the sorority doorstep by fraternity brothers.

The Universiy authorities said the case has been turned over to possible disciplinary action against the pranksters.

Everybody's Home But Us, And Flu Flows Freely . . .

From the Associated Press:

"Release of the 725 prisoners at City Prison Farm (Atlanta, Ga.) was authorized today in a move to halt threatening flue epidemic . . . About 75 of the 725 prisoners have fever and apparently flu."

Everybody's going home but us. And there are approximately a thousand or so carriers on the campus.

After a fatality occurs, it'll be too late, Dr. Hedgpeth.

Heaven Or Hemlock?

Current inadequacies in the remuneration system for faculties of American colleges and universities are admirably outlined in the below editorial reprinted from the Cornell Daily Sun:

"If Socrates were asked to come to Cornell today, to teach under the present conditions, he would sooner take the hemlock and get it over with."

These are the words used by one of Cornell's prominent faculty members to describe the plight of the teachers in the College of Arts and Sciences before the Cornell Council meeting over the weekend.

The Council, an organization of some 900 alumni who serve as "ambassadors, promoters and advisers" for the University, met to get an idea of "The Liberal Arts at Cornell," and what can be done to improve its status. Much of what they heard during the three-day meeting was pure clap-trap, dull and uninteresting fodder about how important the Council is and how fine Cornell is, but there was one high point at which the sorry state of the liberal arts was made properly evident to the Council members.

And that high point was the utterance of the statement above, a statement by Prof. Max Black on Friday afternoon. By itself it is stark and a little ludicrous, but Mr. Black succeeded in backing it up. He went on to point out that the great teachers of the past, the men for whom Cornell is known—people like J. O. Adams, George Lincoln Burr, Carl Becker and Robert Cushman—would not be attracted to the University today.

They would not want to have to lecture to a hundred anonymous faces instead of educating a small group first hand, they would not want to have the heavy class load which eats into the time needed for research and learning, they would not want to have the laughably poor research facilities of the present library, they would not not want to, and they would not come to Cornell.

This means that the University is on the verge of losing not only its present reputation but also any new people that might consider coming to Cornell. This means that, unless something is done soon, Cornell will rank as a university slightly worse than most, instead of slightly better than any.

Now, there are things about Cornell which will always attract a certain number of excellent professors. There is the kind of individuality in choosing the type of teaching and research you are to do that will forever be an attraction to those men who cannot subscribe to the autonomous orders of a department or a college. There is the kind of freedom that an individual professor has inside the classroom, in teaching what and how he wants, and outside the classroom, in living the way he prefers.

There is a kind of student at Cornell, non-provincial and generally able, unlike those at the mid-Western school who are generally from one state, or those at the other Ivy schools who are generally from one class.

There is a kind of congeniality among academicians, a respect and admiration for others in the teaching profession, that stretches from entomolgy to engineering, from agronomy to architecture, from geology to government. There is a whole indefinable atmosphere at Cornell which has made it different from other schools, which attracts to it the kind of men who care more that they're free than that they're underpaid.

But with all the advantages that this university has, it is nevertheless true that it will fail to attract a large portion of the able educators that it so badly needs for the perpetuation of greatness. For Mr. Black's arguments are sound, irrevocable ones—th Cornell faculty is under staffed, underpaid, overworked, and without tim or facilities for research and study. And as long as this is true, no matter what other benefits the University may have, many of the better graduates will turn to the $15,000 full professor salary at Harvard or the guaranteed free time at Princeton, and Cornell will suffer.

The challenge is therefore clear. The first and most crucial responsibility for all those connected with the University is to insure that the freedoms, the special atmosphere of Cornell academics, will never be compromised or distorted by those in administrative positions. But the second vital responsibility, and one in which the Council members can play a part, is to get enough money—pure, simple cash — to raise salaries, to get more teachers, to build the research library, to build a new building for the Arts College, etc.

The voice of need has sounded clear to the University. The challenge has been given to the Cornell Council, the group that professes to be the friends and helpers of the University. They have been given a task of major proportions, and they have been asked to show their real spirit and loyalty. They probably will not be faced with a serious a problem as this in the next several decades, for it is the liberal arts, the humanities, and the means to implemnt and teach these, that are going to prove starkly crucial in the years to come.

We hope the Council members can meet the challenge, can answer as they should to the problems that face the University. Frankly, we have our doubts that they will; we think that complacency and shoulder shrugging have taken too much a hold, that the interests of the humanities will never be made clear to those who do not appreciate them to begin with.

We would like to be proven wrong, of course—in fact, we beg to be. But the challenge is easily forgotten, easily pushed aside in the minds of the Council members. All we can say is that if the problem is pushed aside, eventually so will the Council.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

U.S. Foreign Policy And Its Inconsistencies

By GANS

There exists in American foreign policy two very startling inconsistencies between political expediency and the democratic ideal as couched by those who wrote the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. The first of these can and must be corrected, and the second remains a dilemma that will be impossible to straighten while the game of power politics continues to be played.

It was ostensibly on the issue of representative government that the Thirteen Colonies went to war in 1776; yet, in 1957 the United States has compiled an admirable record in interfering in two important elections abroad, an act specifically prohibited in the regulations on the passport of every American who possesses one.

* * *

The most recent case of intervention in elections concerns the recent re-election of Konrad Adenauer's Christian Democrats in Germany. Here, according to French, German, and British accusations and according to admissions of certain foreign office personel, the U. S. spent money and time in backing the Christain Democrats' successful aspirations to re-election over the Social Democrats.

It was a successful election, but it was not carried out without the wrath and fear of some of the United States' closest allies being brought out. The anger is over the new concept of sovereignty that the U. S. seems to espouse—that of U. S. taking a part in the sovereignty of other nations. Their fears are that they may be the next countries in which the U. S. will try to interefere with the electoral processes.

This problem came into bold relief earlier in the year when the U. S. tried unsuccessfully to interfere, with many dollars and much time, in the municipal elections of Manila in the Phillipines. The net result of this diplomatic foray is that the city of Manila has now a Communist mayor. Not only did the people of Manila react violently to interference in their democratic processes, but they pronounced very clearly to the U. S. that the meaning of sovereignty is that the people of a given state choose the representatives whom they want, and not the representatives that another nation wants them to want.

* * *

The Phillipines is one of the most important island groups in the Pacific. With it goes one of the keys to control of that vast sea—the Pacific, and one of the natural and most important U. S. bases. Germany, at present, is the strongest nation in Western Europe. The U. S. stands to lose both these nations, but what is more important the U. S. could suffer the breakdown of its entire alliance system through the fear of other nations that their sovereignty is in jeopardy. . . .

It is this very alliance system that causes the second inconsistency in American policy, for the United States has been in a position, lately, of consistently backing colonial and imperial interests over the interests of the indigenous population. This is notably apparent in the case of the British squabble in Cyprus, and the French-Algerian crisis. If America backs the British and French interests, it becomes guilty of being faithless to the principles the American Revolution was fought upon—that of self-rule. If it sides with the Alegrians and Cypriots, it is in a position of alienating two of its most firm allies, and conceivably could break up the NATO alliance.

The dilemma remains, and the U. S. has chosen again on the side of political expediency over democratic principles in siding with the British and French in hopes of preserving the Western security system.

* * *

There may be some doubt as to which is the right action in this latter case, but in respect to interference in the sovereignty of existing countries, the U. S. must now and forever assume the oft-stated policy of laissez-faire.

Someone, a long time ago, said, "To thine own self be true." The U. S. would do well to adopt this as a guide.

Circulation Stagnates And Readers Search In Vain

DEAR EDITOR:

I wouldn't walk a mile for a Daily Tar Heel, but I wouldn't start the day without reading one. (Not if I could find one, I wouldn't, but sometimes that isn't easy.) You and your staff, who spend many long hours in its preparation, surely woll agree that our student newspaper plays an important role in the life of the University. It tells us what the peotion, surely will agree that our own campus community. It is written about us, and it speaks for us. And we appreciate it. (always admitting there is room for improvement, of course.)

Surely you are aware that a great many of us do not read the Daily Tar Heel for the simple reason that it is not made available. It is delivered to dormitories, sororities and fraternities, and to various other points, including Lenoir Dining Hall. But why does the supply at Lenoir run out by about eight o'clock every morning? Where should one look after that? Consider also these of us who eat downtown, or are married and come from home directly to class.

A sufficient number of Daily Tar Heels should be printed each day so that every interested person can have a copy. They should be placed in classroom buildings and in the eating places downtown, as well as at the present points of distribution, and the supply should not run out before the demand for them has stopped each day.

Of course it costs money to publish a newspaper. We paid our money as part of our registration fee. It takes time and effort to keep enough copies on hand at convenient locations. Students in Poland recently were willing to give more than just time and effort to their newspaper.

All of us should read the Daily Tar Heel.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Male Meets Female Teeth Get Cleaned?

Gail Godwin

Of all the boy-girl approaches I have ever witnessed or experienced I have just been eye-witness to th most unusual. While dining out in the friendly atmosphere of the N. C. Cafeteria, I noticed the young man sitting next to me was eyeing me out of the corner of his eye. Finally he spoke: "Would you be interested in having your teeth cleaned?" he asked. Not, "Haven't I seen you someplace before?" or "Where are you from?" but "Would you be interested in having your teeth cleaned?"

I wondered whether I should slap him or inquire further. I did the latter, since nobody likes to create scenes in cafeterias.

Here was a struggling young dental student, hunting for patients in cafeterias in order that he could get enough points to graduate. It runs a point per patient, I suppose. Always ready to answer the plea of a worthy cause, I made an appointment for 2 o'clock the next afternoon.

After winding around the numerous halls, going up and down steps and asking directions from everyone in white coats, I found the School of Dentistry. Picking out my boy among several eager white-clad figures was no trouble at all. We then proceeded downstairs to get me okayed, this being a precautionary measure taken by the school.

The "Operating Room" back upstairs was more like a classroom. But instead of desks, there were rows upon rows of dentist chairs. His was by the window, thus affording some degree of seclusion.

The proceedings took from two to four and I have never had so much attention in my life. My dentist was equipped with a little assistant that handled her job as efficiently as a surgical nurse. Every few minutes an instructor would stroll by and peer into my mouth to make sure everything was all right. One man asked me if I needed a transfusion. I am sure that nobody's teeth have ever been cleaned as thoroughly as mine were on this momentous afternoon.

Besides this, I got a natural bristle toothbrush, a "denticator," and first-hand instructions on how to brush my teeth the Steelmen-McCall way.

I urge all coeds with time on their hands and hygiene in their hearts to take the beaten path through the woods to the University Hospital. Here you can do your good deed for the day by helping these worthy young hopefuls make "A" in Lab.

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Air Age Is Of Age, & An Anthem Myth

By NICHOLS

With all this talk about rockets and man-made moons it was kind of refreshing to see a crowd gather at the Raleigh-Durham airport to watch a blimp take off.

Many children and parents stood around while the crew prepared the blimp for flight. I strongly suspect that the parents were just as much, if not more, impressed by the proceedings than were the children.

In one little group the pilot was explaining to a young girl why you could call a blimp a "ship", and why this term could not be applied to an airplane.

Finally, the impatient crowd was rewarded for their watchful vigil. Amidst many cries of "Hurrah!" and "There she goes!" (Plus a few comments such as: "It'll never fly") the blimp started on its amazingly short taxi and rose in the air at approximately a 60 degree angle.

We watched it float out of sight, intrigued by such messages as "Give to the U.F." and "Buy Chrysler, Plymouth, DeSoto, Dodge, Imperial," etc. which flashed on its side.

The air age has finally come into its own—it's sponsored.

In case you haven't noticed (in which case, I suspect, your aesthetic values are dead) the leaves on the campus trees are changing to all sorts of colorful hues. I've always thought, with pride, that our campus here at Chapel Hill must be one of the most beautiful in the world and at this time of year and in the spring I'm convinced of it.

* * *

There's a conspiracy on campus. At the risk of being indicted for un-American activity I'd like to say I'm for it, too.

It seems that some individuals are crusading for the removal and replacement of the National Anthem.

It has very patriotic words, and all that, but face it—it's unsingable.

I, for one, am tired of standing before ball games, and at various other times, and listening to the males bellowing out the "Oh say, can you see?" only to turn it over to the females when it comes time to screech "And the rocket's red glare." No wonder the trend has been to get a professionally trained singer to sing the anthem while everyone stands silent.

I'm for participation. If we can't do a good job on this one, let's get one on which we can.

* * *

I got suckered into playing straight man in the following routine the other day:

J. C.: What is a Chinese chimney?

G. N.: I'll bite. Pray tell, what is a Chinese chimney?

J. C.: An Asian flue.

G. N.: Groan!

Well, that's the way it goes, kiddies. The moral of that story is: Just don't ask questions.

For those who are interested the Cross-Country team now campaigning against Maryland has been informed that victory is the only meal the Tar Heel harriers have a chance of having." Could it be we're in for another undefeated team on campus?

IN ROYAL PERFORMANCE

Gridders Battle Bug For Saturday

Add to the woes of a football coach whose team has a command performance before royalty scheduled Saturday and a more serious appointment with Maryland's hepped-up Terrapins.

Carolina's resurgent Tar Heels, who upset mighty Navy's aerial barrage and cracked Miami's staunch defense, have been upset this week by an opponent they can't even see: the microscopic flu bug.

The feverish little bug invaded the Tar Heel camp Monday, decommissioned three of the men who starred in Carolina's 20-13 flight over the Hurricane and put more than 2000 pounds of brawn and muscle, namely Carolina's first unit, to bed in the field house of a rest.

Center Ronnie Koes, and halfbacks Don Coker and Ron Marquette were hardest hit by the bug. Their chances of recovering in time for peak performance against Maryland are not considered bright.

The threesome played an important part in reducing the Hurricane to gales and squalls.

Koes, 214-pound junior, is one of the key defensive cogs in the big Tar Heel line. He was in on more than a dozen tackles backing the line against Miami.

The punting of Coker, who leads the ACC with a 43.6 average in four games, was described by Tatum as one of the key factors in fighting off Miami's advances in the second half. The big sophomore, who has improved with each contest, has booted 10 times for 436 yards and averaged 43.4 yards per kick in five tries for 217 yards last week.

Coker's rushing, good for 107 yards in 29 carries, has added welcome strength to the Carolina backfield in the three consecutive victories.

Marquette, a quaterback who has worked out well after switching to halfback, contributed a 33-yard touchdown strike to Emil DeCantis after Carolina resumed its aerial game last week. The team didn't throw a pass against Navy's Middies.

Much of the success of the revamped club since losing to State 7-0 in the season's opener has come from a mixture of improved offense and a tightened defense, especially against passing.

Maryland, a club that bounced back from three straight defeats to drub Wake Forest, 27-0, in the Terp's first win at home in two seasons, is tabbed a tough foe.

Scouting reports from Coach Fred Tullai indicate that the Tar Heels will not find the welcome Saturday as royal as that to be extended Queen Elizabeth who will witness the game along with 35,000 others.

Williams And Mays Are Batting Champions

By BEN OLAN

NEW YORK, Oct. 16 (AP) — Ted Williams of the Boston Red Sox won his ninth American League slugging championship and Willie Mays of the New York Giants his third National League title in 1957. Williams' .731 average was the highest for the majors in 16 years.

Williams collected 307 total bases in 420 times at bat, figures compiled by the Associated Press disclosed today. Among the 39-year-old outfielder's 163 hits were 28 doubles, one triple and 38 homers.

Ted, who also won his circuit's batting crown, had the previous high slugging percentage - .735 in 1941. The big league record is .847 set by Babe Ruth in 1920. Williams also finished on top in the slugging competition in 1942, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1951 and 1954.

Mays slugged .626, edging Stan Musial of St. Louis and Hank Aaron of Milwaukee. The Giants' centerfielder had 366 total bases in 585 trips. His extra base output included 26 doubles, 20 triples and 35 homers.

Musial wound up with a .612 percentage on 307 total bases in 502 at bats while Aaron was third at .606 with the most total bases in either league, 369, in 615 official trips. Aaron had 198 hits and 77 were for extra bases - 27 doubles, six triples and 44 circuit blows.

Slugging averages are computed by adding the total bases on all hits one for a single, two for a double, etc. and dividing the aggregate by the number of official times at bat.

Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees, the American League slugging champ in 1955 and 1956, was second this time with a .565 mark. He had 28 two-baggers, six triples and 34 homers among 173 safeties.

Roy Sievers of Washington, the AL's home run leader with 42, was third in slugging with a .579 average. In addition to his homers, the hard-hitting outfielder collected 23 doubles and five three-baggers.

Regional TV Will Carry Duke-State Tilt

RALEIGH, Act. 16 (AP)— The Duke-North Carolina State College football game in Raleigh on Oct. 26 will be regionally televised, it was learned today.

A formal announcement that the contest has been selected for regional telecasting is expected to be made next Monday by the office of Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver.

State College officials, who had no comment on reports that the game would be televised, said that a sell-out crowd is assured for the contest between Duke and State—both of which boast undefeated records as of now.

Terp Halfback Is Soph Of Week In ACC

RALEIGH, Oct. 16 — A Maryland halfback who grabbed a pass to score a game-ending touchdown as the Terrapins defeated Wake Forest 27-0 last Saturday today was named by the Associated Press as the Atlantic Coast Conference sophomore of the week.

Gene Verardi, 19, a 180-pounder from Freeport, Pa., also figured in three other key plays according to Maryland coach Tommy Mont. Verardi took a pass from Dickie Lewis in a play covering 61 yards for the touchdown that was scored as the final whistle blew.

Verardi also gathered in a pass on a 40-yard pass play that led to Maryland's first score. Most said Verardi also came up with a crucial frist down in the third period on a pass from quarterback John Fritsch. "That put us down close to the Wake Forest goal and we scored our second touchdown early in the fourth quarter," Kont said.

Verardi also was credited with a key defensive play when he blocked a potential Wawe Forest score by batting down a pass in the end zone.

Runnerup in the sophomore-of-the-week competition was Harvey White, Clemson quarterback. White scored a touchdown, kicked an extra point and passed to Wyatt Cox for another touchdown as Clemson defeated Virginia 20-6.

England Will Hear Chorus

The sound of Tar Heel voices will ring out loud and clear throughout England Friday, October 18.

Word has been received here that the British Broadcasting Company will air a special football program for schools as a salute to Queen Elizabeth. The program will consist primarily of school songs and football music.

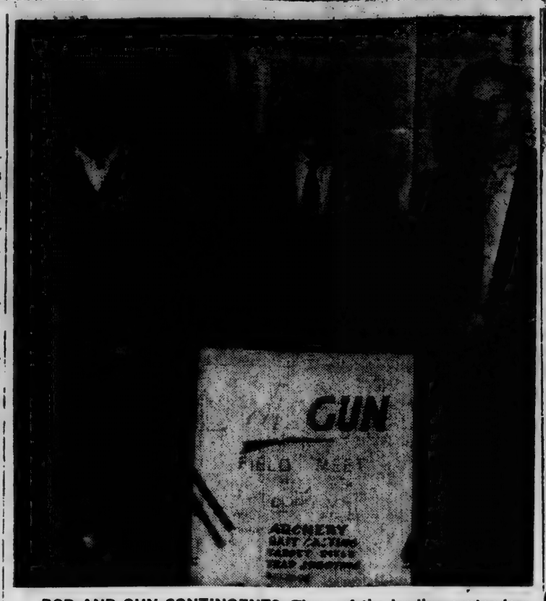
The Queen and her Royal Party are visiting America and will attend the Carolina-Maryland football game at College Park, Maryland, Saturday afternoon. It will mark the introduction of the sport to England's First Lady.

Contributing to the special broadcast will be the University of North Carolina Glee Club, whose recording of "Hark, the Sound", the school's Alma Mater, and seven other school songs, have been sent to England.

The recording is a gift from the University and Dr. Joel Carter, Director of the University Glee Club.

The broadcast is being arranged and conducted by Leslie Reade of the B.B.C.

Important Monogram Meeting Set Tonight



The first Monogram Club meeting of the fall will be held tonight at 7:30 at the Monogram Club.

Keen Competition Seen For Rod And Gun Event

By TOMMY JOHNSON

Rod and Gun enthusiasts will have an opportunity to match their prowess Tuesday afternoon at the Durham Wildlife Club Area. The occasion is the Third Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet.

All Carolina ladies and gentlemen are invited to participate in the event which is sponsored by the Intramural Department. Spectators are also invited.

Dental School will be the defending champions in team competition. Clete Oakley, Sigma Nu, will be defending his title in the trap shooting event. His close contender, Gay Cowen of the Kappa Alpha fraternity, is expected to give Oakley a close run. These two sharp shooters were involved in two extra rounds last year to determine the winner. It is rather interesting to note that Cowen was victorious over Oakley last Spring when UNC met State in a similiar rod and gun meet, thus this should be a decisive battle.

John Crawford, Sigma Nu, is the only other winner of last year who will defend his title. He was the winner in the target rifle event which will again be under the experienced direction of M-sgt. W. H. Lanier of the USMC.

Competition will be held in trap shooting, target rifle, bait casting, archery and fishing. A fee of $3.25 will cover the cost of the clay birdies and the shells for trap shooting. Members of the Durham Wildlife Club will be on hand to conduct this event. Shotguns will be available for use if you do not have your own.

There will be a charge of $.40 for the entrants in target rifle which will cover cost of the shells. NROTC rifles will be used.

Persons may use their own rods and reels in the bait casting competition. Regulation Skish rules will be used. Spinning outfits may be used.

Doctor Urges Aspirin' Rest For Students

Legislature Meets, Introduce One Bill

TO SPEAK HERE—Dr. Nathan Rotenstreich, Israeli philosopher and writer, is scheduled to speak here next week while a guest of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation of North Carolina. In addition to a talk to a class in religion and a night meeting sponsored by the Dept. of Philosophy, he will also make addresses at N.C. State College and Woman's College.

Ask Lenoir Hall Investigation Bill

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Representative Pat Adams (SP) introduced last night at the Student Legislature a bill to set up a committee "to investigate the negligence of the duties of the management of Lenoir Hall."

The second article of the bill stated, "the Student Legislature send a request to the N.C. State Board of Health for frequent sanitation inspections of Lenoir Hall without prior notice to the management."

"Lenoir Hall has been derelict in maintaining this (a high) standard of good food at reasonable prices and of cleanliness," he charged.

None of the bills from the meeting of a week ago got out of their respective committees. The bill to grant the Carolina Symposium additional funds was held in committee for further study.

None of the other standing committees were able to meet because they lacked quorums. "Obviously the flu bug has taken its toll," said Speaker Don Furtado.

The bill to allow the Carolina Symposium to keep funds appropriated by the Student Legislature in the Bank of Chapel Hill was allowed to die quietly under Student Body President Evans' veto.

Speaker Furtado announced that there were two vacancies for the Student Party on the finance committee.

He also reminded the members that if they had more than one unexcused absence from a regular legislature meeting or committee meeting, then they would have to drop out of the legislature.

Representatives who "cut-out" are not eligible to run again for a year, he said.

SP members Patty Wall, Pat Hammer, Al Walters, Denton Lotz, Dave Jones, and Denis Rinzler along with Marian Ellis (UP) were sworn into the Student Legislature.

Nineteen legislators were absent. Twelve were from the University Party, and the remaining seven were members of the Student Party. The legislature is made up of 50 representatives.

The flu epidemic seems to be waning according to campus medical authorities. On a tour of dorms, fraternities, and sororities doctors visited approximately 750 students.

Lenior Hall's effort to supply the students in the dorms sick with soup is reported "to be going well."

Chancellor Aycock visited Lewis Dorm last night. He reported the student morale seemed good.

Y Forum Will Open UN Week

The arrival of William L. McGovern and Edward P. Morgan on the UNC campus Monday will usher in United Nations Week.

Morgan, well-known ABC commentator, and McGovern, prominant attorney for the Washington, D. C. firm of Arnold, Fortas, and Porter, will be at UNC in connection with the YW-YMCA Forum on "Human Rights: A Challenge to America." This meeting will be 8 p. m., and the public has been invited.

However, other meetings, study groups, and discussions will be held Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

McGovern will lead discussion groups at 3:30 p. m. Monday and Tuesday on "Civil Rights and the National Security Program." These meetings are tentatively planned to assemble in Roland Parker lounges in Graham Memorial and are open to interested students only through application to the Y.

Applications may be left at or phoned in the Y building.

Miss Betty Carolyn Huffman, YW chairman of the forum, stated that these groups would be of particular interest to students majoring in political science, international affairs, history and journalism, and urged those students to make an efforts to apply and attend.

An informal discussion on "Human Freedom and Education" is planned for Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Planetarium. Refreshments will be served.

Both men will visit classes on Monday and Tuesday mornings, and will make several visits to church groups. McGovern will speak at the Community Church on Sunday morning. He will visit the Canterbury Club's supper meeting that night. Morgan will visit the Wesley Foundation's supper meeting.

ELIZABETH II

Royal Couple Arrives For Washington Visit

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17—(AP)—This government may have been licked on its planning for a Sputnik, but when it comes to planning a welcome fit for a queen it's mighty hard to beat.

It's not known here whether Queen Elizabeth sajd, as she accepted the invitation, "Now don't you folks fix up anything extra for us." If she did, nobody paid any attention.

Eisenhower, smiling and bowing, met her at the aircraft's door. A 21-gun salute echoed and the strains of "God Save the Queen" and "The Star Spangled Banner" were played in the full scale military welcome.

Elizabeth, her husband and Eisenhower then moved in triumphant procession from the airport to the White House. Hundreds of thousands cheered, clapped and waved British Union Jacks as the three rode by in Eisenhower's bubbletop limousine.

The weather, as if taking part also in the event, fitted itself to Elizabeth's schedule.

Threatening rain held up during her hour-long procession. Then, later, it fell in a dreary drizzle from leaden skies when she and Philip went to Arlington National Cemetery.

There, an unsmiling Elizabeth laid identical laurel wreaths, festooned with red and white carnations, at the tomb of the unknown soldier and at the Canadian cross.

Muffled drum rolls and taps sounded at the impressive ceremonies. The dreary weather lent an added note of pathos to the bugler's call of lament for the war dead.

The queen seemed wan as she arrived at the airport, perhaps because she already had put in four days of almost constant activity in Canada and Williamsburg.

However, she was smiling broadly.

Roving Doctors Are Calling On Patients

By ANN FRYE

Carolina students suffering from the current "respiratory infections" have been urged not to attend classes. This advice came from Dr. O. David Garvin, district health officer for Orange-Person-Chatham-Lee counties.

Though not specifically singling out UNC students, Dr. Garvin said that medical authorities agree on a simple treatment for flu-like cases. This treatment includes aspirin, fluids and rest.

The health official especially urged rest, since he believes the peak of flu cases will come within the next two weeks. He said that the cases may temporarily subside over the weekend.

The number of flu cases in the University Infirmary jumped to 82 yesterday. There were 65 hospitalized Wednesday.

According to a report from Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, 692 students in dormitories, sororities and fraternities had been reported in bed and not attending classes on Wednesday. This figure does not include town men.

A team of 17 doctors visiting students in dormitories yesterday reportedly saw well over 692 students.

University Physician Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth said that there were less cases treated yesterday than Wednesday, but he did not supply further comment on the situation. He mentioned that the infirmary will inform students when more expected Asian flu vaccine arrives.

Health Officer Garvin said that private physicians in Chapel Hill have had Asian flu vaccine, but have given out. Dr. Garvin did not know when the doctors will receive any additional doses of the vaccine.

The situation in the public schools in the four counties has not warranted closing down classes, but Dr. Garvin said as many as 50 per cent of the students in some schools were absent this week.

One of the big problems accompanying the outbreak of flu-like cases here at the University is getting food to the sick students in dormitories.

Ray Jefferies worked with volunteers from dormitories last night to take soup and fruit juices to bed-ridden students. Large containers were brought in from Durham to facilitate getting the food to them. Previously, it was late in the afternoon yesterday before some of the sick students got any lunch because of a lack of food containers.

Spencer Dormitory, where some coeds eat their meals, was sending out food yesterday.

Also some of the women's dormitories have been supplying fruit juice to the girls from the dorms' own finances.

From Woman's College comes this report: because of a high incidence of influenza on the campus, WC has canceled examinations for today and tomorrow and has set up an early lights-out schedule.

There are 120 patients in the WC infirmary with many others sick in the various dormitories. Classe are being held as usual but the girls have been advised to rest as much as possible.

In Durham County, the health superintendent estmated there must be about 10,000 cases of some kind of influenza in the county.

Polgar Show Proceeds Benefits Campus Chest

Advance sale of tickets for the Dr. Polgar "Fun With the Mind" show being presented for the benefit of the Campus Chest on the evening of Oct. 29 has topped any previous program Polgar has ever presented on campus, reports Chairman Richard Love.

A possible explanation for this, says Love, is the fact that Dr. Polgar is no stranger to many students and local citizens, who have enjoyed his appearances here and television guest" appearances with Arthur Godfrey, Steve Allen, Dave Garroway, Garry Moore and Arlene

Though his performance is based

Thongh his performance is based on the scientific subjects of telepathy, hypnosis, and remarkable feats of memory, Polgar's sparkling wit and showmanship provide an evening loaded with laughs.

He is the first to spoof the old Black-Magic, evil-eye type of hypnotism. "My job is entertainment," he says. And entertain he does.

Look Magazine said about Polgar: "Every year he appears before over 300 audiences in the United States, leaving them happily befuddled by his implausible feats."

Chairman Love says there are still some tickets available for Polgar's show at Memorial Hall, and they can be purchased at the cashier's counter in the Y and also at the information desk in Graham Memorial.

Residents in town may purchase tickets at Danziger's or at Pace's in Glen Lennox. Tickets are on sale for $2, but students presenting an ID card may purchase tickets for $1.

Rockets To The Moon

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 17—(AP)—The Examiner says it has been told that Russia will try to hit the moon with rockets Nov. 7.

The newspaper's science editor, Christian Clausen, wrote today that the information came from a European scientist "who has talked to rocket experts who have escaped from the huge Russian rocket and missile base at Peenemunde in Germany." The scientist's name was not given.

Clausen said his source told him the Soviets will aim three of their huge rockets at the moon from a launching base on the Caspain Sea, "the same spot whence the Red satellite was sent aloft."

Flu Outbreak

WINSTON-SALEM, Oct. 17 (AP)—Wake Forest College reported today its 220th case of flu since the campus was hit by an outbreak about two weeks ago.

College officials are presuming the flu is of the Asian variety although only two cases have been definitely diagnosed. Infirmary quarters are remaining busy since new cases are coming in as fast as others are being released.

Three new cases of flu were reported at Salem College and Salem Academy. The small infirmary already was filled. There were 15 Academy students and five college students in the infirmary. Four other students from the college have gone home at the request of their parents.

Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 17—(AP)—French Author Albert Camus, advocate of the classical Greek philosophy of reason in an angry age, today won the 1957 Nobel prize for literature.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Literature cited him for "his important literary production, which with clear-sighted earnestness illuminates the problems of the human conscience in our times."

State Dept.

By EDITH MacKINNON

The selection process, the extent of work and the benefits of Foreign Service work came under discussion yesterday in a talk made by Howard R. Brandon.

Brandon, a U. S. State Department representative, spoke to students interested in career opportunities with the U. S. Foreign Service.

Four steps were outlined in the explanation of the selection process. Brandon told the group that applicants must pass both a written and an oral exam, a physical test and a security check.

"We are after the very finest personnel," Brandon said. Therefore, rigid exams are set up for this purpose.

During the oral exam the applicant must be able to express his opinions and defend them. The examiners are interested in seeing, "in general, if you would be a good representative of the United States," Brandon said.

If the exams are passed and appointment is made, the appointee then goes to Washington for two to three months. During this time he is trained and then sent to the Foreign Service Institute in Washington for three month.

Following the training period, the Foreign Service worker receives his appointment for service abroad.

Brandon told the group that starting salaries are scaled according to the officer's qualifications, experience and age, and they range from $4,750 to $5,350 per year.

A career ambassador may receive as much as $20,000 yearly.

Brandon also said that all transportation costs, housing or allowances for rent, and clothes allowance for certain climates are paid by the U.S. government.

In mentioning the benefits of Foreign Service, Brandon maintained that "you never have a chance to be bored." A member of the Foreign Service for 15 years and an officer on four different continent, he noted that the total turnover in the service per year is less than seven per cent.

Applications for the one-day written exam must be received by the Broad of Examiners in Washington before Oct. 28. Form blanks may be picked up in the Placement Service office within the next few days.

A written examination will be held Dec. 9 in Raleigh. Candidates must be between the ages of 20 and 31 and must have been a U. S. citizen for nine years.

Mouth Opened On Closed TV

A dental surgeon performed an operation this week before a closed circuit audience at the UNC School of Dentistry. This operation was the first of its kind to be televised in the state.

Dr. Marvin E. Chapin, who performed the operation, removed 28 teeth from the mouth of an 11 year old girl.

Senior dental students and students from the department of anesthesiology at North Carolina Memorial Hospital viewed the operation.

The primary purpose of the operation was to demonstrate techijues of administering general anesthetics for oral surgery.

Student Government Allots Dorms Money

Student government officials announced yesterday that 50 dollars will be alloted each men's and women's dormitory for TV maintenance this year. The money is to come from $1,300 appropriated into the Student Activities Fund from dormitory vending machine profits.

The repair work will be done according to a contract let to Dollar Radio and TV Service; the policy, as planned, is to have TV sets ordinarily repaired in two days.

Procedure for repair work is that any dorm president or student body treasurer Bob Carter may report TV break downs, and that the procedure will be handled through the student government and not through the IDC.

After repairs have been made, bills will be sent directly from Dollar to treasurer Carter. Bills will not pass through individual dorm administrations for the sake of expediency.

However, if dormitories overspend the allotted $50, the overdraw will be taken from individual dorm social funds.

The repair proposal is to function on a trial basis this year. If operations prove successful, the plan possibly will be instituted on an annual, permanent basis, according to Carter.

SP Will Nominate At Monday Meeting

Nominations for the fall elections will take place at the Student Party meeting on Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2.

Nominations will be made for Men's Dorm Districts 1, 2 and 3; for Town Men's Districts 1, 3 and 4. Nominations will also be received for dorm women, town, and freshman class officers.

The Student Party will also elect a new treasurer and appoint campaign officials at this meeting.

Symposium Head Calls For More Participation

Carolina Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford yesterday called on all students, faculty members and townspeople who are interested in the 1958 Symposium to sign up for committee in student government offices at Graham Memorial.

Hallford made the request in the following statement submitted yesterday to The Daily Tar Heel:

"I would like to extend, on behalf of the Carolina Symposium, a cordial invitation to all interested students, faculty members and townspeople who would like to serve on one of the symposium committees to come by the student government office in Graham Memorial and sign their names to the committee interest sheets.

"One can contact Miss Staples, executive secretary of student government, who will show him the committees which are offered. We need good and capable committee heads as well as committee members. I strongly urge you to let us know your interest as soon as possible.

"The committees are classroom and Departmental seminar committee, organization and Administration commitee, handbook committee, social hospitaility committee, finance committee, physical arrangements committee, publicity committee, exhibits committee and office staff.

The functions of these committees will be briefly outlined on the interest sheets. This request does not apply to those who have already expressed their choices."

'Highest Medical Efficiency' And The Farce Of UNC's Ostrich-Eye Officialdom

Word comes from Woman's College that examinations scheduled for today and tomorrow have been called off.

And also at Woman's College, Asiatic Flu vaccine is available for any student who desires it.

Yet here, rather stubborn infirmary officials have refused to recommend any suspension of classes or alleviation of the class schedule. And the epidemic continues to get worse.

It seems apparent that infirmary and administration officials have taken an ostrich-eye view of the whole flu situation.

The attitude seems to be:

"Perhaps if we ignore this whole mess, it'll just go away."

Certainly, University Physician Hedgpeth and his entire staff are to be highly complimented for their handling of the flood of patients with an all-out effort.

But their failure to alleviate the class load in a time of ever-increasing flu victims is appalling.

Yet the flu cases continue to increase. And the University News Bureau glosses over the entire fiasco with a glowing press release to the effect that:

Flu victims are declining in number. And the University infirmary staff has the situation completely under control.

We submit that the situation is not under control. And we submit that the University has taken an ostrich-eye view of the whole problem.

Perhaps this weekend and its class-free Saturday will tend to alleviate the problm, and cause at least a momentary drop in the contagion.

At any rate, the problem, will have to solve itself, it seems. The University will not attempt to solve it. Infirmary and administrative officials are simply attempting to gloss over the whole problem.

Students are sick in their rooms and are being denied proper medical care simply because the University Infirmary is wholly inadequate to handle the tide of cases.

Yet the News Bureau releases this statement:

"The influenza epidemic on the University of North Carolina campus is being handled with the highest medical efficiency . . ."

We beg to differ.

And we find it appalling that University officials will not suspend classes for even a day . . . when the health of the entire student body is at stake.

And it is again appalling and indicative of the University's glossing-over of the flu epidemic that infirmary officials will not even admit that we have incidence of Asiatic flu on campus.

Again the Women's College infirmary officials outstep the University's staff. Dr. Ruth M. Collings of the WC infirmary announced yesterday:

"We have an Asian flu epidemic."

We deplore the University infirmary's brand of concealment and ostrichism. And we admire WC's candor.

Student health is at stake.

Evan's Study Proposal Can Be Excellent . . . But

Student Body Prsident Sonny Evans' proposal for instituting a "tradition of study" in University dormitories sounds exceedingly good on the surface.

The Interdormitory Council has failed, somewhat, in its conscientious attempt to insure observance of quiet hours in dormitories.

But there is a hidden danger in placing a University-paid counselor in dorms—if he is given any judicial authority.

Such a counselor might become a University policeman, and the overall effectiveness of the ID Court would be weakened—with University authority substituted in its place.

We condone and endorse Evans' proposal if it is instituted in this way:

(1) The University counselor would have no judicial authority—except authority to recommend to the dormitory executive committees that a student be suspended from residence in the dorm.

(2) The dormitory executive committee would in turn approve the adviser's recommendation if they felt it were justified.

(3) The suspended from residence student would then appeal to the ID Court, if he felt he were given a raw deal.

We condone Evans' plan—if it is instituted as outlined above—not because we like any system of University counseling—but simply because we recognize that University dormitories are a bit too noisy — and there is too little esprit de corps among dormitory residence.

The University counselor should have only advisory jurisdiction.

Otherwise, the proposal is too dangerous . . .

Team Goes For One Mo' Pelt

The team departs with national ranking—14th. We wish them all the success in the world.

At the same time, it's a good time to survey what professional athletics does for an institution. Maryland just doesn't scratch in the scholastic world . . .

But we wish the team the greatest of successes . . . and we're confident it'll come back with another pelt in its belt . . . .

WISE And Otherwise:

Exact Time Of Sputnik's Fall At Pensacola . . .

Whit Whitfield

One noted scientist says, "I'll give it one week." Another says, "A month, no more." Another, just as reputable, maintains that a year would be a better answer. A few cautiously say, "Indefinitely"

Just how long will Suptnik stay aloft to mock scientists of the free world? Since this is a wide-open game, for experts and neophytes alike, we should not hesitate to offer an answer, not a conjecture.

To determine our answer to the problem which baffles the rest of the world, we merely took the cube root of the mass of the margin release key on a Remington portable, multiplied this by the mean rainfall for October for the Chapel Hill area in decimeters, divided this by ten to the 21st power, added the result to an "x" which came from a desk dictionary, and became confused.

We were not dismayed however, so we put an "equals" sign between the "x" and the remainder, giving us a partial vacuum in the head. This we placed over "pi" and multiplied the complete figure by 9.0338463156. We then inserted the word "days" in a convenient location so that our answer would be in days instead of kilowatts.

The result—success! Our prediction:

Sputnik will lose its momentum gradually until November 16, 1957, at which time it will make a right turn at the Naval Air Station at Pensacola, Florida, and fall earthward picking up its lost momentum, until it lands at 3:17¼ P.M. EST in the backyard of Mrs. James Fenton of 2354 Sycamore Street of that city. We have informed the Civil Defense officials in Pensacola, who in turn have warned Mrs. Fenton that her citrus seedlings are in grave danger. Mrs. Fenton's husband is a criminal lawyer.

In answer to a query from the Mayo Clinic concerning the Asian Flu virus it is not Asian to all, for it was invented by a Polish engineer working in a textile plant in Moscow in 1953. The Politburo recognized it to be an effective weapon against capitalism, but dared not send it here from Europe. Instead they used Communist China as the scapegoat. Coolies were paid to bring it over, most of them dying soon after disembarking, which saved money for the party.

The engineer's widow was paid twelve rubles in payment for her husband's invention. He died with the Flu.

SIMON'S WORLD:

Such Sweet Thunder's Great And Jonathan's Piano Artistry's Chant

This is what I hope will be the first of a series of columns, if the good editors are sympathetic, devoted to the personal of the world of jazz. I am writing under the psuedonym of 'Simon" because I wish to avoid the great amount of personal publicity that has befallen two of my colleagues, Grayson Mills and Jonathan Yardley, and because I believe that with no great personal identity a better column can be written, since the problem becomes one of intelligent criticism rather than ego boosting.

In this column I wish to make comments on the world of music, jazz and popular, and review records which I either wish to ballyhoo or pan. As overly-critical Yardley said, it is the reviewer's function to steer the consumer; and I might say that my judgements will not always be the best, but you should soon be able to tell whether or not your tastes and mine coincide and if they do I may have the good fortune to guide you to some recording which you otherwise might pass up.

★ ★ ★

Yardley said that he would very much like to have a review of Duke Ellington's Such Sweet Thunder from the pen of Mills. I would like to review it myself, if he will allow.

Such Sweet Thunder is perhaps the most inspired work Ellington has done in the past ten years. It is a series of short musical sketches characterizing and dedicated to some of the most famous of shakespeare's characters. Each sketch is quite short, and for the most part each is both very descriptive of the intended character and a fine musical composition. Most exciting for this reviewer is the whimsical "Up and Down, Up and Down", a delightful little portrait of Puck, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, laughingly watching the mortal fools pass by. The wah-wah trumpet of Clark Terry closing off the piece in sheer delight.

I could not recommend this record more strongly to all those who have been bitten by the record bug. Whether you be a fan of jazz, clasical music, or Shakespeare, you would find Such Sweet Thunder a delightful and worthwhile addition to your collection.

★ ★ ★

For those of us who were fortunate enough to be in Duke's Page Auditorium last Friday evening, the concert by the Four Freshmen was an unforgetable experience. Their fine performance reaffirmed this persons belief that with the Hi-Ho's they constitute the finest in American group singing. They could do no wrong that night.

From the opening "Somebody Loves Me" to the closing "Street of Dreams" they were at their best. Singing mostly numbers from their early Vocies In Modern album, they completely captured an enthusiastic and polite audience. The reception afforded them gave me hope that jazz will at last be able to take up a new stand in the south, the place where it was born. I might add that the Voices In Modern recording is perhaps the finest they have done, and has been greatly overlooked by many in favor of the less distinguished Four Freshmen And Five ..... albums. Look into it.

★ ★ ★

Finally, I would like to recommend one more record - None of the record stores here in Chapel Hill have it now, but I have been assured that it will be back in stock very soon. It's called The Piano Artistry Of Jonathan Edwards, and it's the most hilarious thing on wax. Form a line down town and chat until you get it, because you need it. Badly. That's it for today - Simon salutes you.

Fascination In The Louis Wilson Library

Nancy Hill

An afternoon's browse through Wilson library is especially interesting right now. Exhibits for University Day are still out, and if you're interested in a quick and easy resume of the University's history, this is the place to find it.

Cases on the right contain pictures and information on University chancellors, and presidents, including news articles from local papers and national magazines. Prominently displayed, of course, are former Consolidated University Presidents Gordon Gray, now with the office of defense mobilization, and Frank Graham, a UN mediator.

Among Carolina presidents are Edward Kidder Graham, whose obituary in the News and Observer is on display, and a former president who left North Carolina to become president of the University of Illinois.

Across the way is a display of books on North Carolina and by North Carolinians. Thomas Wolfe gets the full treatment. His letters, a critical biography, and the story of his life as a Carolina student are there, with editions of "The Web and the Rock," "Look Homeward Angel," "Of Time and the River," and "You Can't Go Home Again."

A couple of Inglis Fletcher novels are there, as is Lucy Daniel's recent novel, "Caleb, My Son," and "The Lost Colony," Paul Green's historical drama.

According to Bill Baum, who is a student employee in the library, one of the most interesting and forgotten rooms in the library, as far as students are concerned, is the rare book room. For those who haven't been there, it's located in the basement on the left hand side of the library.

Other University treasures are kept in the library valut, including the original class bell, and a hand-woven tapestry.

The common complaint among girls in Carr dormitory about mail is not that they don't get any, but that they get it so late.

One irate Carr resident, a chemistry major, says that a large percentage of Carr residents are in pharmacy, chemistry or med tech and have afternoon labs. Carr's mail is delivered at 2 p.m., which means they don't get theirs until supper time.

Taey want to know why.

FEMININE PRIDE:

Manhood's Glory & Now The Price . . .

Doug Eisele

We read with a little interest—and much misgiving—a column by Gail Godwin relating to "pride" of the UNC coed. We have applied our assessment of the column to women in general.

First, ladies, you are to be reminded that the days of chivalry are over—there are no Sir Walter Raleighs waiting to throw Alligator rain coats across mud puddles for approaching ladies in white.

Neither, in this age of Russian satellites and Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles, should you expect to be handled with the delicacy of the 17th century, or pampered because God made you members of the better sex.

And the truth is, we have often known you to accept "dates" after 7 o'clock at night—in many cases, even later. You have too long fooled yourselves into believing in a false pride which has all the aspects of factual embarassment.

You have assumed our jobs. Your are reaping our pay. You have filled government posts and you have headed big business; you have administered huge undertakings and you have been bossed in lesser ones. In fact, with the exception of siring children, you have taken on virtually all the functions of men.

And still you expect—or wish to leave that impression, at any rate—an approach from men which you well deserved before this modern age. But ladies, we're living in a changing world, and you must accept the pattern which is yours within.

The time has come to recognize the facts. When UNC coeds are called, whether a week ahead of schedule or the night for a date, the voice on the other end of the line is often only seeking a companion—call it a "date" if you like.

To our thinking, failure of the coeds to recognize that fact—the fact that a girl can be companion to a boy just as to another of her own sex—is even more absurd than this false pride which they profess.

Ladies, you have risen to all the glory of manhood. Somewhere along the way you have failed to pay the price demanded of those who elevate themselves in life.

'Our Changing World' Is Theme For Y Meet

By MARY MOORE MASON

"Our Changing World" will be the theme of the eight annual YM-YWCA fall conference which will be held the weekend of Oct. 25-27 at Camp Moon Elon, close to Elon College.

Dr. Warren Ashby, chairman of the Department of Philosophy at Women's College, will be the speaker for the weekend.

According to Margaret Daughtridge and Richard Love, co-chairmen of the conference committee, the YM-YW study groups will also be offered at the conference, and the faculty advisors for the study groups will attend the conference.

The following faculty and administrative members are expected at the conference: Miss Ann Queen, Mrs. Jim Carse, Dr. Sheppard Jones, Jim Carse and Charlie Jones.

The purpose of the conference, according to the program, is "to provide an opportunity to view the world in the light of its ever changing social, political and economic issues and the place of students in it. The conference is also designed to act as a send off for the YM-YWCA program for the coming year and to acquaint the student with the role of the Y on campus."

Consequently, the subjects of Dr. Ashby's speeches will be the following: "The World in Revolution", "Responsibilities of the Campus Christian Association", "Obligations and Challenges" and "Concern" of the Campus."

Besides these talks there will be study groups, question and answer periods, fireside discussions and social periods.

The total cost of the conference is $6.75 This includes six meals, two nights lodging and round trip transportation. Persons taking their cars will be refunded $1 per person carried, not to exceed $4.

All people who are interested in attending have been urged to register in the Y office immediately.

Tryouts Set For "Teahouse"

Foster Fitz-Simons, associate professor of dramatic art, has announced tryouts for the second production of the Carolina Playmakers, "Teahouse of the August Moon," will be held Monday at 4 and 7:30 pm. in Memorial Hall.

The play calls for a cast of almost 40 with many good character roles, according to Fitz-Simons. Familiar to the public as a vehicle for David Wayne on Broadway and Marlon Brando in the movies, "Teahouse" is a Pulitzer-prize winning story by John Patrick.

Copies of the script of "Teahouse" are available in the Reserve Reading Room of Wilson Library, although reading the play is not a pre-requisite for the open tryouts.

Middle East Talks

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Oct. 17—(AP)—The United States today initiated urgent consultations with other nations on a Middle East U.N. inquiry with emphasis on spotlighting the role of the Soviet Union.

Syria, which claims to be in danger of momentary attack by Turkey, placed its army on the alert and considered whether to order a general mobilization.

But despite a drumfire of allegations from the Soviet Union that the United States and Turkey were planning war on Syria, there were no signs of extreme haste on the part of U.N. delegations to plunge into immediate Middle East debate.

Presbyterians Begin Study

A nine-week study group on "What We Believe," sponsored by the Presbyterian Westminster Fellowship, will begin Thursday at 9 p. m. in the Westminser Fellowship Hut behind the telephone building on Rosemary Street.

"What A Man Can Believe," by James D. Smart, will be used as a study guide in this discussion of Christian dectrine. Jim Carse is the resource leader and Bill Bason is the student leader.

By discussing their own beliefs, beliefs of leading theologians and prominent anti-Christian beliefs, the group hopes to gain a clearer insight into its own faith and be better prepared to meet the challenges of the contemporary world.

This group will concentrate on the following areas of belief: the mission of the church; God and His relationship to the world; the nature of the Bible; the significance of Christ and the Holy Spirit; the meaning of salvation and man's free will.

MacMillan Visit

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17—(AP)—President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister MacMillan announced today that they will meet in Washington next week for a conference. This, in turn, may lead to other top level allied talks.

There appeared to be no doubt that the Middle East crisis, which has recently brought blunt war warnings from both Moscow and Washington, will be the prime subject for discussion and possible policy decisions by the British and American government leaders.

The bare announcement gave no hint of the reason for the conference which caught most state department officials and the Washington diplomatic corps by surprise.

'Mme. Butterfly' Featured On WUNC Tonight

A performance of Puccini's "Mme. Butterfly" recorded by Angel Records at Milan's La Scala Theatre with Maria Menghini Callas in the title role will be broadcast at 8 o'clock tonight by the UNC Extension Division's weekly radio program, "Let's Listen to Opera", over WUNC.

Commentator Norman Cordon said that supporting Mme. Callas will be Nicolai Gedda, Lucia Danieli, Mario Borriello and the La Scala Orchestra and Chorus.

Herbert von Karajan, the famous Austrian conductor, will lead this performance of one of Puccini's most favored works.

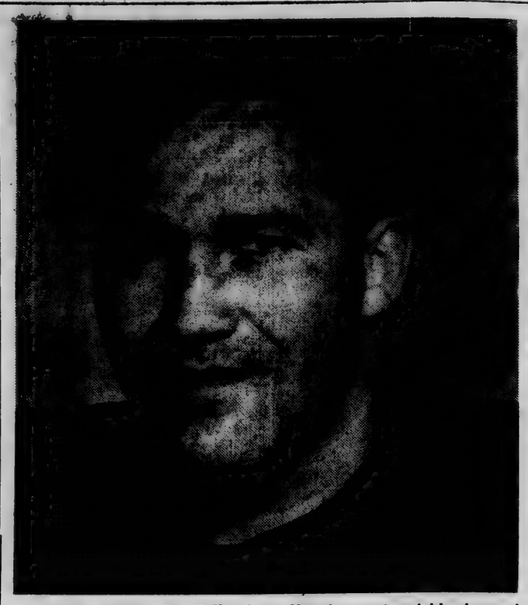
WITH 43.6 AVERAGE

Don Crocker Maintains Punting Lead In ACC

GREENSBORO (AP)—Don Coker, sophomore halfback from Carolina, for the second straight week leads Atlantic Coast Conference punters with an average just a shade under the ACC record set in 1953 by another Tarheel Dick Lackey.

Coker, who punter five times with an average of 43.4 yards in Carolina's 20-13 victory over Miami last Friday night, has punted 10 times this season for an average of 43.6 yards. Lackey's record, set on 27 punts, was 34.9.

Closest challengers to Coker are Reece Whitley of Virginia and Bill Few of Clemson, but neither is an immediate threat to the Tarheel. Whitley's average is 38.7 yards on seven punts—the minimum for contention—and Few's 38.3 yards on nine. Coker's best day so far was against Clemson, when he punted twice for an even 50 yards per kick.



In the other kicking department, extra point production, Bill Barbary of Clemson, Wray Carlton of Duke and Jim Bakhtiar of Virginia still are deadlocked with perfect records. Barbary has made good six of six, Carlton five of five, including one to beat Rice 7-6 last Saturday night, and Bakhtiar four for four. Dick Hunter of N.C. State is still ready to move in when one of the three leaders slip, now boasting eight for nine .889.

Harrier Meet Postponed By Flu Epidemic

The dreaded flu bug has caused postponement of the scheduled cross-country match between Carolina and Maryland at College Park this afternoon and it is not yet known whether the Carolina-State match Tuesday will be run.

It was learned yesterday that many of the harriers are down with the disease and hardly any of them are physically able to participate. The Maryland meet is one of the most important of the season for Carolina, as the Terps almost always give the Tar Heels their stiffest competition.

It will not be determined until later whether or not the Tar Heels will be able to make the trip to Raleigh Tuesday to meet the State Wolfpack.

MIAMI VICTIM: Stu Pell, who suffered a ruptured blood vessel against Miami last week is expected to be ready to go against the Maryland Terps at College Park tomorrow afternoon. Pell and Daley Goff are the only injured Tar Heels.

Queen's Presence Will Steal Spotlight Sat.

By GEORGE BOWEN

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Oct. 17 (AP)—Queen Elizabeth's presence will overshadow Saturday an interesting football situation in itself between Maryland and North Carolina.

It's still going to take a big shadow to blot out the figure of Coach Jim Tatum among the football conscious in the 43,000 spectators.

The garrulous and successful coach always commands attention, too, and in this case he's smack in the middle of the minds of both sides.

He headed the greatest era in Maryland football for nine years. Maryland fans wondered when he left for North Carolina last year if their high national ranking went with him. They are still wondering.

Maryland won only two games last season under Coach Tommy Mont, Tatum's assistant for five years. It lost its first three games this fall before beating downtrodden Wake Forest last week.

And tomorrow Tatum is bringing back to his old haunt a North Carolina team showing signs of the same resurgence he fashioned at Maryland.

With Queen Elizabeth reigning at his back, there's no doubt that Tatum would love to lord it over his former domain next.

Mont is hoping about half a dozen of his players who started their college careers under Tatum will have a similar feeling in reverse. "I think the old boys would like to beat Tatum," he reports.

Mont personally shies away from any comment on talk about him and Tatum. Theres' no gain saying, however, that it's a tough spot for the 34-year-old coach with all the empnasis on Saturday's game because of royalty's presence.

Experts Pick Miami

MIAMI, Fla., Oct. 17 (AP)—The experts who set the odds believe North Carolina State's four-game football winning streak will be broken tomorrow night when the Wolfpack meets Miami's Hurricanes in the Orange Bowl.

Perhaps by use of reverse logic, the oddsmakers have established Miami, a winner in only one of three games, as a six-point favorite over North Carolina State, the nation's 12th ranking team.

JOHN LACEY GIVES REPORT

Trainer Says Team Should Be Ready

By BILL KING

Barring unforseen complications, the Carolina Tar Heels should be physically ready for the Maryland Terps on Saturday.

That's the opinion of Carolina trainer John Lacey.

Lacey stated yesterday that the boys who had been suffering from the flu bug were getting better each day and opined that "if nothing happens between now and Saturday, we should be all right."

"We don't have any real serious cases," Lacey continued. "I don't believe that anybody is any sicker than anybody else. The boys might be a little weak Saturday, but I don't think it will hurt us too much. They still have two days to recover."

Aside from the players incapacitated by flu, only Stu Pell and Daley Goff are suffering physical distress and Lacey figures that both should be ready for action Saturday. Pell has a ruptured blood vessel in his arm which he suffered against Miami, but with the proper padding should be okay Saturday.

Goff missed the Miami game due to a shoulder injury suffered against Navy, but has been working with the first unit this week. Lacey feels that Goff will be able to play against the Terps.

* * *

Not since the first game of the season has Carolina been rated a favorite among the pollsters, but believe it or not. Jim Tatum's club has the nod against the Terps. Most quarters see it Carolina by a touchdown but you might get as much as 13 points on the Tar Heels.

Despite all the flu around the campus, there is still a scarcity of student tickets for the Caravan weekend. Looks like everybody is going to pocket the pink pills and hustle up to see the Queen and to heck with the flu.

This should be one of the most festive weekends ever held on a college campus. We are indeed fortunate to have the opportunity in joining Maryland in giving the Queen and Phillip a royal glance at football U.S.A.

* * *

The Carolina - Maryland game should be interesting in that both clubs are on the upgrade after a lean year in '56. Both clubs are capable of running and passing and both have fine defensive ability.

Another interesting ancedote is that Jim Tatum will be going up against the fellow whom he left to handle the football chores at Maryland, Tommy Mont. Actually, Tatum holds a 1-0 edge on Mont but since last year's Carolina win was forfeited, the two coaches will officially be going into the battle all even.

Comparing Carolina and Maryland in relationship to the other six teams in the ACC we find that the Tar Heels are sixth and Maryland seventh in total offense. Carolina is sixth in rushing offense and Maryland is last.

An indication of the two team's ability to move by air is that Maryland is second and the Tar Heels third in passing offense. In pass defense, Carolina is third and the Terps fifth.

In total defense, the Tar Heels are rated fifth and the terps sixth, and in rushing defense, Carolina is sixth and Maryland seventh.

UNC'S CHAMPS ON TV

Carolina's national champion basketball team will appear on regional live television four times this year—Dec. 7 against Clemson here, Dec. 14 against South Carolina here, and Jan. 18 against Clemson there, and Feb. 8 against Duke here. These will be afternoon games.

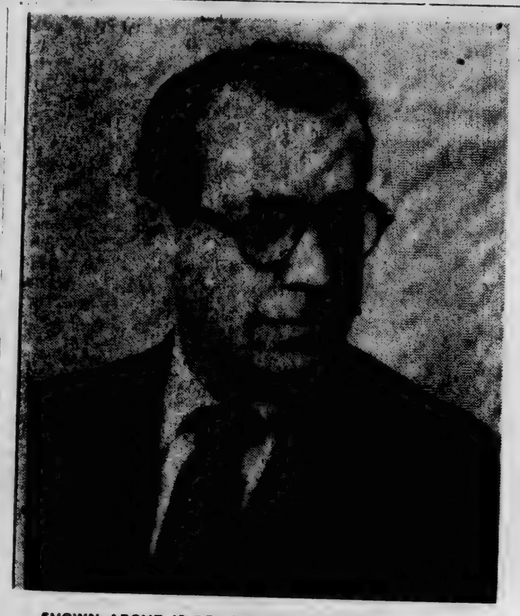
Dr. Hooper's Organ Recital Is Week Away



GMAB's music committee has scheduled an organ music recital for its second Petite Musicale of the fall series. The one-man concert by Dr. Francis Hooper, outstanding Midwestern organist, will be held next Sunday at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Among the program pieces will be three sonatas by Scarlotti, as well as Hugo's Ballet and Lambert's Fireside.

Dr. Hooper is noted for his demonstration of an organ's flexibility rather than its power, and for his sensitive feeling for effects which avoid sentimentality in romantic passages.

Dr. Hooper, a WWII veteran has gives recitals in the United States and England. In addition to his recitals, he heads the organ department of the University of Louisville.

While earning his degrees of MSM and DSM at Union Theological seminary in New York, Dr. Hooper served as organist for Sunday morning services at Carnegie Hall. He also studied at the School of English Church Music in Christlchurst, England.

SHOWN ABOVE IS DR. FRANCIS HOOPER, noted concert organist, who will bring his talent to GMAB's second Petite Musicale next Sunday evening when he present's a recital of organ music at Gerrard Hall.

Flu Subsides Over Weekend

Despite predictions of an upsurge in flu cases here Monday, student illnesses subsided over the weekend.

The University Infirmary reported only 24 patients Saturday. Dr. James Taylor, duty physician, said that number [illegible] to the infirmary yesterday than on an ordinary Saturday. Only two new patients were admitted yesterday by 3:30 p.m. out of four students who came by to see the doctors. On the other hand, 18 students were discharged yesterday.

Fred Weaver, dean of Student Affairs, said yesterday that only 31 students ill in dormitories were given fruit juice and soup Friday night; and of these 31, only 4 felt they should need any assistance yesterday from the team making rounds of the campus to give food to sick students.

Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, University physician, said that in preparation for an expected increased of flu cases Monday, the Infirmary will not relax emergency measures as established this week. These measures include extra doctors and nurses.

The upsurge in flu cases, however, is not expected in the same proportions as the increase seen this wek. The Infirmary estimated that 1,500 students were sick during the past 13 days.

Of the 1,500 cases, a minimum number of complications was reported, and no one was considered seriously ill. There were approximately 15 cases treated in Memorial Hospital because of complications, but only 4 remain in the hospital now.

A steady decrease in the number of flu cases was noted Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Infirmary admitted that the decrease in cases was partially explained by the large number of students who went home. In fact, the Infirmary allowed those patients well enough to travel to go home.

More doses of flu vaccine will be ready for distribution Monday. The Infirmary reports that of the students who have been innoculated so far, few have experienced reactions from the vaccine. None of these students was sick enough to be put to bed.

FALL MEETINGS PLANNED

Plans for fall meetings of Future Teachers of America chapters in North Carolina colleges and universities were mapped out this week at a meeting in Raleigh of the FTA College Advisory Committee of the North Carolina Education Association.

Dr. Donald G. Tarbet, associate professor in the UNC School of Education, attended the meeting, serving as chairman of the committee.

World In Brief

Textile Workers

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 —(AP)—Lloyd Klenert quit as secretary-treasurer of the United States Textile Workers (UTW) today as the union moved to avoid possible AFL-CIO ouster on corruption charges.

There were indications the parent AFL-CIO may accept the changes in UTW leadership and rely on President Anthony Valente to run the union on a reform basis. The UTW earlier had adopted AFL-CIO ethical practices codes.

New Highways

WASHINGON, Oct. 18 —(AP)—The government announced today the addition of 2,102 miles of new routes to the national interstate highways system.

The new routes will provide a more direct linkage of the Northern Central states to the South Atlantic seaboard and provide major new routes in the far west.

The designation is important to the states, because the Federal Highway Aid Act provides that the federal government pays 90 per cent of the cost of such roads.

Eisenhower Visit

LONDON, Oct. 18 —(AP)—The Daily Express said today that Queen Elizabeth II has invited President Eisenhower to come to London next year and implied that the President has accepted.

The newspaper said an announcement is expected during the Queen's stay in Washington.

One London event of 1958 will be the dedication of the new American Memorial Chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral, built to honor American servicemen who served in Britain during World War II.

Melvin West Missing

The adventurer, an experienced sailor, was overdue several hours, and sould not have radioed for help because he had only receiving equipment a board, no transmitter.

Summit Conference

LONDON, Oct. 19 (AP)-Moscow suggested today that Britain and the United States call Russia into an East-West summit conference aimed at restoring calm along the troubled border between Turkey and Syria.

Moscow radiotimed its suggestion to coincide with a call by British Communist Party Secretary John Gollan for summit talks "to stop war breaking out" in the Middle East.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 19 (AP)—The U. N. General Assembly, it was said today, may [illegible] next week for quick disposal of Syrian-Soviet charges that Turkey plans to attack Syria with U. S. help.

Meanwhile the idea of sending a commission to investigate the situation seemed to have won wide acceptance. Various delegations consulted on the terms of a resolution to set up the commission.

A usually well informed diplomat said the president of the 82-nation assembly had in mind to call morning, afternoon and night meetings Tuesday and Wednesday if necessary to reach a decision by Thursday.

Yugoslavia

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (AP)—Secretary of State Dulles is reported to be making a careful reappraisal of United States support fir Yugoslavia.

The question is whether that Communist country has kept enough independence of Russia to justify continuing American aid.

The United States and its British and French allies may be approaching the brink of another Cold War defeat at the hands of smart and aggressive Soviet leadership on the Yugoslav issue. Officials here are not prepared to concede a setback now but they are uneasy about the future.

Terps Pull Upset On Tar Heels In 21-7 Victory Before Royalty

Huge Crowd Is Honored By Royalty

By DAVIS YOUNG

Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip honored a cheering crowd of over 43,000 with their presence at the University of Maryland—University of North Carolina game yesterday in College Park, Maryland.

Festivities started well in advance of her majesty's arrival at 2 p.m. An hour and a half before game time there were already thousands milling through the stands in anticipation of the day's featured event.

The huge throng hailed from as far west as Illinois and from all parts of the east and sotuheast. It was obvious to all that they had not come to view the game alone, but rather to catch at least a glimpse of the most publicized personality in the world.

As the Tar Heel band came on the field shortly before the Queen's arrival, there were hundreds of detectives and law enforcement agents lining the field in a precautionary measure. Every possible care was taken to make the Queen's entrance and stay safe and enjoyable.

At 1:30 chauffered cars started arriving on the field and bringing many of the nation's dignitaries to the Queen's box on the fifty yard line of the Carolina side. First to arrive were the board of regents of the University of Maryland, various deans from Maryland and the President of the Maryland student body.

Shortly afterwards, Chancellor William Aycock and President William Friday of Carolina along with their families were escorted on the field. The ambassadors of the commonwealth nations were introduced along with other embassy men of lesser importance.

Governor Luther Hodges and Governor Theodore McKeldin along with their respective families were driven on to the field with Hodges receiving a tremendous ovation from the Carolina fans. He later brought a roar from the crowd as he rose from his seat next to the Queen to lead a fast course of "Dixie."

The Queen's entrance on the neld along with the members of her party was a tremendous thrill for the crowd. She was attired in a red suit with matching hat and was every bit as stunning as expected. Phillip came dressed in a conservative blue suit and darker blue hat. The crowd cheered wildly for several minutes as the royal pair circled the field in the presidents car.

Maryland Stars In Second Half With Vital Win

By BILL KING
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — The Maryland Tarrapins unleased an amazing second half offensive attack after spotting Carolina a 7-0 lead to completely stun Jim Tatum's warriors, 21-7 before a full house of 34,000 which included Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip in Byrd Stadium yesterday.

It was probably the greatest reversal of form since Jane Russell turned her back on the outlaw as the Tar Heels dominated action in the first half and seemed well on their way to winning a fourth straight football game.

But such was not the case, and a caravan of over 1,000 Carolina students sat shivering in 54 degrees weather as the Terps broke lose for three tallies and threw up an almost impregnable defense in the final two quarters.

It was a sad finale to an otherwise wonderful weekend for the Carolina partisians who made this trip to give the Queen and Phillip a royal athletic welcome to the United States. But nothing can be taken away from the inspired Terps, who last week beat Wake Forest 27-0.

The count at that point was 7-7. The Terps had the ball on their own 19, when suddenly Kershner took a handoff, busted off left tackle and galloped toward the right sidelines 81 yards for the score.

This seemed to give the Terps all the incentive needed as they bounced right back the next time they got possession of the ball for the third and final score.

The Carolina attack started off just as it had in the last three weeks — the Tar Heels scoring late in the first period.

The drive started on the Maryland 36 and consumated only eight plays with Daley Goff doing the honors. The Tar Heels needed a break to get the TD, however, and [illegible] kicked from the Carolina 42 on fourth down. Maryland quarterback John Fritsch was playing shallow on the kick and called for a fair catch.

Just as Fritsch got the ball, safety man Howie Dare bumped into his teammate and jarred the ball lose. Fred Swearingen recovered for Carolina.

The Tar Heel's second unit promptly took over and marched for the score. John Haywood and Emil DeCantis moved Carolina to the 24 and a first down. Goff then went to the 18 and Haywood went up the middle to the 13 and another first down.

DeCantis got two to the 11, and after a Goff pass had fallen incomplete, Curt Hathaway pitched out to Goff who skirted left end for the touchdown. Phil Blazer was true with the point after and Carolina had a 7-0 advantage.

The Tatummen continued to move and had several deep thrust into Terp territory during the rest of the half and it seemed only a matter of time before the Tar Heels spurted out of reach of Tommy Mont's crew.

The Tar Heels left at halftime leading in practically every department and the Carolina students sat back to enjoy the halftime. The final statistics give Maryland the edge in all the vital departments, an indication of the viciousness of the Maryland comeback.

THE STATISTICS

	Md.	UNC
First Downs	13	10
Yards Rushing	240	145
Pass Attempt	17	12
Pass Complete	5	2
Yards Passing	40	20
Passes Inter.	1	1
Punts	6	9
Punts Ave.	38	39
Fumbles lost	2	1
Yards Penal.	35	50

Maryland tied the score with only 2:10 left in the third quarter. The Terp defense had kept the Tar Heels back into their own territory for the entire quarter. On fourth down, the Tar Heels were on their own 37. Goff went back to kick but the center was low and he chose to run, getting only a yard.

The Terps took over and went over for the score eleven plays later. Quarterback Bob Ruseylvan sneaked it over from the one. The big play was a 15-yard run by sophomore halfback Gene Verardi.

Y's Forum On Human Rights Begins Today

Edward P. Morgan and William L. McGovern, spokesmen for civil liberties, will begin a three-day series of talks here today in connection with a YW-YMCA sponsored forum on human rights.

The highlight of the three-day talks will come tomorrow night when Morgan and McGovern discuss "Human Rights: Their Challenge to America" in Carroll Hall at 8 o'clock.

McGovern, Washington, D. C., attorney, will speak this morning at the Community Church and tonight at 6 o'clock before the Canterbury Club, Episicopal student group. McGovern's law firm has represented defendants in many civil liberties cases recently given Congressional hearings.

Morgan, well-known ABC radio-television commentator, will address a supper meeting of the Wesley Foundation, Methodist student group, tonight.

While on campus, both men will visit and speak at several class meetings Monday and Tuesday mornings. In addition, McGovern will lead discussing groups Monday and Tuesday afternoons at 3:30 in the Assembly Room of the Library on "The Relationship of the Government Loyalty Program to Constitutional Rights and National Security."

McGovern will be the guest at a public luncheon in Lenoir Hall today at 12.30 p.m.

The Political Science Fraternity will hold a luncheon for Morgan tomorrow.

Whitfield, Adams Are Named To Head Group

Pat Adams and Whit Whitfield were named Wednesday night to head the 20-student delegation to the 21-year-old State Student Legislature in Raleigh, Nov. 7, 8, and 9.

In addition to Adams and Whitfield who will act as chairman and vice-chairman, other officers selected include. Miss Connie Bernstein secretary; Brandon Kincaid, treasurer, and Dave Reid and Tom Long, Senators.

Other delegates chosen at the organizational meeting were: Sonny Evans, John Brooks, Marion Harris, Miss Alice Eller, Larry McElroy, Jim Holmes, Charlie Deane, Don Furtado, Jim Tolbert, Sam Poole, Bob Carter, Church Flack, Quincy Ayscue and Joel Fleishman.

To insure that the UNC delegation remains the largest from any of the participating Carolina colleges, 21 primary and secondary alternates were chosen to fill out the group's roster.

This legislature, the only one in the United States, meets each year to let representatives from each college present and vote on bills of state and national importance. An award, won by UNC last year, is given for the best bill introduced.

Highlight of the 1957 session, which will have full radio-TV coverage, is to be an address by Gov. Luther Hodges.

Delegates from UNC are selected only after a close screening which includes tests on current events and parliamentary procedure, followed by a personal interview before a selection board.

The next meeting of delegates and alternates will be held Wednesday at 9 p.m. in the Roland Parker lounge to discuss bills to be presented.

Queen Not Enthusiastic Over Football Game

COLLEGE PARK MD., Oct 19 (AP)-Her August Britannic Majesty, delighted and a bit baffled by tens of thousands of people acting like crazy, took in an American football game today.

Hunched under mink coat and blanket, Queen Elizabeth and 43,000 other spectators spent the afternoon watching Maryland defeat North Carolina 21-7 in Maryland's horseshoe stadium.

She seemed to enjoy the game—at spots. But she appeared to be far more impressed by cheer leaders; majorettes, card stunts—and the antics of a couple of governors—than the efforts of 22 muscular chaps in scarlet or white jerseys to shove each other around a hundred yards of sod.

Her majesty, always something of a diplomat, was about the most neutral person in the place. She was downright stolid, in fact, when North Carolina went over for a touchdown just before the end of the first quarter.

She did rise half way out of her chair when Maryland intercepted a pass and threatened at the close of the half. But that probably was so she could see around Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, who was on his feet waving his arms and rooting like a madman.

Chicken and ham sandwiches were offered the Queen between halves—no hot dogs. But she passed up coffee from a paper cup.

She didn't look overly excited when Maryland tied the game up in the third quarter. What brought a grin to her face was the way McKeldin hopped up, doffed his hat and insisted on a handshake from Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina.

Then she was at least half way up again when Maryland hit pay dirt and went ahead 14-7.

McKeldin and a former football player, President Wilson H. Elkins of Maryland, kept her majesty posted on what was going on down the field—and by what was ment by such things as penalty, pass and "hold that line." when they didn't, she asked questions.

A chill, clouded day turned to sparkling sunshine about half time. The Queen and her husband, Prince Philip, hauled out dark glasses, although they were on the shady side of the field.

Both of them got an obvious boot out of the rigamarole and ritual between halves—the performing bands, and cards across the way spelling out the royal monogram E2R, in gold and black.

But they were too low down in the stands to see the North Carolina band form a moving rocking chair and animated spinning wheel.

Elizabeth couldn't watch it all, either. Instead, she was gathering in loot—gifts for herself and children of such items as a steuben glass bowl, a small equestrian china figure, some Indian arrows and arrow heads, toy footballs with built in music boxes.

In return, the royal couple autographed a football or two.

As soon as the game was over, happy and victorious players hoisted Coach Tommy Mont to their shoulders and carried him across the field. He was ushered to the royal box where Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip shook hands with him and offered their congratulations.

Ostrich Eyes & Bludgeons And Classes Speed Forth

The University News Bureau has released another glowing report concerning the 'flu epidemic here:

"The number of students ill in dormitory rooms declined from about 500 on Thursday night to less than 100 on Friday night."

For once we agree with the News Bureau on the flu situation.

There was a sharp decline from Thursday night's victims to Friday night's victims—in dormitories. Everybody went home or to Maryland as a result of a class-free football Saturday—and a good number went home to get medical care which they could not have received from inadequate infirmary facilities here.

We are gratified that University Physician Hedgpeth has finally admitted—through implication—that there is incidence of Asiatic 'Flu on campus. He has never admitted it officially.

But Hedgpth has said he anticipates an increase in the number of 'flu' cases on Monday.

This is the most foresight exhibited yet on the part of infirmary officials. They have anticipated what will happen on Monday—all of two days in advance.

'Flu vaccine was administered to students at State College and at Woman's College long before Dr. Hedgpeth rationed out dosages to hospital authorities, athletic teams—and finally exceedingly small portions to lowly students in general. If the vaccine had been available—under any extenuating circumstances—at this semester's birth, then most of the current victims could have been spared the ignominy of coughs, sneezes and assorted sufferings.

Yet the University information agency, the News Bureau, continues to bring forth various and sundry tributes to the infirmary's handling of the epidemic, eulogies to the administration's foresight and laudetory words for overall handling of the slant-eyed visitor from Asia.

We detest, and abhor this type of University "glossing over." Infirmary and University officials have painted a rosy picture to prevent having to admit that medical facilities here are simply inadequate to handle a wave of victims.

Classes were not suspended and the class load was not lightened we contend, simply because the University's officialdom hated to admit an inadequacy—failure to handle a flood of sick students.

Students have been denied proper medical care, contrary to glowing University press releases.

But classes have gone on. Student health has suffered. But classes have gone on.

Perhaps University officials can take pride in their bludgeoning forth of the academic program . . even though many students may have recovered much more quickly had they been allowed a short rest from academic toil.

The bludgeon and the University's ostrich-eye point-of-view.

Perhaps when ostrich-eyed University officials lift their heads for a comprehensive view of the epidemic, it will have gone.

No thanks to the University and the University Infirmary.

The bludgeon and ostrich-eyes.

The Herald Toots Loudly From Narrow-Minded Horn

The Durham Morning Herald has asserted that:

"Any college which adds passing an entrance examination to its requirements for admission will find it an important step in raising its own standards. Such a requirement makes for greater selectivity in the choice of students and the selection of abler students."

Obviously the Durham Herald's editorial writer knew little about entrance examinations and cared less.

The writer did not take into consideration students from rural regions—or from other areas—who were not provided the excellent educational background offered students in Durham or Raleigh or Greensboro or other places.

We call it narrow-minded bigotry. And we refer the prejudicial editorial writer to a statement made by Dynamic William Brantley Aycock, newly installed University chancellor, in his installation address:

"Some propose freezing enrollment at or near the present level. Those who do so forget that our leaders, over the years, have taken our people—rich and poor alike—to the top of the mountain and promised that every child shall have an equal opportunity through education to develop his leadership qualities."

It must be assumed that the Herald's editorial writer knows more about education than a man who has unselfishly devoted his life to educational enrichment.

And the Herald's writer has failed to hit the crux of the educational problem:

Not that too few or too many students are failing to enter halls of higher learning, but that too many are falling by the wayside during their four-year higher educational tenure.

Extra and additional facilities should be added to aid these students—in lieu of denial of higher education to capable students who had the educational background which will enable them to compete with other students on pre-college examinations—discriminatory entrance exams.

Narrow-minded, comprehension failure from the Herald's editorial writer.

. . . Every child shall have an ejual opportunity through education . . ."

With the fall elections just around the corner, many freshmen grooming themselves for political positions. To those noephytes who are a bit wary of the anticipated ordeal which will confront them, let us offer some advice. Someone once said, "Those who can, do; those who can't, teach." That is why it is so easy to give advice. Well:

Rule 1. Be nice to everyone you meet. If names are difficult to remember, then clear your throat as you speak, or cover your mouth with your hand. The name always comes out Glumpft, but you are spoken of as the most amicable gent on campus.

* * *

Rule 2. Always carry extra cigarettes and matches. Given in good faith upon request, or passed out when you smoke often bring votes in return.

Rule 3. Have a good platform. This is of the utmost necessity, for regardless of the office the constituents want to know what you will do if elected. Some suggested platform planks are:

(a) Pave McCorkle Place from Franklin to Columbia so that freshmen could keep cars.

(b) Install conveyor belts in lieu of the brick walks.

(c) Put escalators and air conditioners in the classroom buildings.

(d) Free date tickets to all football and basketball games.

(e) Free trains to Kansas City next spring.

* * *

Rule 4. Run unopposed if at all possible. It is much easier to win this way, and it doesn't hurt the pocketbook.

Rule 4½. If you cannot run unopposed, then while campaigning stay in each room an hour or so and introduce yourself as your opponent. You will win by a landslide.

Rule 5. Deface your own posters. The voters seeing the mutilations will think that your opponent or his friends have done this and have compassion on you. (another surefire)

Rule 6. If you do not have the heart to deface your own posters, then go to every place where you have a poster and inscribe thereupon: "great guy" or "Cobb's choice, etc." The residents, thinking that some of their neighbors know you, will vote for you rather than someone else they don't know. This does not work as well as the former suggestion however. Great discretion should be exercised in using this one.

Rule 7. "Stand up to be seen; speak up to be heard; Shut up to be appreciated."

* * *

Rule 8. Always be sincere whether you mean it or not.

If you follow these few simple steps you need never worry about your election—you won't live that long.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Bloody Marys, Lil' Willies And Visiting Sightseers . . .

Gail Godwin

It is a shame that for many UNC students, the rich colors of fall are seen thorugh the blurred vision that accompanies flu.

Passing Davie Hall yesterday, I spotted one lone professor focusing his camera, obviously loaded with color film, on the sights around him. There was, believe it or not, a tree that was completely gold. It stood out from those around it which were only a little less fortunately endowed. The camera clicked and the professor looked genuinely pleased with himself as he crunched through the leaves down toward the Arboretum.

This is the visiting season. Grammar school sightseers can be seen at all hours of the day lining up in front of the Planetarium or trooping through Lenoir Hall in orderly little rows, lunch money clutched in hot, sticky hands.

Let us not allow the flu, an overloaded schedule, or anything else to keep us from looking around and seeing what photographers and third-graders see—the magic of fall at Chapel Hill.

* * *

It looks as if our gruesome little jokes that have recently been so popular on campus have made national news. TIME has a writeup this week on the "Mother, why can't I go out and play?" story. The national magazine calls these little jokes "Bloody Marys" and gives samples.

Here are a couple I had never heard:

"Mother, can I have a new dress for Easter?

"Certainly not, George . . ."

"Mommy, why do I keep walking in circles?"

"Shut up, or I'll nail your other foot to the floor."

TIME goes on to say that actually this kind of joke goes back a generation ago to the "Little Willie" verses:

"Little Willie with a shout
Gouged the baby's eyeballs out
Jumped on them to make them pop
Momma said, "Now Willie, stop."

You just can't get away from tradition, can you?

Some have hit at the dictatorial way in which Tom Long and John Brooks, roomates, have handled the selection of delegates for the State Student Legislature in Raleigh.

Those who disagree contend that Long and Brooks wanted to pack the delegation with their supporters so they would be free to run for major legislative offices. Brooks has designs on the speakership, they say.

Reader Retorts Femaledom's Husband Hunt

EDITOR:

Hail to The Daily Tar Heel for perpetrating what may be the most significant expose in recent years. Not only has the secret been let out that coeds are interested only in getting husbands, but now we know what the necessary ingredients are to facilitate being included in the divine slate of prospective husbands.

I conjecture, would I be speaking for the majority of the Carolina male populace if I said, who gives a damn what Carolina femaledom is looking for in a husband? It is indisputable that coeds are here on a two year "glory trail." The kind of drivel printed in The Daily Tar Heel bears this out.

I'm sure, that we all would be in a far more equitable situation if coeds worried more about whether they have the necessary qualifications. If they took a good look at themselves, and did something about it, the battle of the sexes would be tempered considerably now and for the rest of our lives.

Hats off to Misses Whitehurst and Gluyos. They are obviously gals with enough sense to weather the storm, once having departed from "Caradise."

I realize it's all tongue-in-cheek, girls, so is this. We all love and adore you. We are aware of the necessity of you, but the abominable fact is that you realize it more than we do. The scales of justice are not balanced.

Good luck, husband huntresses, the fishbowl is overflowing.

CAMUS CONFUSION:

The Nobel Prize And 'Dear Abby'

Frank Crowther

The Swedish Academy played a dirty trick on me, or, better, I just got caught with my typewriter down.

For several days previously, those of us who are Frenchmen, either by birth or adoption, had been speculating on the possibility of Albert Camus' winning the Nobel Prize for literature this year. On Wednesday, several leading news services began some of there own wagering, Camus being their odds on choice.

Thursday morning I set out with the idea of compiling a long, interpretive essay relating to Camus' life, work and thought. If I could just get this completed, I thought, and into print before the announcement. After working for almost five solid hours on the peice, I went across the street to Harry's for a cup of tea and a glance at the afternoon paper. On page eight was the announcement: "French Writer, Only 43, Wins Nobel Prize."

I was both exasperated and exhilarated. When I got back to my room all was confusion. There, strewn over my desk, the floor, my bed and on top of my trunk, was a day's work. There were most of his novels & essays, books reviews, a French biography nad interpretation of his work, newspaper articles and various personal scratchings of my own. The more I thought about the announcement, however, the more excited I became. Now, I imagined, more of his work would be translated, more criticisms and interpretations would appear and, most significantly, more people would read and become aware of his labors.

In my rising delirium, I brushed everything aside and sat down to write him a telegram of congratulations. To me this was one of the greatest things to happen since I found out that little girls were not all sugar 'n spice 'n everything nice. After mailing the letter, I went to get a few drinks and toasted the great day: "Vive la France! . . . vive Camus!" In all the toasting, I got toasted. The last thing I remembered was being rolled over and basted about 11 p.m.

On returning from class the other day, I saw the little snip-tailed squirrel scurrying across the campus. Legend has it that he didn't quite make it to the nearest tree in the endless game of tag between the canine citizenery and the squirrels. But it struck me that we don't hear any of the barking dogs this year.

I mentioned this to Paul Smith, the genial patron of the Intimate Bookshop of Franklin Street fame, and he said that there must have been some kind of summer campaign. "That's a heck of a note," he went on, "knowing that we can't even go to the dogs . . . they've left us!"

While in the Intimate, one of the boys from the Chapel Hill High School came in trying to sell magazine subscriptions (to the proprietor of a bookshop!). Well, the practical joker in Mr. Smith showed itself. He purchased, for only two dollars, a five year subscription to the American Poultry Journal and sent it to one of his friends whom he knew to be least interested in poultry problems.

"Boy, this is great," he said. "A five year practical joke! If you want to have some more fun, send The Breeder's Journal to somebody." At least we are pleased to note that the art of practical jokery is yet alive.

For those of you who seem to have an abundance of problems, may I suggest that one of the North Carolina papers, The Raleigh Times, has the solution to your woes. They have a young lady in their employment who will be glad to answer your letters and give you personal advice. An example follows:

"DEAR ABBY: I am in a terrible jam. I have to marry a fellow right away. We are both 18. His mother says that she will give him permission to marry me if we promise not to have any kids until he gets his army service over with. My mother knows why I have to get married so soon but his mother doesn't. I hate to make a promise I know I can't keep, but she won't give her consent otherwise. Please tell me what to do.

(signed) IN A JAM

(ABBY'S answer) DEAR IN A JAM: It would be better to tell the truth — but, whether you tell her or not, pretty soon HIS mother is going to know as much as YOUR mother. Good luck!

(signed) ABBY

If you have a problem, be sure to write to Abigail Van Buren, care of The Raleigh Times. I am certain that she will provide you with an answer which is just as enlightening as the one above.

Reader Assaults Columnists' View

Editor:

Why don't you stop prostituting a part of your publication by giving over the last column of your editorial page to extremely untalented and uninteresting individuals who use that space to elucidate their capacity for alcohol, among other rather boring subjects?

I am sure that an accurate poll of your readers would indicate the majority of us are no more interested in how much Messrs. Crowther, Walker, et. al. drink, than we are interested in how often they dream of blondes, eat or defecate.

Instead of printing these incoherent ramblings, I suggest that you allot this space to some member of your staff who might, possibly, have something worthwhile to say (e.g., Mr. Curtis Gans).

With the exception of the above mentioned space, I think you are to be commended for the high quality of your paper and the wisdom of your editorial policy. It is truly encouraging to see such a conservative policy in a paper printed by persons too often thought of as a "bunch of radical kids."

Med School Dept. Adds Professor, Microscope

The Department of Bacteriology of the UNC School of Medicine has recently acquired a new professor of biophysics and one of the most powerful electron microscopes in the world.

The new faculty member is Dr. David Gordon Sharp, who is one of the original electron microscopists. This is a comparatively new science in the field of biology.

Dr. Sharp will tell you that there are 56 other instruments like it in existence throughout the world and that there is no finer electron microscope made than the one that he is now working with at the UNC Schoo of Medicine.

Dr. Sharp's colleagues are quick to point out that his contribution to science has been in the development of the electron microscope as a tool for the study of viruses. He is one of the authors of a leading textbook in the field of bacteriology and is considered one of the leaders in the field of quantitative virology.

Dr. Sharp has made many major advances in measuring what may be seen by microscope or in "quantitating viruses." All fields of science are interested in such measurements and in microscopic anatomy of various substances.

In the field of bacteriology, Dr. Sharp is well known for his work on the nature of influenza particles, bacteriophage particles, encephalitis viruses and viruses that produce tumors in chickens.

The new microsoope that has been installed at the School of Medicine cost approximately $30,000 and makes it possible for scientists to see particles as small as one ten millionth of an inch.

Dr. Sharp will begin a five year project of biophysical studies of macromolecules and viruses. The project will be financed by a $140,000 grant from the U. S. Public Health Service. The new electron microscope was purchased with funds from this grant.

This powerful microscope has 100 to 200 times the "seeing power" of the best optical microscopes. This means, in the study of viruses, that the viruses can not only be seen but their internal structure can be studied as well.

The new microscope and related instruments, such as the ultracentrifuge that Dr. Sharp is now in the process of building, will be used for the study of viruses and macromolecules of which much of the human body is made.

Dr. Sharp is a native of Annadale, N. J. He graduated from Rutgers University in 1932 with a degree in physics. For the next four years he was a junior physicist in the Westinghouse Research Laboratories.

In 1936 he joined the staff of Duke University as an engineer consultant. Dr. Sharp remained at Duke until this year, when he joined the faculty of the UNC School of Medicine.

You Can Dream In The Old Book Corner

Your famous old bookshop puts most emphasis on North Carolina rarities and Civil War titles. However, when one fishes in North Carolina attics, all kinds of delightful oddments turn up in the net.

For Instance:

Looking over recent additions, I see a nice worn copy of Thomas a Kempis' IMITATION OF CHRIST, published in New Bedford, Mass., way back in 1805, that is going to make an interesting spot on somebody's shelf. Along side of it is Okakura-Kakuzo's BOOK OF TEA (New York, 1923), and just beyond that, a little volume called PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMPANY OF AMATEUR BREWERS, privately printed in 1932, and once the property of a famous Senator.

People are beginning to collect early books on aviation lately, and you'll find a good old title on lighter-than-air landmarks, as well as a whole set of Aeronautical Reports.

But shucks! The place is full of tid-bits you could build a story on. Come on over and see for yourself.

Board number three in last Monday night's duplicate game produced this interesting deal. Six couples attempted the slam—four for a small slam in spades, one for a grand slam in spades, and one for a no trump grand slam.

The Hand:

NORTH
S KQ10983
H Q94
D AK6
C 9

WEST
S 74
H J6
C QJ5
D Q87532

EAST
S J
H KJ2
D J104
C 1076432

SOUTH
S A652
H A10853
D 9
C AK8

THE BIDDING: E-W vulnerable

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1S	PASS	2C(?)	PASS
2H	PASS	4S	PASS
4NT	PASS	5D	PASS
5NT	PASS	6H	PASS
6S	PASS	7S	(ALL PASS)

With proper play, exactly six should be made. But as played only one of the small slams in spades was actually set. All others made.

What happened in all but one case was that either E-W opened a heart for declarer or West erred while North was running his long spades and sluffed a small heart, thus making it possible for South to run the queen from North's hand, covering East's king, and picking up the vital jack in West's hand.

The declarer in the grand spade slam, however, could not gamble on such a pick-up. He knew that any grand slam should be beat, but he set out to capitalize off a possible defense error by running a pseudo-squeeze. After taking West's opening lead of the 5 of diamonds, South played two rounds of trumps, then the King of diamonds, then ruffed his last small diamond. With five tricks in hand, South made the startling play of leading to and taking the ace of hearts. Then he returned to the board and ran four spades, discarding every heart he had. There was no real squeeze, for all East had to do was hang on to the king of hearts and West to his critically important three clubs; but both players, in view of South's heart bid, bared down to two clubs and one heart apiece. South at trick eleven led the nine of clubs, overtook with the ace, cleared clubs with the king, and made the vital thirteenth trick with the eight of clubs—now the biggest card this side of the Mississippi.

Some final comments should be made about the bidding. This writer can't say whether South managed his first two bids properly or not. South chose the conservative sequence rather than the more aggressive reverse sequence. Maybe better, he should have chosen an approach bid of one club so that when North bids either major (if such happens), he can make an accurate rebid of a jump raise.

North had his bidding problems, too His hand was too big for a mere jump raise but too weak for a jump shift. So North lied with a 2-club bid, backed in with the quite strong raise to game at his next bid. South with values yet concealed decided a slam try should be made, accounted for all aces, found one missing king, then settled for the small slam.

This threw North into a quandry—but on the basis of his concealed club singleton (you don't show voids and single—tons at Blackwood) and his terrific spades and his assurance that all aces were accounted for (Blackwood initiator may not bid 5NT unless bidding reveals that partnership holds all aces) North contracted for the treacherous grand slam Both players had overbid their values; but there they were, and South made it!

AEC Renews Grant At UNC For Atom Research

The Atomic Energy Commission has announced the renewal of a $10,920 grant for research into the atom structure in metals, being directed at UNC by Dr. Lawrence Slifkin.

Dr. Slifkin, an associate professor in the Department of Physics, said that the UNC researchers are studying the mobility of atoms in metal crystals.

Although the external shape of a piece of metal may remain the same, he explained, the atoms may change places. By replacing some of the atoms with radioactive tracers, it is possible to follow the atoms' diffusion.

Practical application of this "pure research," Dr. Slifkin explained, might result in metals which resist corrosion, and new materials to be used in atomic reactors.

Assisting Slifkin on the project, carried out in Phillips Hall laboratories, are George P. Williams Jr. of Richmond, Va., and William C. Mallard of Hillsboro, Georgia.

Another research project in solid state physics is also being directed by Dr. Slifkin, under a grant from the U. S. Army's Office of Ordnance Research. It involves the study of silver chloride crystals, such as the effects of optical and plastic processes on electrical conductivity.

Eventual applications of these experiments, he explained, might lead to better photographic emulsions and better detectors of cosmic rays.

Rooke Winner Of Koch Grant

Thomas Leon Rooke of Roanoke Rapids, promising young playwright at UNC in Chapel Hill, was awarded the Koch Memorial Scholarship here Saturday morning at the annual fall conference of the Carolina Dramatic Association.

The $100 award is given periodically for creativity in the field of playwrighting. Presentation was made at the C. D. A. business session held Saturday morning in the Playmakers Theatre on the UNC campus.

Rooke, who came to UNC in 1955 after having attended Mars Hill College, has taken three courses in playwrighting and is now working on a full length play in the honors course. Last year his religious drama "The Thief and the Hunchback" was produced by the Carolina Playmakers. He has also written two plays which were produced by the Baptist Church of Chapel Hill: "Voices of Tears' and "Joseph and Mary", the former one also being performed in Raleigh at the Baptist Convention.

Dr. David Monroe Among Conferees

Dr. David G. Monroe, professor of political science at UNC is attending the Conference on Teaching by Television in Colleges and Universities which is being held at Pennsylvania State University Oct. 20-23.

Dr. Monroe will discuss the uses of television for instructional purposes; his topic will be "Educational Television at the University of North Carolina: An Appraisal."

At an evening program in which each of the participants will do a live presentation of some aspect of television teaching found most helpful in their instruction through the medium of TV, Dr. Monroe will demonstrate the uses of illustrative materials in describing judicial decisions.

Maryland Game On TV

WUNC-TV, Chauuel 4, will show films tonight taken at the UNC-Maryland game in College Park, Md.

Films of football games played by the UNC varsity team in Kenan Stadium this fall have been televised by WUNC-TV and shown on Sunday nights at 8 p.m. The film of the UNC-Maryland game, however, is the film taken of the action only for the UNC coaches.

WUNC-TV will program coaches' films of games played away from Chapel Hill again when they are available. The kinescope of complete coverage of games played in Kenan Stadium will be resumed Nov. 3 with the UNC-Tennessee game.

BUTTON-DOWN WINSOCK!!

College students love shirts with button-down collars, but we've never known exactly why. So Van Heusen's research department asked around and got the following answers.

L.B. Senior at Mass. Institute of Entomology. "The buttons keep things from crawling under your collar. Or, if things do crawl under your collar, the buttons prevent them from crawling out again."

D.D.E. Freshman at Horatio Alger Tech. "You get more buttons so I figure the shirt is more valuable. Is it?"

B.P. Junior at the Pate School of Tonsorial Arts. "They're cooler! Wisps of air blow through the little hole in the button and keep my clavicle at a refreshing temperature.

P.S. Senior of Makemoney's Correspondence School. "I'm a neurotic. With Button-down shirts I can wear one side buttoned and the other side unbuttoned, thereby giving the effect of wearing two types of shirt at one time. Oh help me, help me!"

Z.J. Graduate student at the T.S. Swinburne School of Beautiful Experiences. "Buttons remind me of pearls. Pearls remind me of oysters. Oysters remind me of indigestion. Indigestion reminds me of my doctor. My doctor reminds me of his nurse. She's gorgeous. Gorgeous! So the more buttons the better."

Yes, there's agreement that button-down collars are the thing. And there's further agreement that Van Heusen is the king of Button-down stylists. Just take a look at Van Heusen Oxfordians next time you're in the market for shirts. You'll see immediately why they're famous. $5.00.

Business Executives To Begin Classes Here This Week

By PETE IVEY

Forty students will arrive late for school in the University this week. Not one of them will ask a coed for a date. They don't go in for fraternities. They are not familiar with the latest yells for Jim Tatum's team. It's doubtful if they even write indignant letters to the Editor of the Daily Tar Heel. What's more, not a one of them will write home for money.

The average age of these students is 40.

They are top executives of business and industry. They are enrolled for the Executive Program, the advanced management course for top-level business leaders offered each year by the UNC School of Business Administration.

These students are not green freshmen. They are presidents of banks, vice presidents of textile manufacturing companies, general managers of furniture companies.

Their average salary is above $20,000 a year.

CHEERS

Although they don't know all the yells for the Carolina football team, the executives could well invent some appropriate yells of their own — showing academic aspiration and free enterprise initiative.

For example:

WHOOP
Whoop the stoop!
Whoop the stoop!
We are the boys
From the Executive Group!
We're 40 plus, But
We've got the steam
To study the books for
The team, team team!

LIMITED ENROLLMENT

The above is all in fun, and is just one way of saying that the Executive Program of the School of Business Administration has really taken hold among top business leaders in North Carolina.

The applications for admission to the program far exceed the capacity of the program; that is, many have to be refused. There simply isn't room for all who would like to enroll.

WILLARD GRAHAM

Dr. Willard Graham who came to Chapel Hill five years ago to head the Executive Program honed to limit the enrollment, but it has grown each year. This time there are 40, the greatest number coming from the textile industry. After that the industries being represented in the largest number is the furniture business, and the finance business. Finance includes banking, insurance and finance companies. There are also construction companies, motor lines, food packing companies, building supply companies, the telephone industry, accounting firms, and newspapers.

WEEKENDS

Unlike, the advanced management course at Harvard and a few other universities, the Executive Program at UNC does not keep its executives continuously in residence several months.

After one full week in October and a final full week in April, the students come to Chapel Hill every other weekend.

This enables them to stay at their jobs from Monday to Thursday or Friday of each week, and then head for Chapel Hill and school on alternate weekends.

The program is gaining recognition among management groups all over the country, in industry as well as in the academic world.

TOPICS

The regular faculty of the School of Business will teach the classes in (1) Government and Business, (2) Principles and Organization (3) Business Economics, (4) Dynamics of Administration, (5) Personnel Administration, (6) Administrative Practices, (7) Managerial Accounting, (8) Marketing Management, (9) Production Management, (10) Report Writing, (11) Labor Relations, (12) Financial Control, (13 The Banking Structure and Monetary Policy, (14) Economic Fluctuations, (15) Business Policy (16) The Great Ideas.

IDEAS

What are "The Great Ideas?"

These are ideas of great sweep and power that all men, as well as businessmen, are better off for knowing.

Two speakers in this connection are the Rev. Bernard H. Boyd, head of the University's Department of Religion and the James A. Gray Professor of Biblical Literature, and Robert Maynard Hutchins, President of the Fund for the Republic.

CAROLINA INN

The executives live at the Carolina Inn when they are in Chapel Hill and attend classes in Carroli Hall. Most of the social events take place at the Inn. The wives of the executives come down to Chapel Hill on several of the weekends—just to add to the collegiate atmosphere.

Rademacher's Just Businessman; Hoping For Another Opportunity...

COLUMBUS, Ga. —(AP)— Pete Rademacher is busy being a business executive these days—but not too busy to keep in trim if the right fight comes along.

Rademacher is the Olympic boxing champion who tried to make the long jump from the amateurs to the world's heavyweight title in one fight. He failed, going down before the flailing fists of champion Floyd Patterson. But he wasn't stopped until he'd put on a much better show than the "experts" had expected.

Fighting is strictly a sideline with Pete as it always has been. But he admits if the opponent and the price—and the publicity value—are right, he is interested.

"I didn't go into the Patterson fight just to become a professional boxer," Pete said today. "I wanted to get some recognition for Youth Unlimited, Inc., and hoped to make some money to get the firm going."

Rademacher and his backers didn't make any money from the Patterson fight. Their share of the gate didn't equal the $250,000 guarantee they put up for the champ, so they wound up in the red. But the fight did get some publicity for Youth Unlimited.

Rademacher explains that Youth Unlimited is a corporation designed to help instill character building traits in young people as well as make money for the stockholders. It is primarily a promotional organization, he said, but in some cases it may branch out into manufacturing.

Pete is vice president of Youth Unlimited, and has been busy with paper work since the Patterson fight.

There is nothing definite as far as his fight future is concerned.

"I've been thinking seriously about going on a tour and boxing some exhibitions," Rademacher said. "That'd probably take me out of the country. And it would help me keep in shape in case the right fight comes along."

Pete says if he does fight again he'll be shooting for the top, but that doesn't mean he'll settle for anything except another title shot.

"But it would have to be an awfully good fight," he added.

Rademacher said he turned down a $20,000 offer from the International Boxing Club for a television fight shortly after his loss to Patterson in August and recently turned down another similar offer.

"I felt I had nothing to gain," he explained.

But if Pete's right fight comes along, he'll be ready. He is doing a lot of road and gym work to "try to build up my endurance, which I feel was lacking in the Patterson fight. It would take very little training for me to get in shape if I decide to fight again."

Tar Heels Psychologically Were At A Disadvantage

By NEIL BASS

Hope turned into despair for those listening to yesterday's encounter between the Tar Heels and Maryland's Terrapins as Ted Kershner sped away for a fourth-quarter 80-plus yards touchdown jaunt.

Students and interested townspeople and faculty were also stunned when the final score—with Carolina on the short end 21-7—became known officially.

There was an air of disbelief. And there must have been an air of sweet revenge among supporters of Terrapins—who call Carolina their arch-rivals.

Thus the Tar Heels have proved seemingly one point:

It's a psychological disadvantage to be favored.

Tatum's men have lost both encounters they were favored to win—against N. C. State and the Terps.

A Bright Spot

This lovely UNC majorette provided a bright spot in an otherwise bleak day for Tatum-coached Tar Heels yesterday. Former Tatum-coached Maryland's Ted Kershner broke loose for an 81 yard fourth-period touchdown that broke the Tar Heel's back.

Four Games 'Flued Out Yesterday

Four college football games today (Saturday) resulted from cancellation of other games because of influenza. They were arranged when flu-stricken teams were unable to muster enough manpower to meet their engagements.

Bradley and Colorado State paired up to fill the date left vacant when Omaha and Drake cancelled out. The Waynesburg-Edinboro (Pa.) State game replaces Waynesburg-St. Vincent and Edinboro-California State. Wheaton College of Illinois secured Kentucky State as an opponent in place of flu-stricken Illinois Wesleyan.

Western Michigan got Youngstown (Ohio) to be its homecoming foe when Washington University of St. Louis, was forced to cancel its trip to Kalamazoo, Mich., because of the flu.

Other cancelled games were: Washington and Jefferson-Thiel, Slippery Rock-Western Reserve, Haverford-Johns Hopkins, Lycoming-Juniata, Bowdoin-Williams, Brandeis - Springfield, Colby - Trinity, Rensselaer PoPly-Union, Hobart-Alfred and Montana Mines-Northern Montana.

Packers Plastered

GREEN BAY, Wis., Oct. 17 —(AP)—The Green Bay Packers received a heavy blow today when it was learned that first string end Gary Knafelc will be out for the remainder of the National Football League season with a cartilage injury in his knee.

Knafelc, who with Billy Howton forms one of the best offensive end units in the NFL, suffered what was described as a cartilage lock in his knee during practice yesterday.

Coach Lisle Blackbourn said Knafelc apparently slipped and twisted his knee while practicing pass patterns. He spent the night in Green Bay Hospital.

How Others Fared:

Resume; Games Across Nation

Ithaca, N. Y., Oct. 19 —(AP)— Yale struck for three touchdowns in a second half, come-from-behind effort to defeat Cornell 18-7 before 20,000 homecoming fans today.

The victory was the Bulldogs' third in four games. Cornell has a 1-3 record.

Cornell broke the ice after a scoreless first half on a 72-yard drive following the second half kickoff.

The Ells came right back to match the touchdown in seven plays and 61-yards. However, quarterback Dick Winterbauer's try for the point failed and Cornell led 7-6.

After the Big Red failed to get a drive in motion, Yale took over at midfield and drove to a lead they never relinquished.

The Blues pushed over another six pointer in the last period as Cornell passes threatened, but failed.

DURHAM, N. C., Oct. 19 —(AP)—Fifth-ranked Duke, warming up for next week's game with unbeaten North Carolina State, exploded for 34 points in the first half and rolled to a 34-7 victory over winless Wake Forest in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game today.

A crowd of 17,600, including 48 bands, saw the powerful Dukes unleased a savage first half offense that produced 27 points in the second period. Coach Bill Murray used his first-stringers only about eight minutes during the first half.

It was Duke's fifth consecutive win and Wake Forest's fourth loss.

Duke's scoring parade began late in the first period when substitute quarterback Pryor Milner pluged over from the 3 to end a 35-yard march. Halfback Wray Carlton converted from placement.

Duke's relentless offense broke the floodgates in the second period with four touchdowns. On the fourth play of the period Carlton passed from the Wake Forest 5 to Halfback George Dutrow in the end zone for a touchdown. Carlton also kicked the extra point. A few minutes later, quarterback Bob Brodhead shot an aerial from the Wake Forest 3 to end Dave Herm for another touchdown. Halfback Dave Lee added another touchdown when he plunged over from the 1.

The Blue Devils final score came shortly before the half on a 38-yard run by sophomore halfback Bunny Bell.

Wake Forest scored in the last 35 seconds when halfback Neill MacLean went over from the Duke 7. He kicked the extra point.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 19 —(AP)—Undermanned, underdog Colgate, able to penetrate Princeton territory only once for three periods, turned breaks into a pair of fourth quarter touchdowns that upset the previously unbeaten Tigers 12-10 today.

It was Princeton's errors that kept Colgate in the game and in the end it was a fantastically weak kick, only a burlesque of a punt which travelled five yards, that set up the winning score.

Ernie Dailey, a second string fullback, scooted for the clincher, battling for seven yards and the touchdown with less than three minutes to play.

The other touchdown by the Red Raiders, a 21-point underdog in this one, was set up by a pass interception by Walt Datts who ended a 54-yard drive on a 17-yard pass play with quarterback Ray Harding.

NEWTON, Mass., Oct. 19 —(AP)—Boston College's one-two punch of Don Allard and Alan Miller provided the spark today as the Eagles downed rugged Villanova 12-9 on rain-soaked alumni field.

Allard, on target in the air despite a driving rainstorm, passed for one tally and Miller rolled up most of the yardage in a 67-yard third period drive for the deciding touchdown.

The hefty Boston College line, which held the Wildcats to four yards net rushing, burst through to thwart three Villanova scoring threats.

Behind 7-6 in the third quarter, Boston College bounced back for the winning touchdown after being stopped on the Villanova 2 yard line at the close of the first half

WORCESTER, Mass, Oct 19 —(AP)—Dartmouth's never-say-die Indians scored two fourth period touchdowns today for a 14-7 victory over Holy Cross to maintain an unbeaten football season.

The triumph was the fourth this season for the Big Green which now has an unbeaten string of seven games.

The Holy Cross touchdown was the first violation of the Dartmouth goal line in its last six games, dating back to its second last game of the 1956 season.

That score, by the crusader quarterback, Tom Greene, was registered on a one-yard sneak early in the second quarter. Greene also converted.

His indian counterpart, Dave Bradley, scored in similar fashion at 5:40 of the finale, to even the score.

Bradley also engineered the winning touchdown on the first play after his return to action late in the game.

With the ball on the Crusader 16 Bradley tossed to end Dave Moss who caught it on the goal line and bulled through the sole defender.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Act. 19 —(AP)

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 19 —(AP)—Army shook Pete Dawkins loose twice in the final quarter today and scored a smashing 29-13 victory over Pitt's Panthers in a game that had been expected to settle the unofficial Eastern football championship.

The 29 points scored by Army today was the biggest total ever made against a Pitt team in the three years Johnny Michelosen has coached the Panthers It surpassed the 26 points made by Oklahoma in handing Pitt its first defeat this season.

HOW YOU GOT OUT FROM UNDER—Back in the old days you could hardly drive 100 miles before you had to "get out and get under". You sweated and fumed to get the balky thing perking again.

Today you stop your car because you want to. To watch the sunset or eat a picnic lunch. Faster, safer, more dependable cars are giving Americans a new way of life. More leisure and more places to enjoy it. It's what we call Better-ness—the American conviction that "good enough" isn't.

We know about Better-ness in cars because we help put it there. Timken® tapered roller bearings practically eliminate friction in wheels, pinion, differential and steering gear. And because they're tapered, Timken bearings take all the loads—up and down and sideways.

Timken bearings play a vital role wherever wheels and shafts turn. A role that has made us the world's largest manufacturer of tapered roller bearings.

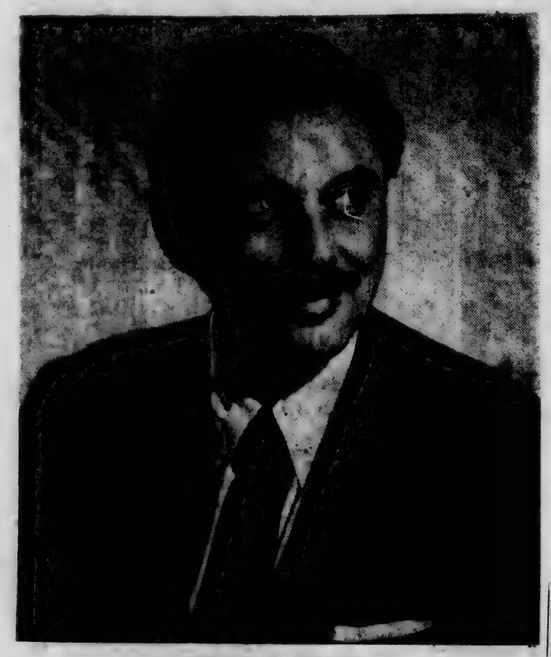
Morgan, McGovern Speak In Keynote Forum Last Nite

Noted American Broadcasting Company commentator Edward P. Morgan and former assistant to the Attorney General William McGovern spoke last night in Carroll Hall in the first of two forums of the three-day YW-YMCA forum on the topic: "Human Rights: A Challenge to American". The next forum will take place tonight at 8 p. m. in the Faculty Lounges of the Morehead Planetarium, with the same speakers as a panel.

Morgan charged that the U. S. security system was in direct violation of individual rights,. and had shown itself as being incapable of handling the job of protecting the nation's security.



Justice Holmes' ideal of testing ideas in the "marketplace" of people was the central theme of McGovern's address. He said that this was perhaps the best way of finding truth.

Morgan cited the case of an Air Force Captain who tried to sell out to the Russians, and who had previously been cleared by a loyalty board, as clear indication of the failure of the loyalty board to perform its function. He said also that the loyalty boards have in no case found a subversive in government but were responsbile for the firing of thousands of government employes.

McGovern felt that the right of an individual to speak his views to the public, no matter of what coloration those views were, was perhaps of prime importance in a democratic society. He further maintained that the group in the "marketplace" was the sole criterion of right and could conceivably put America under Communism, if the Communist doctrine won majority acceptance.

The ability of the network to put forward programs, such as Edward R. Murrow's "See It Now", was thought by Morgan to be a primary example for network programming rather than pay-as-you-see plan. He showed how the public in Great Britain, after putting radio and T. V. on a commerical basis, chosen to watch programs similar to those produced on American radio and T. V .today.

McGovern felt that the dictation of the networks to the people, as to what they should see, and to the small station as to allotment of network time was unfair to both individual and small station.

World In Brief

MEL WEST FOUND

MOREHEAD CITY, N. C., Oct. 21 (AP)—The Coast Guard announced today that Melvin West, 28-year-old disabled Korean War veteran missing on a 580-mile trip to to Bermuda in a 17-foot outboard motorboat had been picked up alive by a merchant ship about 200 miles from here.

MIDDLE EAST

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 21 (AP)—Western delegates at the U. N. conferred privately today on the best way to counter Syria's Soviet-backed charge that Turkey is about to start war in the Middle East. Efforts by Saudi Arabia's King Saud to mediate the crisis persisted.

Syria denied any intent to take part in mediation talks at the moment. Diplomats' at the U. N. believed Syria wanted a full airing of its charges before the 82-nation assembly before considering any other course.

But U. N. diplomats showed no signs of readliness to plunge into immediate debate, despite the Syrian-Soviet contentions that an attack upon Syria is imminent.

SYRIA

DAMASCUS, Syria, Oct. 21 (AP)—Syrian officials showed signs of relief today as their complaint against Turkey headed for U. N. debate. But officialdom maintained an alert and sharpened the country's "popular resistance organization" movement.

Officals denied again that Syria has agreed to a mediation of the Turkish-Syrian border tension through King Saud of Saudi Aribia. They suggested Saud may be using his good offfices with Turkey alone in an effort to ease tensions.

SPUTNIK

Meanwhile this country's scientists and amateur observers now are getting evening glimpses of the Russian rocket which hurled Sputnik aloft some 18 days ago.

Offical sources at the missile test center, Cape Canaveral, Fla., said a planned test firing of the Vanguard rocket's first stage engine was called off today because

Queen Tours Empire City

NEW YORK, Oct. 21 (AP Queen Elizabeth II, with a smile and dainty wave of hand, today all but recaptured New York for the British Empire. But in the end it was the petite monarch who fell captive to the grandeur of this one-time English Colonial Capital.

"Fabulous," was the Queen's word for Manhatten Island.

She toured it whirlwind fashion from the Battery, to City Hall, to the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, to the United Nations, to the Empire State Building—along streets blizzardy white with ticker tape, and swarming dark and masses of entusiastic spectators.

At points, it was all the police could do to restrain the jubilance.

Police estimated that 1 1-4 million persons saw the queen in her first visit to the city.

It was a day when British flags whipped to the same autumn breeze that caressed old glory, when blimps aloft and cannon below saluted the blue-eyed quuen of the British Empire. It was a thundering, roaring, crackling welcome on land, on sea and in the air.

"Isn't it exciting," the queen remarked to Gov. Averell Harriman at one point. She was bubbly as a little girl on her first visit to Manhattan as she took it all in with a big grain and a sightseer's roving eye.

Atop the Empie State Building, 102 stories in the sky, the queen exulted, despite a haze that limited the view:

"The view was tremendous. This is the most wonderful view I've ever seen."

She thanked an official city luncheon for h "Wonderful welcome."

Flu Epidemic Subsides At Carolina

Fall Election Preparations Continue

Phys. Ed., All Murals Called Off

All physical education classes and intramural activities have been called off again this week in the wake of an ebbing flu epidemic which was still on a decline Monday.

Infirmary officials said doctors' calls to dorms, fraternity and sorority houses across campus have been suspended as the sweeping epidemic lossed its grip sere.

Meanwhile, however, they reported receipt of an additional 1,000 doses of Asian flu vaccine and listed schedule for its distribution last night and tonight at the infirmary.

The vaccine—bringing to 1,500 the number of doses received by the infirmary here — will be available between 7:30 and 9:30 o'clock tonight in the "out patient" department of the hospital.

Students were reminded that a new official policy on class attendance, which went into effect October 7, will continue until further notice. Under the new rulings, instructors automatically excuse students from classes upon declarations from the students that their absences were due to illnesses.

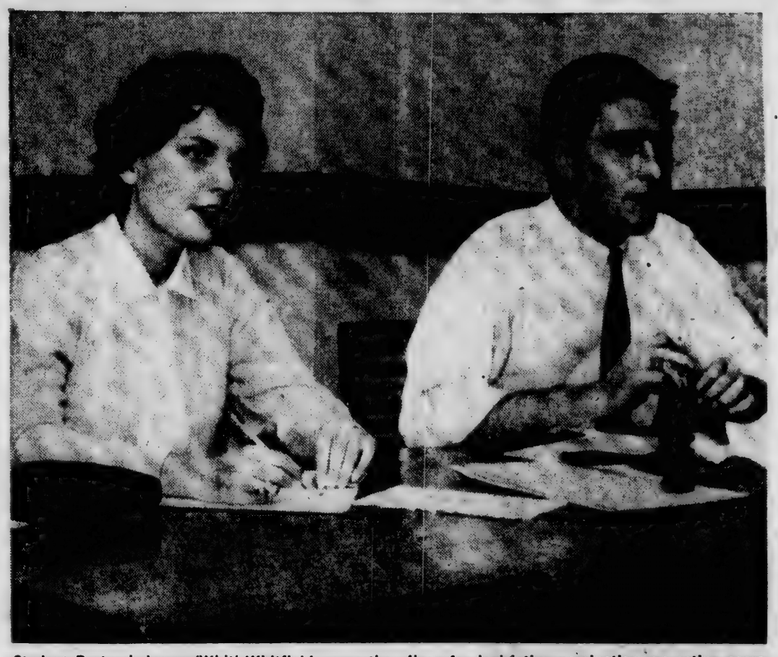
This policy was announced last Saturday by Dr. James Godfrey, Dean of the Faculty.

By 2:45 p .m. yesterday, a total of 115 students were seen at the Infirmary. Of this number 23 were admitted as patients, bringing the total number in the Infirmary to 52.

Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, University physician, said the number seen and admitted to the infirmary yesterday was less than expected. Hedgpeth said the patients seemed less ill than the students admitted to the infirmary last week.

Both the team of doctors visiting the dormitories, fraternities and sororities and a team carrying food to sick students will discontinue these services unless a recurrence of the epidemic is noted.

Dormitory advisors have been asked to contact the Dean of Students Affairs office in any students ill in the dorms want food.



The team of doctors, which made a scouting survey of the situation in the dorms Monday, found the extent of illness reduced to the point that they recommended discontinuing the visits.

COURT DEALS BLOW

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a severe blow to Virginia's declared policy of "massive resistance" to any racial integration in its public schools.

It did so by refusing to review a decision holding unconstitutional the state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act, cornerstone of the "massive resistance" framework.

The high court thereby let stand the decision of Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk. Hoffman's ruling was affirmed by the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Woman's Honor Court Lists Spring Action

A total of 19 cases were tried by the Women's Honor Council during the 1957 spring semester. Social Rule violations accounted for 13 of the cases with six Honor Code offenses completing the total.

Sentences ranging from a few nights' campus to indefinite suspension were imposed by the Council. The major cases tried were: two for plagiarism and one for delibrate lying to the Honor Council.

The six Honor Code cases were:
